DO NOT MARK BOOKS

So many books are coming back to the library marked and otherwise mistreated that it is felt necessary to warn users against such practices. Most of the damage is probably done thoughtlessly. You are asked to think and not to mark. FAILURE TO OBSERVE THE SPIRIT OF THIS REQUEST WILL RESULT IN THE DISCONTINUANCE OF STATE LIBRARY SERVICE. These volumes are state property: use them but do not abuse them.

TO THE EXHIBITOR:

THE function of an eye is to see—of an ear to hear—of a tongue to speak.

The function of a motion picture poster is to sell tickets.

The more tickets it sells, the better it functions. The RITCHEY poster functions perfectly.

Does your eye function? See then the difference in size between an audience in the theatre that is using RITCHEY posters, and the one which is not. Does your ear function? Listen then to the praises bestowed upon the RITCHEY poster by people who know. Does your tongue function? Then use it to demand RITCHEY posters!

Your prosperity depends upon your ticket sales, and these in turn depend upon your posters. The maximum amount of ticket sales depend essentially upon the use of RITCHEY posters!

So, if you will pardon a last, and a very personal question, does your brain function?

If it does see to it that you get RITCHEY posters.

"The Sea Wolf"

"I SAW Maud straining and struggling, crushed in the embrace of Wolf Larsen's arms. I could see the vain beat and flutter of her as she strove to escape from him. I sprang forward—I struck him in the face—"

And in that moment—one of the greatest moments in all fiction—a man as proud as Lucifer was overthrown and a coward became a man.

THIS is only one of the big moments in Jack London's mighty story—a story that crashes against the emotions like the raging surf.

It's all in the picture—all the primitive conflict, the bared heart of life, the rush and clamor of the waves. A marvellous and spectacular production of a story that has thrilled millions.

It Will Haunt You—

Its impelling fascination, its breathless
action—its rich color, its stirring love story,
its glorious atmosphere, its baffling mystery—all will haunt you and stay with you and all others who see this splendid big special production that VITAGRAPH has made from one of

JAMES OLIVER

greatest stories of the Northwest—

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone"

The most fascinating, unique photoplay story brought to the screen in a generation.
You will follow its snowshoe trail to that trackless white waste north of fifty-three.
Against that savage background of mountain and gorge, snow and ice, unfettered by society's conventions, you shall see romance, mystery and adventure unfolded in one of the most haunting, startling, electrifying mysterious screen
stories ever told.
You will meet
David Raine—
whose soul has been sundered by a faithless woman, seeking a living tomb in the Arctic.
You will meet Marge, brave and beautiful, slender as a reed, wild and palpitating.
You will hear the call of the North—feel it in fact, as this story of breathless mystery and red-blooded romance unfolds itself
before you.
And a clarion call it is. The magic wand of the motion picture has turned the warm and glowing pages of a masterly story into a superb, big special photoplay production—
made of it a pulsing, living drama, whose sheer charm and realism carries one away to that vast white country "up there" with all its grim glory and grandeur.

Directed by DAVID SMITH

Sakewawin!

In Indian that means:
"I belong to you."
That's what Marge
O'Doone,
the little mountain
pixie of the Arctic, called David Raine.
A pretty name for himself he had told the girl, but he didn't know what it meant.

But one day he found out.
And from then on it was the fight of his life—for Marge—the little nymph of the North, whose picture had been the lure that beckoned him onward through the freezing cold and the heartbreaking hardships of the vast frozen
Northland.

And what a fight he made of it!
From that point onward, comes the breathless moments, the surprise and suspense in:

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone"

Another of those big, brawny, breathing story dramas by
JAMES OLIVER
CURWOOD made into a splendid special production
by VITAGRAPH.

It is the brain-child of a born story teller touched by the magic wand of the motion picture and made into a pulsing, living, human thing.

It speaks in that language of the universe—
romance and adventure.
It breathes mystery and thrills, surprises and suspense and it strides along against a background of awesome beauty—the gods' proving ground for the mettle of man—the Arctic.

It's a story that will stick to the ribs—if you know what that means.

Associated Sub-Franchises

SOME of the biggest exhibitors in the country have devoted nearly a year to the development of our franchise plan. They have given their wisdom and experience, guided by sound business principles, to its completion.

We have proceeded with deliberation and caution, because we wanted to be right—wanted to be sure that we might offer the exhibitor who seeks both good pictures and protection of his interests a fair and equitable plan, a plan whereby he might write an insurance policy on the safety of his investment.

Offers Direct Ownership

Our plan is the direct result of the causes that have forced the observing exhibitors of the country to bestir themselves into action against interests that seek to destroy the stability of our prosperity.

Our plan offers direct ownership in an organization owned solely by leading exhibitors who are one hundred per cent. independent. You are invited to share both benefits and profits by acquiring your own franchise.

Every feature and every principle of the Associated franchise arrangement has undergone critical consideration and reconsideration. It is virtually a finished product, ready for the inspection of the men who have it within their power to make Associated Exhibitors, Inc., the most powerful influence for good in the industry.

Associated Exhibitors, Inc., stands for any plan or organization that is designed to protect exhibitors' interests.

Ready in Thirty Days

Within thirty days we will be ready to submit to you the details of our sub-franchises. Under our sub-franchise plan every holder is a part owner in a truly co-operative proposition—his rights are equitable and proportionately the same, whether he is the owner of a big theatre in a big city or the owner of a small theatre in a small town.

Until we are prepared to demonstrate the worth of our plans for you, we desire to go on record as endorsing the splendid and worthy ambitions of those prominent in the Independent Exhibitors' of America convention activities at Chicago.

"MISS HOBBS"

Mr. Crisp pronounces this the best of his recent productions. Jerome K. Jerome furnished a play that permits of lavish and attention-compelling investiture; Mr. Harris' scenario was written with the Crisp style of direction in mind. Perhaps that is why we boldly announced that contracts for the entire Wanda Hawley series would not be offered until exhibitors had sampled the first production. We knew what the studio was doing and our "fairest contract ever," one-picture-only assertions were not a gamble in any sense.

A horse on you!
LOUIS FANCHER

IT'S a horse on you if you forget the story of the Trojans. Their position seemed so strong that nothing could shake it. One Tuesday morning, however, a lot of hostile Greeks packed a company of soldiers into a hollow wooden image, slipped it past their gates and next day owned the town.

What happened to Troy can happen to Schenectady, too. You're stabling just such Trojan horses in your theatres at this very instant. Generously promoting popularity for stars and productions which you'll lose as soon as overreaching interests feel that it is more expedient to take your crowds than to take your contracts.

Not content with their own game—they're planning to open theatres to compete with you in your field. As fast as their double earnings permit, additional houses will be opened up until the whole United States is covered and you will have to turn over your business on their terms or close down.

I'm protecting my own future when I advise you to protect yours. If the exhibitor isn't a successful free agent I'm a failure.

CONTINUOUS LAUGHS

Great. You can't help but like 'The Love Expert.' Get this one if you can. It's good all the way through. The laughs keep coming and every one registers. And some are mighty big—big enough to keep them laughing after it's all over. The original bits regarding the blushing and the heart throbbing will surely get them. John Emerson and Anita Loos have certainly given Constance Talmadge a good one this time, if you can judge from the attitude with which it was received at the Strand theatre. The laughs were continuous and it wasn't difficult to observe that everyone was mighty well pleased. Miss Talmadge with her ingenuous personality and winsome mannerisms will win any audience."—Wids.

IRREPRESSIBLE CHARM

"Light comedy plot of purely whimsical order with many amusing complications, developing speed and winding up in satisfactory climax. Strictly humorous. Interest aroused by merry, farcical situations. Constance Talmadge impersonates the irrepressible Babs with her customary dash and mirthful charm."—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

BOUND TO PLEASE ALL

" 'The Love Expert' is a sure winner, bound to please wherever shown. It is distinctively a screen comedy by people who know how to write one; it is a John Emerson-Anita Loos production. And it is written in harmony with the natural qualifications of the star. It holds to the mood with a flawless continuity and bright subtitles that fit. It is a genuine photoplay instead of a half-breed of some other and doubtful extraction."—Moving Picture World.

RICH CLASSIC IN COMEDY

"Vital and vibrant personality of the star. Soars with true farcical pretentions and finishes in a blaze of glory. Highly conducive of laughter. You are sure of attracting patronage if you do nothing else in exploiting it but mention that it is an Emerson-Loos production starring Constance Talmadge. This star is indeed fortunate with her vehicles. So play up the fact that this picture is another rich classic in comedy production."—Motion Picture News.

ALTHOUGH the stars and pictures now being announced have been definitely decided upon, Robertson-Cole makes the positive assertion that none of these productions shall be released unless they pass the test which classes them as "Specials."

Robertson-Cole is in a position to make this declaration because its contracts with producers provide for the rejection of pictures until they are of the highest standard of excellence.

The box-office value of these attractions should be self-evident to every progressive and discriminating exhibitor.

What Robertson-Cole stands for in the industry was made quite clear in Mr. Cole's speech at the recent convention of our branch managers, when he said: "The day I feel that Robertson-Cole cannot remain in the film business and do it honorably and straight,—we leave the field. I do not care for it if our name is going to be jeopardized." This statement sums up "the honesty of purpose" that guides our every business transaction.

The Chicago Convention

THAT exhibitor organization was advanced in measurable degree at Chicago April 26 and 27 seems to be the general opinion of those picture showmen who attended the sessions called by Willard Patterson. While the results attained may not have been those hoped for by the promoters of the gathering there is no question that the outcome reflected the views of the majority of the men who had come from practically all corners of the country, reflected the views they had reached after free and untrammeled discussion of the issues involved.

Estimates have been made that there were from two to three thousand theatres represented by the men who met in Chicago and elected Frank Rembusch chairman of a novel convention. We believe this perhaps is overstating the number, but in any event the total was large enough to be impressive, especially in view of the fact that the notice was short.

"On to Cleveland" was the prevailing sentiment of the exhibitors as the discussions drew to a close. Every indication points to an attendance larger than that of any previous national assembly of motion picture men. Better still the bitterness that developed at the second of the two days' Chicago gathering in all probability so cleared the air that there is every likelihood of a harmonious convention, one in which there will be opportunity for the creation of a great single national organization and for real constructive work.

Success will come in just the degree that personal feelings and old antagonisms are submerged. Why not sink them?

Does a Film Grow Old?

DOES a film grow old? Rather does there not come a period when so much time has elapsed since its release that to a large proportion of the picture-going public it ranks practically as a new production? These questions suggest others. What proportion of those who follow pictures sees a subject of average quality? If there were issued in 1919 productions to the number of 800 —speaking approximately—did 10 per cent. of the picture-going public see 500 of these, or as many as ten subjects a week? Did 10 per cent. of the same public see 200 of the total, or four subjects a week? For the sake of argument let us concede that such is the case. This means that 90 per cent. of picture followers missed 600 features issued in 1919, or three out of four of the total.

ANY exhibitor will substantiate the statement that patronage of pictures is a habit. It is a habit easily acquired and sometimes easily broken. In other words, the clientele of a given theatre changes with the moods and circumstances of the individuals comprising it. Every house manager of a theatre depending upon its own neighborhood for its patrons sees new faces each season, which is another way of saying that a certain and not negligible percentage of the picture public experiences a change of heart from year to year.

Taking the foregoing into consideration as another factor in the problem we have 90 per cent. of the screen's clientele who fail to see 75 per cent. of the pictures released in a given year. What proportion of the remaining 10 per cent. continue as picturegoers in two or three years from that time? Let us assume one-half.

The answer to the larger question seems to be that the old picture is new to practically 95 per cent. of its possible public.

A WOMAN is as old as she looks and a film is as old as the costumes of its characters indicate. We are referring to female characters especially and to films of today. A film of quality that portrays a period remote from the present should not grow old. If in its costuming it is three years behind the prevailing modes it is in the eyes of feminine beholders anathema; it is an outlaw. There is substantiation for this in the experiences of those producers who have reissued productions. In the cases of comedies of the Chaplin variety "age cannot wither." With dramas it has been different, except in the instances of those coming outside the category noted.

One way of reducing overhead for the producer and the exhibitor is reviving old successes, exerting every effort to bring them up to date in the matter of title decoration and recutting—and selling them to the public openly and above board, clearly setting forth the fact that they are reissues. Bearing in mind that these pictures have not been seen by the vast majority of the screen following public they should, if properly exploited, provide a material and added source of amusement.

Producing Pictures in India

A STORY out of the usual in significance and importance is that which this week tells of the formation by the Famous Players-Lasky of a producing company for the making of pictures in India. Three million dollars is a considerable sum of money, but it is not so large when one considers the vastness of the population the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Company, Ltd., is undertaking to supply at first-hand with home-made productions. Added to the four hundred millions of India are the four hundred millions of China, only a small proportion of which at the present time are accessible to a motion picture theatre, but a great majority of which in time should be included within the clientele of the distributor.

Critics with knowledge of Old World customs frequently have criticised the technique of pictures purporting to portray the Oriental in his home surroundings. With productions made "on the ground," under the advice of the best informed natives, the basis of these complaints should be removed and undoubtedly they will be.

The making of American pictures in India is one more move in the battle of the nations for world supremacy in the film realm—and an important move.

Luna-Lite Company Joins Miss Dolly Spurr in Contest Against Marion Blue Law

DAMAGES in the sum of $25 were assessed by a jury of six men in city court at Marion, Ind., last week, against the Mutual Theatre Company, a corporation operating the Lyric, Indiana and Royal-Grand theatres, for violating the city ordinance prohibiting the operation of theatres on Sundays. The city, in its affidavit against the company, asked for damages in the sum of $300, but the minimum amount permitted under the ordinance was assessed by the jury.

The suit was filed as a result of the action of the company, of which Miss Dolly Spurr is the head, in operating the Lyric Theatre on Sunday, April 11. The case has been appealed to the Grant county circuit court.

Pleas of not guilty to the same charge were entered in the same city by William Connors and Forrest Malott, of the Marion Theatre Company, which operates the Luna-Lite Theatre. Damages in the sum of $300 is asked of each of the defendants. No time has been set for the hearing of these two cases.

The opening of the Luna-Lite Theatre marked the first attempt of the Marion Theatre Company to participate in the Sunday opening fight which has been in progress in Marion for several years. A picturization of Richard Harding Davis' "Soldiers of Fortune" was shown, together with a reel of popular comedy.

Both the Indiana and the Luna-Lite theatres were opened on Sunday, April 25, playing to capacity crowds at each performance. No arrests were made but it is expected that additional charges will be filed against the corporations and also against the exhibitors.

Financier Says China Is a Big Field for Pioneer Producers

THAT new millions await the film producer who will exploit is the opinion of Judge Peter Hing, financial magnate of the Celestial Republic.

"Capital galore awaits the first producer to come to our country," said Mr. Hing while inspecting the Famous Players-Lasky studio at Hollywood. "Our people have confidence in our native stories and scenery. It is an absolutely untouched field. Our people will back to the limit the first producer to establish a worthwhile studio in China."

While at the Lasky plant Judge Hing saw China "as she is done" in an American studio. Ethel Clayton and company were taking Shanghai street for "All In a Night," her latest picture for Paramount Artcraft.

Senate Approves Minting of New Roosevelt 2-Cent Coin

WITH the passage on May 3 by the United States Senate of the bill introduced in January by Senator McLean, of Connecticut, authorizing the minting of a 2-cent piece, the first really important step has been taken in providing a coin with which the public can pay war taxes of various sorts.

Ever since the enactment of the first war revenue bill there has been a steady and increasing dmand for a coin between the penny and the nickel. The war revenue law now in force requires the minting of millions of pennies a year; pennies are needed for the taxes on soft drinks and ice cream, admissions and various other sales taxes. Because of the increased taxes on tobacco products, the prices of cigars, cigarettes, etc., have been increased in odd amounts. In addition, increasing costs have necessitated higher prices for newspapers and street car fares.

The measure just adopted by the Senate authorizes the director of the mint to have coined a 2-cent piece, composed of copper, tin and zinc in the same proportions as the 1-cent piece but of such size as to be readily distinguished from a penny. On the obverse will appear the medallion of Theodore Roosevelt, whose memory the coin is designed to honor.

Exhibitors Get Electric Light Concession.

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City has entered into an arrangement with one of the largest electric light manufacturers whereby members of the organization will be alowed 31 per cent discount on all purchases of lamps. Some of the members have been getting a slight discount heretofore, but nothing in comparison with the figure obtained for the entire membership. The light company declared it easily could afford to make the reduction in view of its saving in selling overhead.

The Chamber also is considering the possibility of purchasing its coal direct from the mines. The present consumption of members is between ten and fifteen thousand tons annually. A committee has been appointed for the purpose of securing exact figures.

Fire Destroys Cohans' Rialto.

George Cohan's Rialto Theatre, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., was destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning, May 4. The loss will reach $150,000 to $250,000. The Rialto was a first run house, seating 800.

Massachusetts Legislators Suggest Three Eliminations in Approving Censor Bill

(By wire to Moving Picture World.)

Boston, Mass., May 5.

The bill providing for the state censorship was reported on favorably by the ways and means committee of the House of Representatives on May 5. Four out of the eleven members of the committee voted against the bill. Two members, Representative Fitzgerald, of Boston, and Mitchell, of Springfield, formally dissented from the committee's action.

The bill provides that all films before being exhibited in the state must be censored and approved by a censor board in the Department of Public Safety.

The recommendation was made that three provisions be eliminated. They are the provisions that films for educational, charitable or religious performances shall be censored without charge, an increase from $1 to $2 in the fee be charged for licensing films up to 1,000 feet, and an increase from $2 to $4 for films in excess of 1,000 feet.

Despite Revolutions, Berlin Is Dull, Says A. J. Danziger

POPULAR belief to the contrary, the life of an American cameraman now in Germany is not the "shooting" of one revolution after another, but a ceaseless search for the interesting among ordinarily dull surroundings. So writes A. J. Danziger from Berlin to A. G. Greenland, until recently with Moving Picture World. Mr. Danziger must have been in a pessimistic frame of mind at the time he penned the letter, as he mentions his inability to get many close-ups of the military shooting a few people and executing a few more during the recent ten-day revolution.

Perhaps the most interesting item in his letter concerns the manufacture by a man named Scheidemantel of "margerine," a substitute for butter, made out of horse bones and bones left on the family dinner table, which are collected and brought in wagons to the factory. Scheidemantel has just had a film made showing the process. He has made a fortune and is now one of the most popular makers of "ersatz" foods, says Mr. Danziger, who is going to send a print of the film to New York City.

Mr. Danziger finds German dramatic photoplays "as punky as ever."

French Embargo Is Only on Raw Stock, Says N. A. M. P. I.

THE French decree against the importation of motion picture films from America will not be "a restriction against laughter and enjoyment" as some of the Parisians thought. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been informed by its Washington representative, Jack S. Connolly, that the department of commerce has received a cablegram from its Paris office to the effect that the ban is only against the raw stock.

There was some doubt about just what the order did mean as it specified "sensitized cinema film," and the department of commerce, at the request of the National Association, asked for further information. The order will in no way affect the exportation of American made pictures.

Protests Against Intermissions.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Just a note to tell you that the average patron does not agree with Stanley Shaw on the intermission subject. Have you ever been in a picture theatre when the film accidentally breaks? What is the result? The older folks give little exclamations of disgust such as "Oh heck, that happens every time I come to this theatre!" and the youngsters yell, clap and kick until the trouble is remedied.

The ten minute waits would be a good excuse for the numerous cigarette smokers to walk all over the other people. Don't let 'em start it.

No Action on Picture Bills.

Up until May 3 Governor Alfred E. Smith had taken no action on any of the thirty-day motion picture bills reposing in his hands and on which he can take some action up until midnight of May 24. There has been no definite word from the governor as yet concerning any hearing on bills of interest to the motion picture industry and of which three, including the Cotillo measure, are in his hands.

Industry Needs Thorough Readjustment Along the Lines of Sanity and Justice

National Convention Opening in Cleveland on June 8 Will See Inauguration of New Era Wherein Exhibitors Will Be Able to Defend Themselves Against Policy of Producers, Says Exhibitor Official

By SYDNEY S. COHEN
Temporary Chairman, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America

ON the eve of the national convention to be held on June 8, 9, 10, and 11 in Cleveland, to which every exhibitor in the United States has been invited, a brief survey of our objects not only seems quite appropriate in point of time, but may justly be regarded as a matter of duty to the entire industry. We view the motion picture industry as one of the most important institutions of modern society. We regard it, or would like to regard it, as a great unit divided into three separate and distinct branches, but inspired by a spirit of harmony and co-operation.

This industry needs a thorough re-adjustment along the lines of sanity and justice. Too long have the producers been playing upon our foolish jealousies and rivalries. Too long have they been counting on our indifference, on our lack of leadership, until we are today near the verge of ruin and serfdom. These foolish jealousies and rivalries on the part of exhibitors have given away to a clear understanding of our community of interest and of our powers to assert and defend ourselves whenever we unite and act as one body.

Sees Start of New Era.

The convention will be judged by its fruits, but I believe it will pass into history as the start of a new era in which the exhibitor will no longer be a hewer of wood and a drawer of water, but an upstanding independent American man, asking no odds, demanding no privileges, but insisting upon proper respect for his rights within the industry.

We feel that within the last few years the producer and distributor, almost invariably representing the same financial interest, has slowly and steadily encroached on the domain of the exhibitor and by a series of coercive measures has sought to deprive him of the just control of his property—his motion picture theatre. We complain of many abuses, but most of them we believe have their origin in the attempt of the producer-exhibitor to step out of his legitimate sphere and force the theatre owner into an unnatural partnership.

Undermining the Exhibitor.

It is not difficult to trace the steps which have finally led up to this organized attempt at undermining the exhibitor's property. Excessive film rentals, the arbitrary exaction of deposits or so-called advance payments, the refusal to aid the small exhibitor in building up his business by denying such necessary adjuncts as mounted posters, photos and slides, the artificial curtailment of production, the bold and persistent drive for percentage booking—all these measures aim at weakening the exhibitor's hold on his investment.

Constantly increasing film rentals are placing many exhibitors today before the alternative of either selling out or raising their prices of admission. In most cases the exhibitor might better sell out than make a substantial advance in his price of admission. The existence of the motion picture theatre, its progress and prosperity, all depend on the popular price. It was the popular price which accounts for the conquest of the world by the motion picture. The fact is so well understood that it does not need repetition.

Advance Deposits Misused.

The advance payment now used by producers for the odious word "deposit" takes large sums from the exhibitor and uses them not as a security for film rentals but for the expansion of their business, and not infrequently for the building or purchasing of competitive theatres. The pretense that the deposit is used as security for the payment of film rentals has been abandoned even by the producer. Film rentals, as we know, are payable in advance.

It is always an extremely difficult matter to get your deposit back from any producer. In all disputes arising between the producer and exhibitor as to payment of bills, delivery of reels, contracts, etc., the man who holds the deposit holds the whip hand, possession being nine points of the law. Cases have been numerous throughout the country where exhibitors have had to invoke civil and criminal authorities to get their money back from producers.

United Against Percentage.

In regard to the percentage system, I know of no subject on which exhibitors have ever been more united. From my correspondence and from the many personal visits and from other sources, I know that exhibitors are determined to resist to the utmost the attempt to force percentage booking upon them. They feel that they should not be content merely with offering passive resistance to the system. Some definite and affirmative action must be taken as quickly as possible after the convention opens, to make percentage booking impossible.

The time to kill the forced percentage booking methods is now. It was through our own indifference and lack of resistance that the deposit system was foistered upon us. We are now in great straits to find a remedy. Let us not repeat this mistake with the fight against percentage booking. If we make an end of the forces that seem to be behind this drive, we won't be compelled later on to lose a lot of time and money in finding a remedy. As a rule remedies are late anyway.

To Oppose Large Profits.

The convention, I think, will also go on record as opposing the large profits and the influence enjoyed by promoters. These promoters have no thought for the good of the industry. They take all they can out of the sound values of the industry, merely to fill their pockets and caring nothing as to how it may affect the theatre. Exhibitors have suffered no less than the public from these promoters who thrive on chaotic and unsound business conditions. If any of these producers have ever created any honest and lasting values for either producer or exhibitor, it must have escaped general attention.

We have made no attempts to invade either the producing or distributing field. We have bought no studios, bargained for no stars, acquired no exchanges, we have sought no money in Wall Street to promote new producing concerns to compete with any of those now existing. We have been entirely satisfied to devote ourselves to the building up of our theatres, to improvement in our showmanship and to the development of our patronage.

Dictation on All Sides.

We were not permitted to pursue our legitimate calling in peace and contentment. On all sides we encountered attempts to dictate to us in the conducting of our business and the management of our property. Arbitrary and exorbitant film rentals were demanded and our refusal or even hesitancy to pay them were met with threats of competition or the actual building of new competitive theatres.

All the huge load of expensive salaries for stars and the rewards given to promoters, all the penalties of overcapitalization, all the sins of extravagance, incompetence or wastefulness, were thrown on our backs until we are beginning to stagger under the burden. Time and time again we have offered to co-operate with producers and distributors, at least in all matters which pertain to the entire industry, such, for instance, as the fight against hostile legislation.

Exhibitors Bear Tax Burden.

What has been the result? At Washington the producers fastened the 5 per cent. film rental tax upon us. We cannot pass any part of this tax on to the public and our friends knew it, but they do not care as long as they themselves remain wholly untouched by taxes. We and we alone carry the taxes which in justice should have been shared in fair and proper proportion by the three branches of the industry.

In the list of our grievances is the daring and persistent attempt on the part of the producer to prostitute our screens to common advertising even in highly lauded dramatic productions. So far we have, it seems, been unable to stop this abuse entirely. We have no means of knowing what the producer gets by way of contribution towards the cost of his negative from these highly favored advertisers, but we do know that he makes or tries to make us the dispensers of this profitable advertising.

Plan Constructive Program.

The convention, I firmly believe, will take this matter in hand, and I hope that the delegates will take drastic action which will make the repetition of such outrages upon our property impossible hereafter.

A large part of our program at Cleveland will be purely constructive. We want to encourage the independent producer and director. Directors are the creative mind of the industry and furnish the fundamental values. We want to encourage these independent producers and directors and we will leave them in no doubt as to our support. I am speaking for my fellow exhibitors when I say that at the Cleveland Convention every exhibitor will be welcome. We want none but exhibitors—men who are the actual owners of motion picture theatres and who gain their livelihood by means of their theatres

RAMBLES ROUND FILMTOWN

WITH WALTER K. HILL

Did You Ever Notice It?

In Locomobiles and Packards the passengers are generally lonely, stiff-backed and sour-faced.

In Fords the load is always a mob—bright-eyed and fairly oozing happiness and the joy of living.

Except in cases where yeggmen have despoiled them, Fords doubtless go straight to heaven to continue their helpful existence.

Famous Players-Lasky Going to India To Produce and Distribute Own Films

IN conjunction with a syndicate of British and Indian bankers the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will produce motion pictures in Bombay, India, for distribution by their own exchanges throughout the Far East. Adolph Zukor, in making the announcement, says that activities to this end will soon be under way.

Frank Meyer.

The Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Ltd., has been formed with a paid-in capital of $3,000,000. Studios and laboratories will be erected in Bombay, where the latest improved method of American production will be forwarded by experts under Frank Meyer, assistant secretary of Famous Players-Lasky, who has been in charge of the real estate and construction division for the corporation, and Tarkington Baker, late general manager of Universal.

Will Both Make and Distribute.

Not only will Paramount pictures be made in Bombay, but there will be at once established a chain of exchanges for their distribution. This system modelled after the American method, will embrace the Indian Empire, the Straits Settlement and other sections of the Far East.

Mr. Meyer will erect the Bombay plant and will install the most modern American film producing appurtenances. The studio and laboratory will be operated by a staff of American experts, which will be organized when everything is ready for work.

Mr. Baker will remain in India as general Indian representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He will have complete charge of the activities of the Indian Empire Corporation.

Department Heads Soon Leave.

Mr. Meyer and Mr. Baker will leave for India in two or three weeks, as soon as they can wind up their affairs in this country. They will spend some time at the new Famous Players studio in London before going to Bombay.

It is expected that the first American picture produced in India will be ready for release next Christmas. Just as it is Mr. Zukor's intention to have Paramount pictures produced in England distributed also in this country, so will the pictures made in India be released in this country and in Europe.

Mr. Zukor Makes a Statement.

"When one realizes that in the Indian Empire alone," says Mr. Zukor, "there are 400,000,000 people, one can get an idea of the possibilities which lie in the production of pictures in India. Paramount pictures, of course, are already being distributed throughout India, as they are in other countries of the world; but we wish to produce pictures which are closer to the thought and lives of the vast Indian people.

"Producing pictures in America that will mirror the Far East is practically impossible. The director and actors have to be on the spot; they must have an insight into the problems of the Indian people—in a word, they must have a better understanding of what the Indian public wants.

Tarkington Baker.

"Paramount pictures made in India will have settings amid scenery that practically has never been brought to the photoplay screen. All of the picturesque life and surroundings of the Indian will form the background for the pictures which we plan to make there."

Church in Isolated Town Entertains with Movies

THE following letter from J. W. Harley received by A. C. Hollis, of the Visual Instruction Service of the North Dakota Agricultural College, North Dakota, should be of special interest to non-theatrical exhibitors of films

"As the man in charge of the visual instruction department, I wish to let you know how much your service of films means to us at Mapleton. As you perhaps know this is a very small village of some 200 souls. There is no hope of the commercialized movie here. The community has to seek its amusement in Fargo and Casselton. When called to the pastorate of this church, I asked that the church undertake social service in as many ways as possible, first of all in providing clean amusement for young and old.

"To this end we purchased a moving picture machine, of the Safety Variety, incandescent lamp, etc., and once a week the church is open to all the people of the community.

"It is our purpose to cultivate an interest in every agricultural pursuit to stimulate the boys and girls to stay by the farm. To this end we are using your pictures and others which treat of farming, dairying, hog raising, etc., besides films for entertainment such as your copies of The Taming of the Shrew, David Copperfield, Oliver Twist, etc.

Service Is Appreciated.

"That the service is being appreciated is evidenced by the fact that the church is well filled Thursday and that the Sunday evening service is so well attended that the house during the last few weeks has been crowded, a very unusual state of affairs in Mapleton, so I am told. I might say that I use two reels of films Sunday night introductory to the service. I have used your copy of 'The Battle Hymn of the Republic' which I consider a number one reel. 'The Christmas Story,' Lakewood Dairy Farm and others. The evening service which follows is as long as the usual service and as reverent as any I ever saw and from my point of view the best thing is, that men and women who never attended the church before are coming and hearing the Gospel and accepting it.

Expense Met by Collection.

"The pictures which we get from you are a small part of those we use, and of course we must pay for them, the ones we do not get from you. To date the expense of pictures have been met by collection and a balance is on hand for further films.

"I am and have been a firm advocate of Visual Instruction for many years and have three years of experience with the movies in religious work. Two in a city church where the results were splendid, in spite of opposition, one in France among the soldiers, where the pictures were a necessity, and I believe that we are beginning a work which is destined to be the greatest movement of the age, to teach men, women and children the great vital truths of life."

Husbands, Wives and Love-Smitten Give "Why Change Your Wife?" the Once-Over

AFTER seeing Cecil B. DeMille's latest Paramount-Artcraft special, "Why Change Your Wife?" at the Criterion Theatre, the verdict of the New York critics seems quite unanimously to have been, "DeMille has gone and done it again." As a matter of fact, those are the very words used by two of them in their reviews of the picture, which is packing in capacity audiences at every performance during its indefinite run.

The picture, now well started on its career in the pre-release and first-run houses throughout the country, is scheduled for general release on May 2. Meanwhile, it has been running true to the form set by its Paramount-Artcraft super-special predecessors and in several instances has broken all previous records at the theatres where it has been shown.

At Denver all records for both receipts and total attendance were broken at both the Rialto and Princess theatres, where it ran simultaneously. At Newman's Royal, Kansas City, it played to 20 per cent. of the entire population of the city before the second week of its three-week's engagement was over. At the Euclid Theatre, Cleveland, it is still playing to capacity, the run having started on April 4, while at Grauman's Rialto, Los Angeles, it played to the longest run in the history of the city.

One of the chief reasons cited for its success is its appeal to women. The DeMille costuming has always been a distinctive feature of his productions, but in this masterpiece, it is declared, gowns that for beauty and style outrival anything ever before shown on the screen, even in the preceding DeMille pictures, are paraded before the eyes of milady.

The story of "Why Change Your Wife?" was written by William C. DeMille. The scenario is the joint work of Olga Printzlau and Sada Cowan, and Alvin Wyckoff was at the camera. The cast is headed by Thomas Meighan and Gloria Swanson, with Theodore Kosloff and Bebe Daniels in opposing roles. Others are Sylvia Ashton, Clarence Geldart, Mayme Kelso, Lucien Littlefield, Edna Mae Cooper and Jane Wolff.

Pictures Help Hudson's Bay Company Observe Anniversary

ONE of the greatest celebrations ever held in Canada has begun with the observance of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the incorporation of the Hudson's Bay Company, probably the oldest company in the world. The first of the series of festivities were held in Winnipeg and lasted for three days, followed by similar ones in Calgary, Edmonton, Victoria and Vancouver.

A chief feature of the celebration was the showing of a motion picture record of the Hudson's Bay Territory made for the company by Educational Films Corporation, of New York. Nearly 20,000 feet of these pictures were made by H. M. Wycoff, the Educational cameraman, who spent seven months in the country that is so closely associated with the history of romance and adventure in North America.

The Hudson's Bay Company itself leased the leading theatres in each city for the showings and admission was by invitation to its friends and the customers of its various great stores. Later the films will be shown throughout the Dominion and portions of them released in the United States.

Dempsey Serial Going Big.

Jack Dempsey, in "Daredevil Jack," is scoring the greatest serial success in years in the Detroit territory, according to George W. Sampson, the branch manager of the Pathe office there, who is visiting the home office. One hundred out of one hundred and thirty theatres in Detroit alone are showing the serial, and, on many streets, every house has the picture.

Consult Producers on Theatres.

Frank J. Rembusch, of Indianapolis; C. E. Whitehurst, of Baltimore, and Louis F. Blumenthal, acting as a sub-committee of the whole committee appointed at the exhibitors convention called at Chicago April 26 and 27, held a meeting in New York May 5 and subsequently consulted the producers in New York as to their attitude on producer-owned theatres. The result of their investigation will be reported to the whole committee, which will meet at New York on June 3 and 4 just previous to the National Convention to be held at Cleveland June 8, where the whole committee will meet the producers and hear their decision on producer-controlled theatres.

Production Activities Oblige Selznick to Take Over Solax Studio in Fort Lee

DUE to the present extensive and rapidly increasing production activities Selznick Pictures Corporation, it is announced by President Myron Selznick, that his company has just signed a long term lease whereby it takes possession on May 10 of the Solax Studio in Fort Lee, N. J. This will make the third Selznick studio in the East, the others being located in West Fort Lee, N. J., and in the Bronx.

Workmen are making extensive alterations and installing an entire new lighting system. Located within less than half a mile of the main Selznick studio in West Fort Lee, it will be possible for the two plants to operate practically as one. Properties, sets, lighting apparatus and workmen can be transported from one studio to another within ten minutes.

The Solax Studio, altered as it will be when the Selznick Company takes possession of it, will provide two large stages, affording ample space for the working of two separate productions at the same time. The company now has twelve productions under way and plans are rapidly nearing completion for the launching of half as many more within the next ten days.

Among the Selznick pictures now in working are those starring Olive Thomas, William Faversham, Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien and Owen Moore. Besides these, Mr. Myron Selznick recently announced that work had been started on "The Wilderness Fear," a special production directed by Burton George; "Marooned Hearts," another special production which is being directed by George Archainbaud and in which Zena Keefe and Conway Tearle are playing the leading roles, and a Ralph Ince special production, as yet untitled. In addition to these, four Kaufman Weeklies are in the final stages of making and preparations are being made to start work at once on four more.

Supplementing the newly acquired Solax Studio, the main studio in West Fort Lee and the studio in the Bronx, is the Selznick studio in Los Angeles, where, just at present, Miss Olive Thomas and Owen Moore are working.

Universal Lists Special Attraction.

Universal announces as a special attraction, "The Girl in Number Twenty-Nine" featuring Frank Mayo, to be released May 17. "The Girl in Number Twenty-Nine" is an adaptation of Elizabeth Jordon's novel "The Girl in the Mirror," and was produced under the direction of Jack Ford.

Supporting Frank Mayo are Claire Anderson, Elinor Fair, Harry Hilliard, Ray Ripley, Bull Montana and many others.

Congressman Has Bright Idea of Taxing Industry to Raise Soldier Bonus Money

By CLARENCE L. LINZ

EXHIBITORS will have the added worry of increased admission taxes if one of the suggestions made by Congressman James A. Frear, of Wisconsin, for raising money with which to pay the proposed soldier bonus is adopted. At the present time the House of Representatives is very much stirred up over the fizzle that the Republicans have made with the bonus legislation. It looks as though the sponsors of this legislation have bitten off too large a bit, and where the soldier vote was being catered to the legislators find they are on the brink of losing the votes of the poor, ordinary, every-day taxpayer who is tired of his war burdens.

The sales tax at first proposed has brought down so much opposition that it practically has been relegated to the scrap heap. Now the members of Congress are looking about for other taxable things, and Congressman Frear has re-discovered the theatres.

Increase Personal Income Tax.

"I am opposed to any proposition that includes what is called the sales tax," he said, in discussing the soldier bonus legislation in the House of Representatives. "That, in my judgment, is a dangerous proposition. I am sincere in that. The members of my committee (ways and means committee) know my attitude, and when members say what was the unanimous disposition of the committee, they will all be free to say that I reserved the right in committee and reserve it now to differ on the sales tax plan, because it is not a political proposition in any way. I desire to offer a solution:

"First, increase the normal personal income tax for the years 1919, 1920 and 1921 to rates imposed and collected for the year 1918; that is, increase the present rates of 4 to 8 per cent to 6 to 12 per cent. This will produce approximately $170,000,000 a year or $500,000,000 for three years.

"Second, extend the normal tax to dividends received by individuals or corporations for the year 1920 and 1921. This will produce $240,000,000 a year and $480,000,000 for the two years.

Double Admission Taxes.

"Third, tax stock dividends for the three years 1919, 1920 and 1921 at 25 per cent.—approximately the rate that would be imposed had not the Supreme Court ruled that the tax on such dividends in the 1918 revenue act were unconstitutional. This tax would produce approximately $150,000,000, principally from the dividends declared during the year 1920.

"Fourth, double the tax on automobiles of over $1,000, trucks, parts and accessories. This will produce for two years—1920 and 1921—$200,000,000. The present rate of taxes is 3 per cent. on trucks and 5 per cent. on automobiles and accessories, including tires.

Feeling Runs High.

"Fifth, increase the tax on admissions from 1 cent to 2 cents for each 10 cents on admissions for 25 cents or under, and from 1 cent to 3 cents on admissions of over 25 cents for the two years 1920 and 1921. This tax will produce about $200,000,000. New York producers propose to charge $5 for theatre tickets. In this age of profiteering and reckless extravagance the tax will be of value in helping a soldiers' compensation bill.

"Sixth, a tax of 1 per cent. on sales of real estate. This tax will produce about $100,000,000 annually, or $200,000,000 for the two years 1920 and 1921.

"The total of the above additional taxes for two years would be $1,730,000,000, according to estimates furnished me by treasury experts."

There is much feeling in Congress for and against the bonus bill. It may be that the legislation will pass the House and fail to get by the Senate this year. However, the House members are inclined to favorably consider some of the suggestions made by Congressman Frear. Naturally, it is the hope of the industry that the House will not seriously consider increased motion picture taxes.

Always Look to Pictures Business.

"It seems as though every time Congress finds there is a need for money it looks to the amusement industries to furnish it," said Harry M. Crandall, president of the Associated Exhibitors and prominent Washington exhibitor. "It just keeps us busy now getting the money to pay the various levies upon us, and with the number of taxes we almost have to keep a bookkeeping force so that we can properly take care of them. I can name fourteen taxes offhand that we who have theatres in the District of Columbia have to pay.

Crandall Details Present Hardships.

"First, there is the admission tax of 10 per cent. which Congressman Frear wants to raise. Of course, we do not have to pay that, but we feel the effect of the assessment, and if it were increased it would mean that our business would drop off, especially in the neighborhood sections.

"Then we have the seating capacity tax that costs us approximately $200 a theatre. Next is the film rentals tax of 5 per cent. which is a great big item every year to all exhibitors.

"We have the corporation tax and a stock tax, and if we are lucky enough to make any money we have to pay an excess profits tax. In addition to all of these, we have to bear our share of other federal taxes for expressage, freight, long distance telephone calls, telegrams, transportation and other like business requirements play an important part in our industry.

Connolly Is Optimistic.

"The taxes imposed upon us by the local authorities include that of the building inspectors, the amusement license tax, intangible tax, personal property tax, income tax, real estate tax, water rent and vault tax. We think we have our share of tax burdens."

Jack S. Connolly, Washington representative of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, is closely watching the various proposals being made in Congress.

"It looks now as though the members of Congress will move very slowly in the matter of assessing additional taxes," he says. "However, there is no telling what may happen. I am hoping that no serious thought will be given to increasing the admission taxes because I believe it would be a big blow to the industry. I am sure that this would do more to increase the general unrest in the country than anything else Congress could do."

About 200 Independent Exhibitors Join First National's Sub-Franchising Plan

CONCLUSION of the joint conventions of Associated National Pictures, Inc., and First National Exhibitors' Circuit at the Hotel Congress, Chicago, on April 30, marked the formal launching of the sub-franchising plan wherein approximately 6,500 independently owned and independently operated theatres will share in the mutualization of the protective and guaranteed production source benefits upon which the plan is based.

Sub-franchise applications from about 200 of the independent exhibitors who had responded to the call by Willard C. Patterson, of Atlanta, for a national mass meeting were filed with the various First National exchange managers and members before the Circuit's sessions were finally adjourned.

Radical and extensive changes in the present system of film distribution are expected by exhibitor members of First National as the result of the sub-franchising plan. Speeches by Circuit officials treated at length on the obvious and certain reforms that would necessarily follow in the wake of the efforts seeking to unite approximately 6,500 theatres in one co-operative organization which seeks direct contact with independent producers as its source of film supply.

Not a New Policy.

Members of the executive committee for Associated First National Pictures pointed out to the independent exhibitors that the sub-franchising plan is not a new and different system than any which has before been in vogue. Instead, according to the committee, it is an extension to other independent exhibitors of the co-operative, protective and economic phases of the organization structure on which First National Exhibitors' Circuit was started three years ago and on which it has steadily continued to bridge and narrow the gap between independent exhibitors and independent producers.

"Now independent exhibitors have a definite and sufficient source of releases to meet any organized theatre competition from other than independent producers and an arrangement whereby they pay a fixed percentage of the total cost of every release," says a statement. "In other words, the rental values are established at the studio rather than in the exchange. Through the stock equity which each enfranchised exhibitor will have in the exchange for his territory, he is guaranteed against film costs in excess of the fair valuation by the dividends which the stockholding will bring from the disbursement of any profits earned by the exchange over and above its nominal operating expense."

Three Months to Complete Allotment.

Territorial awards of sub-franchises started upon the return of the First National exchange managers to their respective offices. It is predicted by Circuit officials that at least three months will be needed to complete the allotment. By autumn, it was said, First National attractions will be pledged by sub-franchises to at least 6,000 theatres.

The executive committee for Associated First National Pictures, composed of N. H. Gorden, of Boston; Moe Mark, of New York, and H. O. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia, will devote practically all of its time during the summer to the consideration and granting of applications for sub-franchises.

Schedules of percentage ratings of every theatre in each territory were given to the exchange managers at the concluding session of the First National Sales Club. In fixing the individual theatre percentages, the statistical division of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee for First National eliminated in many instances the matter of population as a determining factor and considered the more conclusive conditions of industrial advantages, prevailing average film costs for individual houses booking on a flat rental basis in the past, competition and the strategical location of the theatres.

"To See Is to Believe," Says Minister, Pleading for Picture Shows in Churches

AS a means of building up the church there is nothing better than the motion picture and the time is coming when every church will have a motion picture machine just as it has its organ, according to the Rev. J. C. Eason, pastor of the Methodist Church at Chatham, a village near Albany, N. Y.

The church has just installed a motion picture machine and gave its first show on April 30 to an audience that filled the building. A seven-reel picture and a two-reel comedy made up the program. A similar entertainment will be given every Friday night. No admission will be charged but an offering will be taken.

The Rev. Mr. Eason's views on the motion picture are decidedly interesting. He says:

"It is a common saying that to see is to believe and we know the truth of it when we realize that ten times as many of the impressions of life come through the one sense of sight as through the other four senses combined.

"It has also been said that people remember one-quarter of what they hear, but that they remember half of what they see. It is further said they remember longer the impression that comes through the eye. Try this out sometimes by asking a friend to tell you about the sermon last Sunday and then ask him to tell you about the motion picture last Saturday night.

"In the past the church has utilized the sense of hearing almost exclusively in its ministry and teaching. Can we afford to continue to neglect the eye channel when it has gained such recognition of importance in the educational world? The still pictures and stereopticons have been used in the churches for years. Why should we not now make use of the motion picture with all its possibilities?

Wesley Banned Organs in Church.

"The stereopticon had to fight its way into the churches, as did any other innovations, but it has won on its merits and is here to stay. The same is true of the motion picture. Wherever it is used the results are most beneficial, providing the management is good.

"Somebody says evil forces utilize pictures. Yes, somebody once said they used organs. Therefore, the church should not. Wesley would not allow a musical instrument in his church. Does that argument make us willing to do without our church organ now? The devil uses everything he can, but that is no reason why we should let him monopolize things with vast possibilities for good. The time is coming when the church will be no more willing to do without the pictures than the organ."

"—And Don't Let Me Catch You Up Here Again," Says George Walsh.
We'll bet if he comes again George will put him in the Brea—"The Dead Line" for life. A scene from a new Fox production.

McCulley Stories Good for Screen.

In the ever-growing list of American writers there is one who holds a unique position in the field in view of the fact that the majority of his more recent stories have been given a screen version, although the author has never written directly for the screen. The author referred to is Johnston McCulley, well-known writer of short stories and novels, and author of the new Ruth Roland serials now being produced.

The Ruth Roland story is titled "Broadway Bab" and was originally published as a magazine serial and then syndicated in a number of large daily newspapers.

The latest word of fiction from Mr. McCulley is "The Masked Woman," a highly entertaining mystery story. It was put on the market in book form about three weeks ago.

Female Filmists and Curb Star-Gazers Yearn for Pre-No-Parking Days of Perfect Bliss

By GIEBLER

IN other and less poetic words, the hot days are with us. But outside of that, there are no flies in the vinegar of Filmland. Everybody is working, and the studio ghosts are walking with pleasing regularity. If there is anything at all that disturbs our poise, it is the three-minute parking law in force in the congested district of our fair city.

This onerous ordinance has a tendency to get the goats of some of our fair players. Before the passage of the no-parking rule, one of the favorite feminine sports of the colony was to drive down in one's car and give the natives a treat.

One would drive up to a store or shoppe and go in. When one got through shop (pe)-ing there was always a little congregation of admiring yokels gathered around the car waiting for one to emerge, and if one kept one's ears open, one could hear such remarks as, "Oh, lookey, that's her—ain't she sweet?"

Odds All Against Catty Remarks.

Of course, one always took a chance of there being jealous persons in the crowd who would say, "Huh, she ain't such a much!" "Look, Steve, I told you she used dope on her hair," or something catty like that.

But in the main, however, the simple rustics exuded nothing but admiration, and it was all a great and gratifying game. With the new law, under which any car that hesitates at any curb longer than three minutes is lost, there is nothing to do but trade at the stores in Hollywood, where movie players are regarded as part of the scenery.

I was talking to J. Gordon Edwards this week. He has finished one picture with William Farnum and is almost through with the second. When that is done he will make another big Fox Special, an Egyptian story with two or three thousand people and an all-star cast, one of the big spectacular smashes that Edwards knows so well how to make.

Laemmle a Deft Chauffeur.

I went out to Universal City one day and saw the newly created governing board, composed of Isadore Bernstein, Sam Van Ronkle and Louis Loeb, functioning like a well-oiled machine with Carl Laemmle at the steering wheel.

Henry McRae has just got back from Japan and other foreign parts, where he took Marie Walcamp, Harland Tucker and other players for scenes in "The Dragon's Net." Henry says the trip did him good, and he looks fine and fit and well set up in every way. He had a lot of interesting and exciting adventures while away which he promised to tell me, and which will have to go into another story. I didn't get to see Harland Tucker or Marie Walcamp, who is now Mrs. Tucker, because they were away picking out a honeymoon bungalow.

I found Max Linder at work on his new comedy, "The Broken Mirror." Charles Dorian was directing the piece and Thelma Percy was playing the supporting lead. Max says he is going to make a few two-reel comedies and then broaden out and invade the five-reel field.

Far from "Devoid of Brains."

Having occasion to go out to the back ranch at U City, I called on Joe Martin. Mr. Martin had been working in the Benny Leonard serial, was all tired out and not very friendly, until Curly Stecker came along and said it was lunch time. Then Joe got real affable, and said, "Gee, gee, gee," several times.

Joe is a wonderful animal. There is a line in a stanza of the Fables of Fontaine that winds up some remark about animals thinking, with "Descartes goes further and maintains, that beasts are quite devoid of brains."

I wish Descartes could have been with me. I should have liked to introduce him to Joe. Joe Martin has brains and he uses them. I saw him do it.

Curly Stecker gave Joe his lunch, and Joe started eating, and with better table manners than some humans I have seen at chow. Then, to show how obedient the monk is, Curley ordered him to hand over the cup of milk he was drinking.

Joe's Tender Heart Is Touched.

Joe looked at Curly as if he didn't understand, then he turned to me. I was deeply interested, and had stooped down and was all bent over in a crouching position, looking at Joe in an eager sort of manner. Joe gave me one look and handed the cup of milk through the bars of the cage with a shrug that said as plain as words, "Oh, well, maybe he needs it more than I do. Let him have it."

That Joe understood Curly's speech is positive; and that he thought I wanted his milk is sure; and that he took me for a relative of some sort in distress is highly probable, unflattering as the fact may be. Joe Martin thinks, that's all there is to it, and I wish to goodness he could talk, I'd like to know what he thinks of the movies.

Opportunity in Person of Mack Sennett.

I dropped in at the Mack Sennett studio and watched James E. Abbe making high art for the movies. Mr. Abbe told me that he came out to the coast to make stills with special lighting effects, for Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and others, and while here responded to Mack Sennett's invitation to come down to his studio and take a few shots of the bathing girls.

While Abbe was working Mack came along, took a look and said

"Why can't that kind of photography be applied to moving pictures as well as to stills?" And Abbe replied:

"It can, but I've never had the time nor the opportunity to try it out."

"Well, if you've got the time, the opportunity is here," said Mack. "Go to it."

And Abbe went to it.

Abbe's Photographic Work Known.

The photographic work of James E. Abbe needs no boosting. It is known and appreciated wherever the best in photographic art is known, and if he achieves the effects he is striving for, Sennett pictures are going to be eye and soul as well as rib ticklers in the future.

Mr. Abbe was working on a scene in which a dozen of the Sennett girls garbed as Roman maidens, were grouped into a picture with an ancient Roman gateway to a garden as a background. I love pictures, but I can not rave over them in the lingo of the artist. Abbe's wonderful lights made it look like fairyland. It was Dore and Alma Tadema merged and made to live and breathe with light.

Ben for Eye Effects.

Ray Griffith was directing the comedy action, which had Eddie Gribbon and Kala Pasha as heavy support for the girls, and Ben Turpin for the eye work.

After this I went over on another stage and visited around with Billy Bevan, George O'Dell, Billy Armstrong of the English music 'alls, Virginia Fox, Fannie Kelly, Louise Fazenda, Little John Henry and Teddy the dog, who were all making a rural comedy.

John Henry is a great kid—only a little over two years old, but one of the best workers of all the kid actors.

Bill Wright Back in Harness.

Another day I dropped in on my old friend William Lord Wright, who forsook the films a short time ago and set up as an orange grower.

Bill has come back to give the old game another whirl as publicity director for the Kosmik Productions at the earnest solicitation of his one-time college chum, Jack Wheeler, production manager for Kosmik.

The Kosmik people have got a big idea for a serial—Stuart Paton for a director, Grace Darmond for a star, George Cheseboro for a hero, and Carmen Phillips, Bois Karoloff, William Marion, Capt. Clayton, William Buckley and Ethel Shannon as a cast, and it looks very much as if the trade were going to be treated to a whizz bang of a story when "The Hope Diamond Mystery" is finished and turned loose.

Film Executive Favors Theatre Doctors and Tells Story of a 250 Per Cent. Investment

IN New York recently H. M. Thomas, managing director of the Rialto, Omaha, declared he believed there was room in the United States for a theatre doctor. He elaborated the suggestion by saying there were many managers and owners of houses throughout the country who realized they were not getting out of their properties the returns that should be flowing in. Some of these theatres were losing money steadily; others were just getting by, and still others were perhaps paying 6 per cent. dividends where the owners were sure that if properly exploited the houses would return 15 or 20.

Mr. Thomas said he was convinced there was a field for a thorough showman who should surround himself with a staff of experts just the same as, for example, an expert accountant is accustomed to build up around him. There could be a specialist in music, another in exploitation, a third in lobby display, etc. To the remark of the World man that such a person would be worth to himself at least $50,000 a year by reason of what he could earn as an exhibitor Mr. Thomas agreed and said a proper kind of theatre doctor could earn it.

Exhibitor Balked on Weak Sister.

In Chicago the same World man was discussing the suggestion with a prominent film executive. "I agree with Mr. Thomas," he said. "I'll tell you an instance of what came under my observation when I was an exchange manager—I won't say what part of the country it was in, that's immaterial.

"In a list of five stars of the company there was one who was indeed a weak sister. The player did not pull in the money the way the four others did. One day there came into my office the owner of the biggest theatre in a town in my jurisdiction. He was paying us $45 a day for our pictures. Plainly the man had been drinking and was 'het up.' He declared he would not take any picture in which this certain player appeared. I tried to reason with him. I told him he was getting some big stuff without any extra charge and we thought it fair he should take a little lean with the fat. Nothing doing. I told him under the circumstances I would have to cancel the others. Even that made no difference.

Suggested Exchangeman Buy Out Competitor.

"I thought it over a couple of days and decided to run down to his town and talk it over. I did not want to lose that good account, you see. When I suggested that he reconsider his stand he laughed at me. 'Why don't you go across the street and put your pictures in there? Perhaps you even can buy the place.'

"'That's an idea,' I replied. I saw he was obdurate. So across the street I went, into a little tumble-down place of less than 300 seats. I took up with the old chap who admitted he was the proprietor the matter of booking my films.

"'No, I guess not,' he replied. 'I never pay more than $7.50 for my show and I suppose you would want ten or twelve dollars.' I told him what the man across the street had been paying.

"'Well, the only way you can get your show in here at that money is to buy the house and sell to yourself,' he retorted.

"'That's interesting,' I replied. 'How much do you want for your place?'

"'Two thousand dollars.'

"'I might talk about seventeen fifty.'

"'Not a penny less than $2,000.'

"'What do you take in at the box office in a week?'

"'That's not any of your damned business.'

"Now it just happened I had a couple of thousand loose. I talked with him for a while, got him into a better humor, and he told me the situation. He was allowing himself a salary of $25 a week, to his wife he paid $10 for taking tickets, to his daughter $15 a week for playing what he called a piano, and a dollar a day to his operator. On the average he was just about paying salaries and rent.

"Well, I took the house and put in an experienced manager. The rest of the story is that I cut in the manager on the profits and there is never a week I don't draw down $100 and sometimes as much as $200. I agree with Mr. Thomas. I know there must be many houses, larger than the one I bought, but which can profit through diagnosis and treatment by a theatre doctor." G. B.

Independent Producers Can Save Money By Joining Studio and Business Forces

A DEFINITE plan for the practical reduction of film costs without detriment to quality was made public in Los Angeles last week when Andrew J. Callaghan, head of the film corporation of that name, starring Bessie Love, issued a statement advocating the combine of independent units in both their studio and business branches in order to cut down the tremendous overhead costs.

"The last few years," says Mr. Callaghan, "have witnessed a considerable increase in the rental of films that is due to a corresponding increase in the costs of production. After a considerable study of the general situation in the producing field I feel justified in presenting a plan of amalgamation of independent units which will bring about a very big reduction in the costs of making photoplays without detriment to either the quality of the films or the identity of the separate organizations.

"The one practical way to bring about an immediate cut in overhead costs is the uniting of groups of independent producers for the purpose of eliminating overlapping expenses. This development has followed in the evolution of every big industry and in our own field there is just as much if not more justification for such a saving movement.

Central Bureau for Securing Supplies.

"Although each group of independent entities would join hands under one roof, this would in no way interfere with their individual status. The organizations, save in the many cases where work need not be duplicated, would remain absolutely intact. In the same sense that they had joined under one roof for studio purposes, they would similarly have one set of business headquarters, preferably in New York City. And although their organizations were so constituted, their releasing arrangements would follow the former policies of each separate unit.

Difficult to Estimate Saving.

"The saving that would result from such an arrangement is difficult to determine, although in my study of the plan I have found that a modest estimate of the economy on many small items would bring the total saving to an astonishing figure. The housing of all the units of a group in one studio will do away with the overlapping disbursements as regards properties, laboratories, costumes and many other items which do not readily suggest themselves, but which are nevertheless indispensable details in the complicated machinery of production. There would even be a central bureau for the requisitioning of supplies."

United Productions Creditors to Meet.

P. L. Waters, chairman of the creditors' committee, has called a meeting of the creditors of United Pictures Productions Corporation at the offices of Triangle Film Corporation, 1457 Broadway, New York, on Monday, May 10, at 11 o'clock. He states in the call that matters of importance to all creditors will be presented.

"Simple Souls" Pictures the Romance of a Duke and a Pretty Shop Girl

By EDWARD WEITZEL

IT is doubtful if two such delightfully simple souls have ever before been the central figures in a romance as the Duke and the shop girl whose love story is the theme of the latest Jesse D. Hampton-Pathe production, starring Blanche Sweet. The world has long admired the independent spirit of the titled gentlemen of English society who choose their wives from among the beauties of a musical comedy chorus, or turn a plain American heiress into Lady So-and-So—when their fancy has not been caught by a pretty shop girl or a member of their own station in life. And a reasonable portion of these marriages turn out happily.

In "Simple Souls" the author, John Hastings Turner, has elected to go to the "lower middle classes" for his heroine, and has selected one of the poorest and apparently most unpromising of London's underpaid shop girls. Blessed by having a father who spends most of his earnings and part of his daughter's at the "pub," and a mother whose religious training has been of so severe a nature that she is willing to believe the worst of the girl on the merest suspicion, Molly Shine has the satisfaction of riding away from the humble abode of her parents in an expensive motor car after showing them, and the astounded neighbors, the "marriage lines" that make her the Duchess of Wynninghame. Molly's adventures both before and after her triumphant exit from the sordid life to which she was born are of an unusual character, and the contrast between her surroundings in the two widely separated grades of society that mark her rise from shop girl to Duchess is one of the most effective points of the story.

The Extreme of Amiability.

The Duke of Wynninghame is the sort of absent-minded, well-meaning chap who is found only in novels and plays dealing with noblemen of English birth. His mind engrossed by the study of biology and too good-natured to deny a woman any favor she might ask, the young man is fortunate when fate marries him to Molly; otherwise he would, in all probability, have been snapped up by the first designing female who came his way and cast envious eyes at him. Answering to the given name of Henry and rich enough in his own right not to be forced to seek an heiress for a bride, the Duke's amiability and sense of justice get him safely out of a number of awkward situations that are also extremely embarrassing for his newly made Duchess, but prove to her that her Henry's heart is in the right place, even if he does start off on the honeymoon without her.

Molly Exhibits Her "Marriage Lines."

The first meeting of the pair is quite out of common. Strolling through Regent's Park one day Molly flips up her only shilling to decide whether she shall spend the money on a lunch or a book, a craving for mental food being strong within her brain. The shilling rolls under a nearby bush and she is joined in her search for it by Henry of Wynninghame, who happens to be passing by. When he discovers the true state of affairs he not only takes Molly to a restaurant and gives her a jolly little feed, but agrees to send her two pounds a week that she may satisfy her desire for literature. After which he goes his way and thinks no more of Molly.

Not so the girl. She returns home, aglow with happy excitement. A real romance has come into her life and she can think of nothing but the handsome young chap and her admiration for him. He is a duke and she can never hope to be his wife, but she knows she will go on loving him in secret just the same. This she does until her mother finds out about the two pounds a week sent her by Wynninghame, and there is trouble in the Shine family. Mrs. Shine is certain that the money is the price of her daughter's downfall, and Mr. Samuel Shine is of the same opinion. Forced to stand the taunts of her parents and the neighbors, Molly is dragged to the Duke's home by her father and kent waiting in the adjoining room while the family clergyman confronts the unsuspecting Henry and demands to know if he is not ashamed of himself for ruining an innocent girl. The Duke's reply amazes the minister: If his kindness has compromised Molly he is willing to do the honorable thing and marry her. Miss Shine is brought into the room and the matter explained. She is too overjoyed to do anything but consent, and the wedding takes place that very day, by special license.

The Honeymoon Gets a Bad Start.

And immediately her husband informs her that he has arranged to sail in his yacht on a big hunting trip, and that she had better reside with her parents until his return. The newly created Duchess stands in too great awe of her husband to argue with him on their wedding day, and goes back to the dingy court that contains the Shine apartment. Her arrival without her husband makes Mrs. Shine so suspicious that she sends the humble little Duchess about her business. In the meantime Lady Octavia, the Duke's sister, has learned of Wynninghame's strange marriage and is determined that his wife must be bought off, or got out of the way by some other means before her husband's return.

Molly goes straight to her husband's country home, arriving in the midst of a social gathering. Sister Octavia is forced to find a proper gown for the bride and introduce her to the guests. After dinner everyone is taken out to the Duke's yacht for a dance on deck. Lady Octavia locks Molly in her room and says she has a headache. But the girl outwits her sister-in-law, goes to the dance and is so hurt by the way Lady Octavia treats her that she makes up her mind she does not want to become a member of polite society if her husband's sister must be her model. A launch is tied to the yacht's steps, and Molly hides under a piece of canvas in the stern, expecting to be taken ashore. The launch is hoisted aboard instead.

When Molly escapes from the launch the yacht has started on its cruise. Left to themselves the newly wedded pair come to a better understanding, and the honeymoon starts as all properly conducted honeymoons should be started—with both bride and bridegroom present.

Blanche Sweet an Engaging Figure.

The direction, local color and general production of "Simple Souls" bring out all the points of the story clearly and convincingly. Blanche Sweet is an engaging figure as the misunderstood little shop girl, and wins sympathy for the character at every stage of her adventures. Charles Meredith as the Duke of Wynninghame is an excellent foil for the star, and the rest of the cast is made up of thoroughly competent players. "Simple Souls" is a pleasant romance that will appeal to everyone who has not tired of the happy ending and the honeymoon trail.

Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange to Handle Hodkinson Productions Throughout Canada

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces the closing of a contract with the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange for the distribution in Canada of practically all Hodkinson current and forthcoming releases.

Negotiations at the Hodkinson home office for the Exhibitors' Exchange were conducted by J. C. Brady, president of the Canadian organization, and H. Alexander, one of its directors. The Exchange, which numbers among its 160 members many of the best known showmen in Canada, has branches in all the principal cities in the Dominion. As a result of obtaining the Hodkinson franchise for all Canada, William E. Allen, general manager of the Exchange, has arranged to open offices in Winnipeg and St. John.

Though the Hodkinson output will be released formally in the fall, some of the big specials, including "Sex" and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum productions, will be ready for Canadian exhibitors within a few weeks.

Among the pictures to be distributed by the Canadian Exchange are the product of the following Hodkinson producing units: J. Parker Read, Jr., Robert Brunton Productions, Joseph Levering, Deitrich-Beck Productions, William Parsons, Louis Tracy Productions, Irvin Willat Productions and the Dial Film Company.

"The Silent Avenger" Will Be Completed Within Three Weeks

WILLIAM DUNCAN is now making the final episodes of his new serial, "The Silent Avenger," out on the Coast. A new plan which Duncan perfected recently enables him to work on more than one episode at once, and within three weeks he will have completed what he regards as the most elaborate serial he has ever produced.

Since the picture was started, it has not been delayed one day in the course of filming; the camera has turned on every working day of each week. Disadvantages of weather were overcome; there was no waiting for locations or sets. It proved the efficiency of Vitagraph's new plan of serial production, worked out from a wide experience in serial production.

The plan is chiefly to surround the director, in this instance William Duncan himself, with a complete producing unit, making him entirely independent of the balance of the studio organization. A technical staff, double the customary number, was enabled to maintain preparations week's in advance of the director's requirements.

Completes Episodes Early.

During inclement weather, enclosed studio sets were available. Excellent cooperation in the studio relieved him of everything but concentration upon telling his story in pictures. Perhaps most important of all to exhibitors, this system assured the completion of each episode far in advance of release date, and enabled the showman to view his subject, prepare his local advertising and exploitation with a good margin of time.

Pathe to Release Blackton's Screen Version of Successful Play, "Passers By'

IN line with its policy of giving exhibitors big productions Pathe announces the acquisition of J. Stuart Blackton's screen version of C. Haddon Chambers' stage play, "Passers By." This production, having as the head of a strong cast, Herbert Rawlinson. Release date of the play has not been set yet, but will be announced shortly.

In the cast with Mr. Rawlinson are three well known stage players: Tom Lewis, Dick Lee and W. J. Ferguson. Mr. Lewis, who plays the part of the "Cabby," is at the present time headline on the Keith and Proctor vaudeville circuit. W. J. Ferguson, one of the oldest and best known character actors in America, who interprets the role of Waverton's butler, a much more important part than the character indicates, has been featured for months in "The Little Whopper," which just completed an all season run at the Casino Theatre in New York, and is now on tour. Dick Lee has a national reputation for his "character" ability, which he uses to the fullest advantage portraying "Burns."

Herbert Rawlinson portrays the role in which Charles Cherry and Richard Bennett won fame on the stage in this country.

"Passers By" comes as the sixth Blackton release through Pathe within the year.

All Albany Turns Out.

The Clinton Square Theatre, of Albany, on May 3, pulled off the biggest advertising stunt ever attempted in exploiting a motion picture show in the city. "On with the Dance" was being featured at the theatre all of the week.

The Knickerbocker Press of May 2 had an entire section of several pages devoted in informing the public as to the merits of the feature. The advertising attracted much attention and resulted in a long line of men and women being in front of the ticket office fully an hour or more before the theatre opened for the first performance.

Louise Glaum to Write on Screen Life.

Eugene V. Brewster, publisher of Motion Picture Magazine, Shadowland, The Magazine of the Arts, and Motion Picture Classic, announced in New York recently the acceptance by Louise Glaum, the screen star, of an editorial post on the Brewster publications offered her during her recent sojourn in the eastern metropolis.

Following the luncheon Mr. Brewster made Miss Glaum an offer to write a series of articles on motion picture life for his magazine. This proposal the star took under consideration, and after sitting for a portrait by the publisher-artist, left for the Coast to resume her work before the camera.

Don't think that just because you did it your stunt is no good. It may help the other fellow as much as he has helped you. Send it along.

Christie Productions Now Being Filmed Include Two-Reel Comedies and Features

WITH the recent studio improvements completed and with the acquisition of its own electrical generating plant, the Christie Film Company's Hollywood studio has swung into its program of spring and summer activity indicated by the recent announcement that Christie would soon produce fewer and greater productions. Having terminated the production of all pictures not bearing the Christie name, production is now being centered on productions of feature length and two-reel comedies, with the well known Christie one-reel comedies also in progress.

Al Christie, who is supervising all of the productions, is directing one of the new Christie two-reel comedies, a light farce featuring Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Teddy Sampson, Vera Steadman and Charlotte Merriam. On the completion of this feature comedy he will take a one-reel comedy company to Bear Valley to make one of the Christie comedy releases for early summer.

Another Christie two-reel comedy also in progress is being directed by William Beaudine, who filmed the latest successful Christie two-reeler, "Petticoats and Pants," which is said to be receiving the most favorable comment of any of the Christie comedies in its showings around the country. In this new comedy are Fay Tincher, Jimmie Harrison, Charlotte Merriam and Eddie Baker. It will present Fay Tincher at the head of the cast in a story much different from any of the previous Christie pictures in which she has appeared.

Vitagraph Managers Praise "Courage of Marge O'Doone"

THE Vitagraph special production, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," adapted from James Oliver Curwood's novel of the same title, has been reviewed in its final form by the executives of Vitagraph. Vitagraph branch managers have already received and screened the prints, and have sent enthusiastic telegrams to John M. Quinn, general manager of Vitagraph, Inc.

Mr. Quinn expressed himself as being highly pleased with the results on this production, and stated that he had never known a book or story to be followed so closely on the screen as David Smith, the director, has followed Curwood's novel.

"The advance interest shown by exhibitors for the past few weeks led me to believe that this Curwood special would set a booking record for a special production," said Mr. Quinn, "but now, when I have seen how the dramatic punches of this picture have affected men whose emotions are callous to the ordinary screen effects, I feel sure of this. The very salesmen whose province it will be to make a record with this film have declared that it is a hundred per cent. production, and that the picture should veritably book itself.

"Our advance campaign on the picture was nationwide. We have had a force of billposters covering every available stand in the country with the special 24-sheet on this production. We played up the bear-fight in this poster, but to my mind no mere scenes can do justice to the grizzly fight and the other fights which run through many feet of this picture. Our trade paper inserts, and also our exploitation and advertising cleared through other channels, have brought countless queries from the country's representative showmen, and many have booked it by wire.

Robertson-Cole Announces Title of Carpentier Special

THE WONDER MAN" is the title which Robertson-Cole has selected for the Georges Carpentier special which will be given the public through pre-release on May 30. The title is only made public as the picture is being completed. But in reality it was selected months ago when Carpentier was signed abroad by Robertson-Cole. It was a case where a photoplay was written around a man's personality, thus assuring what might be termed a good literary fit.

The units which comprise the Robertson-Cole selling force were quick to recognize the strength of "The Wonder Man" as a selling title, and, as soon as it was made known in the branches, nearly every manager sent in to A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation an utterance in praise of the selection. Most of them believed that the title had been picked merely for its selling force, so strong did they estimate it. Merely to call attention to how closely it fits the man was the statement issued that this title was picked even ahead of the story, as the one and only title not only for Carpentier but for his picture.

Frank Rogers Finds Western Exhibitors Want Pictures with Strong Heart Appeal

FRANK B. ROGERS, general sales director of J. Stuart Blackton Features, Inc., arrived in Chicago on Wednesday, April 28, from a trip that occupied five weeks, during which he visited all branches west of Chicago.

The main objects of the trip were to stimulate interest in the Blackton product and to learn from exhibitors themselves the kind of pictures their patrons want at the present time. He found quite a diversity of opinions, but all were agreed that bigger and better pictures, with a strong heart appeal, were needed most. He was also told that good comedies were always highly favored.

"Mr. Blackton has fully determined to make nothing but big pictures from well-known stories by famous authors, with renowned stars and strong supporting casts," said Mr. Rogers to the writer. "He will be just as careful in the selection of the members of the casts as he will be in the selection of the stories and the stars.

"I might state here that 'Passers By,' with Herbert Rawlinson and an exceptionally strong cast, will be released on June 15. I personally believe, after viewing this picture, that it will rank high among all the big pictures of 1920.

"The exhibitors throughout the West are all optimistic over the prospects for this year. I found them good business men and substantial business men, too, who are both willing and able to pay the price for any picture desired."

San Francisco Prosperous.

Mr. Rogers was especially impressed with San Francisco as one of the most active and prosperous picture centers in the country. He found that considerable interest was taken in the Blackton product by exhibitors of San Francisco, and also in every city visited on the Pacific Coast, and expressed himself as being greatly satisfied with the demand for Blackton pictures.

The central western district, with Chicago in the lead, is doing a very satisfactory business with the Blackton product, Mr. Rogers stated. Denver and Omaha are showing great strides with the product, while Kansas City and Minneapolis are also making satisfactory showings.

Reverting to the Pacific Coast, Mr. Rogers dwelt for some time on the high-class presentations there. He was especially attracted by the artistic merit of these presentations and by the good admission prices which prevail. The attendance everywhere was exceptionally fine.

Mr. Rogers left for the home office in New York City on Sunday, May 2. He will remain there for about three weeks and then will start on a trip through the entire South, where the demand is especially strong for Blackton productions.

As an afterword, just before leaving, Mr. Rogers said to the writer: "You can say for me that Mr. Blackton has already made great plans and preparations for future productions, and that they will positively far surpass in every respect the best of his former product. He has made a careful study of the near future demand and his aim is to meet that demand in a superlative way."

Pictures Boom in Indiana, Realart Manager Declares

H. W. WILLARD, Chicago manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, returned on Monday, April 26, from a six-days' trip through Indiana, during which he visited La Fayette, Kokomo, Logansport, Marion, Anderson, Muncie, Huntington and Fort Wayne. In these cities he had great success in closing contracts for Mayflower specials and Wanda Hawley in "Miss Hobbs." He contracted for the latter in each city at top prices for runs of two to four days.

In the Luna-Lite Theatre, Marion, "Soldiers of Fortune" showed to extraordinary business, the returns exceeding even those of "The Miracle Man," which held the previous record.

Owing to the excellent business prevailing in picture theatres throughout the Hoosier state, exhibitors are on a sharp lookout for new locations in the various cities, with the view of building larger and better theatres. The tendency everywhere is towards higher admissions. Fort Wayne houses are charging 35 cents for their programs and all are doing well.

Kokomo, now the tenth city of the state, as shown by the recent national census, is one of the liveliest spots in Indiana and the picture theatres are showing to excellent business.

Ralph O. Proctor Enthused Over His Far Western Trip

RALPH O. PROCTOR, assistant general manager of United Artists, came into the city on Tuesday, April 27, from Minneapolis, after making a complete circuit of the western states during the last five weeks.

He visited Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake, Denver and Omaha and found the prospects for United Artists very bright in all these cities. San Francisco, especially, impressed him because of the great boom now on in the building of new picture theatres, in addition to excellent, current business. The other cities mentioned are also very prosperous.

Mr. Proctor is much pleased with the volume of business being done by the Minneapolis Auditorium and says that it exceeds his expectations. The symphony orchestra of thirty-seven pieces is a leading feature of the presentations. Director Richard Long has already made a name for himself in Minneapolis by his musical adaptations, and a great deal of the credit for the success of the Auditorium must be awarded him as well as to Manager Charles Branham, Mr. Proctor was careful to state.

The presentations start at 12.30 p. m. daily, and not at 2.30 p. m., as was planned originally, the patrons being in favor of the earlier hour.

Mr. Weiss is confining his operations to Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan and reports very encouraging business.

NEWS of the INDEPENDENT FIELD

PRODUCTION By C. S. SEWELL DISTRIBUTION

Editing of "Up in Mary's Attic" Nearing Completion; Fine Arts to Hold Showing Soon

FINAL editing of "Up in Mary's Attic," which is being supervised by Elmer J. McGovern, is almost complete, says Murray W. Garsson, president of Fine Art Pictures, Inc., and it is expected that a trade showing can be held within a short time.

One hundred and thirty thousand feet of negative were exposed for this picture, more than thirty thousand being devoted to one of the cleverest dog scenes in motion pictures. This dog rocks a baby's cradle, feeds it from a nursing bottle, and when the child fails to fall asleep, winds a phonograph, selects a record, places it on the machine and starts it whirling. He then returns to the cradle and rocks the baby to sleep.

There are said to be many other unique and novel situations that will cause the spectators to wonder at the originality of the man who produced it. "'Up in Mary's Attic' is the cleverest, most original and most whimsical narrative to ever reach the screen. That is our assertion, broad though it may seem, and we stand on it," says Murray W. Garsson. "The story was conceived by one of the cleverest writers of the day, and produced with a comedy cast which for ability and talent has never been surpassed."

Eva Novak, the pretty sister of Jane, and Harry Gribbon, one of the best known comedians, are the featured players. They are supported by nearly one hundred bathing beauties, and Minne-ha-ha, the rotund squaw who appeared in "Mickey."

General Sales Manager Schwerin announces he has received scores of letters from state rights buyers and others, together with many applications for territory, and account of the enthusiasm shown, is confident that it will set a new record in state rights sales. Many inquiries are for large sections of territory, one buyer desiring a chance to buy the entire West. Never in his experience in films has he received so many applications for territory, says Mr. Schwerin.

Frohman Will Reissue "My Own United States"

The Frohman Amusement Corporation announces that its production, "My Own United States," dealing with the lives of Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton, and originally released by Metro Pictures Corporation, is being re-edited and will be reissued, probably on state right basis, about September 1.

Arnold Daly is the star of this picture, and he is supported by a prominent case. President Sherrill, of Frohman, announces that all rights have been re-purchased from Metro, and believes this picture will prove of great interest to exhibitors at the present time.

Pioneer Finishes Press Book.

Pioneer announces that the press book on "Midnight Gambols," starring Marie Doro, is finished and copies have been mailed to the exchange managers. A feature of these books is a chapter devoted to exploitation suggestions, prepared by a committee of exchangemen and exhibitors who recently met at the conference of exchange managers in New York.

Independents Coming Into Their Own, Says Brandt on Return from Chicago

JOE BRANDT, director-general of the National Film Corporation and eastern representative of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, has just returned to New York after attending another convention in Chicago.

"It's convention after convention, these days," said Brandt, "but while there seems to be no immediate effect from any of them, the truth is that each and every one is making more solid the foundation for the independents in the motion picture industry. The independent producer and the independent exhibitor have really the same battle to fight, and these conventions are making them realize the inherent strength unionization of their efforts will develop. The exhibitors are now on the verge of an awakening and this augers well for a healthier business future for them.

"Producers have worked at great odds in distributing their product insofar as they have either had to sell out to the big fellows or attempt to distribute themselves. In the first case they would suffer financially and in the latter event, because of inequitable distribution, they would likewise suffer.

"The numerous conventions are rapidly bringing to light the solution of the independent exhibitor—independent producer problem. We may very shortly see the day when the small independent producer with a worthy picture will be able properly to market it, and where the independent exhibitor will have no difficulty in booking only pictures which he wishes to. The open market day is almost here."

Kremer Road Shows for Several Other States

Victor Kremer reports a successful engagement of the Carmen Beauties Revue and "Burlesque on Carmen" during the past week at the Empire Theatre, Buffalo, and during the current week is at the Palace in Schenectady.

Screen Crafts Inc. Enters the Field to Make Features and Short Subjects

ONE of the newest organizations to enter the film producing field is Screen Crafts, Inc., which has just commenced work on "The Great Physician," with Chadwick Ayres directing. H. M. Lawson, for many years an exhibitor, and now owner of a chain of motion picture theatres in Arizona and southern California, is president and general manager.

A capable cast has been assembled, including Robert McKim and Rhea Mitchell in the leading roles, as well as Snowden Baxendale, Arnold Gregg, Charlotte Woods, Lew Morrison, Max Davidson, Olga Gray, Maxine Adair and Robert Anderson.

The story is by Carrie B. Hutcheson, scenarized by Clarence B. Ludy and will be presented in seven reels. The story is announced as a metaphysical one, dealing with Christian Science, and will be an educational one, uplifting in tone and world-wide in appeal.

This production will be the first of three of the same general nature to be staged during the year. DeWitte Hagar is production manager and Ralph DeLacy technical director.

Plans are under way for employing four distinct companies. In addition to the series already mentioned, there will also be a series of two-reel athletic comedies featuring "Bumps" Adams, and negotiations are under way for two other series headed by well-known players.

"You Are the Only Girl I Ever Loved!"

Says Jack Sherill to Ruth Clifford in "The Invisible Ray," a serial made by the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

"Smiling Bill" Comedies to Remain One Reelers

Marion H. Kohn Productions, making the Polly Moran two-reel comedies, and Grace Cunard, two-reel westerns, announce that the "Smiling Bill" Jones comedies will be continued as single reelers. The first three "Harem Scarem," "The Blow That Killed Father" and "A Dog-Gone Shame" are now complete.

Joe Brandt announces that this series will be released on state right basis.

Frohman Completes "Invisible Ray" Serial Starring Ruth Clifford and Jack Sherrill

WITH the return of the company from Jacksonville, the Frohman Amusement Corporation announces the completion of the fifteen-episode "Invisible Ray" serial, starring Ruth Clifford and Jack Sherrill. This production was thirty-four weeks in making, scenes being taken in New York, as far west as Los Angeles and as far south as Miami.

In connection with the filming of this serial the following interesting facts are furnished: 124,180 feet of negative were used, 124 stunts photographed, in all of which either Ruth Clifford or Jack Sherrill participated except one, a dive from the ocean from a rapidly moving aeroplane 200 feet in the air.

The stunts involve the use of railroads, drawbridges, aeroplanes, motor boats, yachts, automobiles, cliffs, lighthouse, schooner, yacht, armories, tenement houses and private residences. A quarter of a mile of underground passages were built, two automobiles destroyed and a side of a hill blown out. Several of the scenes were taken in the Mason Hotel in Jacksonville and the Commodore Hotel, New York. A duplicate of the Columbia University chemical laboratory was built and destroyed.

The three cameramen, Reinhart, Earle and Peacock, claim to have thirty-two new photographic effects. Fourteen hundred and eighty-eight still photographs were taken. The largest number of scenes taken in a day was sixty-two, which is believed to establish a record.

No method of distribution has been decided upon, however; the production will not be released before September. The story of the serial is by Guy McConnell, and deals with the discovery of an unknown force powerful enough to wreck the world or prove a panacea for human ailments.

C. H. Rosenfeld Allied With New Organization

Reelcraft Describes Its Program As "A Library of Short Features"

A LIBRARY of short features" is the way Reelcraft Pictures Corporation describes its program of one and two-reel features. The company announces that so far comedies have been given first consideration because of the demand which appears to be in excess of the supply.

Four companies are engaged in making comedies for Reelcraft—Billy West, a two-reeler every other week; Alice Howell, the same; while Lee Braney is making one-reelers and Milburn Moranti two-reelers every other week.

For the followers of melodrama and speedy westerns, Texas Guinan is featured in two-reel westerns directed by Jay Hunt. Negotiations are under way whereby a well-known newspaper cartoonist will prepare an animated weekly release.

A series of interesting educationals will also be distributed by Reelcraft, and particular attention will be given to building up this feature of the program. There will be a scenic series, released one reel each week, consisting of the Burrud Sunset Scenics, taken by Leland J. Burrud, who is on an expedition filming beautiful natural scenes.

There is also planned a series of pictures featuring a popular male star, and written by a popular author, which will be released early in the fall.

National exploitation campaigns will be carried on each separate series, and a service department has been established which is working out plans for the individual exchanges.

Reelcraft Will Feature Moranti in Two-Reelers

Milburn Moranti is being featured in a series of two-reel comedies to be distributed by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, on their exclusive short subject program. He has been a motion picture actor since the early days. He has furnished the principal comedy in several different brands of comedies, and is well known to the fans and exhibitors.

Members of the supporting company include Fritzi Ridgeway, Helen Williams, Joe Bonner and Albert Huston. Glover Jones has directed and written several of his releases, while Lem Moranti, brother of Milburn, is directing at present. "Wild Wild West" will be the first release, and the date will be late in June.

Madlaine Traverse to Star in Series of Features for State Right Release

MADLAINE TRAVERSE, whose contract with Fox Film Corporation terminated recently on completion of "The Spirit of Good," will star in a series of features to be released on the state rights market. It is announced that plans for the Madlaine Traverse Productions have been completed, and work will start soon on the first picture which will be released by the new organization in August.

Miss Traverse has for the past eighteen months been a Fox star, appearing in fourteen productions, her first being "The Caillaux Case." Prior to that time she was internationally known on the stage.

Office of Madlaine Traverse Productions will be established in New York and Los Angeles, and the company plans to make four or five specials a year. She will be supported by prominent players. The first production will be "The Stain of Innocence."

Miss Traverse expects to visit New York in June and return to the Pacific Coast in July.

Parker Film Company of Dallas Added to Pioneer Film's Co-operative Chain

CONTRACTS have been signed between the Pioneer Film Corporation and Tom N. Parker, president of the Parker Film Company, Dallas, Texas, whereby the latter became a unit in the Pioneer Co-operative Distribution System.

The addition of this territory, which includes Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas, leaves only two minor sections of the country without a Pioneer distributor. Negotiations are now under way with the remaining territories of the United States and it is expected that within the next few weeks the Pioneer system of exchanges will embrace the entire United States and Canada, after which the question of foreign distribution will be taken up.

The first releases of the Parker Film Company, with headquarters in Dallas, will be Sheldon Lewis in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Mary Anderson in "Bubbles," as well as the Facts and Follies series of comedies.

Tom N. Parker has long been identified with theatrical and film activities in Texas.

Preacher Comedian to Make Extensive Tour

The Reverend George Le Roi Clarke, now starring in Paragon comedies, announces that in order to better acquaint the clergy with his gospel of fun, and secure their endorsement of screen plays, he will make a tour of the principal cities of America, starting from Los Angeles in July, going East through the southern states and returning via the northern route. The trip will take about two months, and the Reverend Clarke expects to accomplish much good.

They Will Soon Start a New Serial.

C. B. Price Names May 10 as Release Date for His "Pajama Girl," Billie Rhodes Film

THE C. P. PRICE CO., Inc., have finished the editing and titling of "His Pajama Girl," starring Billie Rhodes, which is being released on the state right plan. It has been scheduled for release on May 10th. "In its revised form," said Mr. Price, "we feel that we have not only a finished article, but a picture that will find ready demand. During my many years experience in the state right market I have found that it is just this type of production that finds the greatest demand, not only among the buyers, but also with the exhibitor. It has the proper dash of humor with a sprinkling of drama to make it interesting.

"It is of the comedy drama type, and of a vogue that is new to pictures. Many brands of girl productions have been made, but it is the first time in my memory that the Pajama Girl has been put into pictures."

"For the exploitation we are preparing a big line of matter. Many of the purchasers will put it on as a girl show. In conjunction with the picture they will present a chorus of Pajama Girls. Also it adapts itself to local tie-ups with merchants in the exploitation of their pajama sales. Many theatres will use one of the models from their local store for an opening to the picture, and in conjunction with the theatre advertising the store will announce that this model will display pajamas every afternoon at the store."

Forrest Has Dual Role in National's Reissue

An unusual feature of "Captivating Mary Carstairs," in which Norma Talmadge is starred, and which National Film Corporation is preparing to reissue, is the fact that Alan Forrest appears in a dual role, as the hero and also as the villain, and the star is mystified in distinguishing one from the other.

This production is from a novel by Henry Sydnor Harrison and was made for National by Bruce Mitchell for National several years ago. The film is being re-edited by Irene Brogen, and sales are progressing satisfactorily, says Joe Brandt. A full line of paper is now ready.

Plot Plus Quality for Kohn Short Subjects

Following his recent announcement that more stress would be laid on the plots of his short subjects, Marion H. Kohn states that it will also be his aim to make his short subjects up to the same standard of quality as now bestowed on feature subjects. They will be made with the same care, setting will be of the best and the finest cameramen employed.

"We are going to stick to the short subject field," says Mr. Kohn, "and by specializing in this expect to raise the standard of comedies, westerns and novelties, which eventually are going to be featured in the same manner as the big production by up-to-date exhibitors."

Kremer Chaplins Sold for Six More States

Victor Kremer, who is now on a sales tour, reports that practically all of the territory of the five Chaplin reissues his firm is handling have been sold. Sol Lesser has purchased these subjects for California, Arizona and Nevada, ordering twenty prints for first run bookings, and will start a whirlwind campaign.

Metro Pictures Corporation, Dallas, has secured rights to the five pictures for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Louis Burston Starts for Los Angeles To Begin Shipping "The Great Reward"

LOUIS BURSTON'S picture interests are calling him to the West Coast and early in the week of May 10 he will start for Los Angeles. His trip is started with Mr. Burston in a good frame of mind, and he declares that his business outlook upon the ensuing months is rosy.

Because the stage play, "Abraham Lincoln," has become such an uncommon success, Mr. Burston believes that Francis Ford's realization of the Great Emancipator will capitalize on the screen a great deal of the vogue of Lincolnia that now obtains. Under the title of "The Heart of Lincoln" Mr. Burston has created a surrounding for Mr. Ford's characterization that is said to register in exactness and spirit the traditions of the martyred one.

Demonstrating Ford's expertness and versatility the Burston serial, "The Great Reward," is cited as proof of that screen-star's proficiency. Mr. Burston goes to Los Angeles to see the completed serial started on its way to exhibitors, after spending six weeks here sounding out showmen on the subject of serial screenings.

"The Hawk's Trail," featuring King Baggott, has "gone over" so well that Mr. Burston's personal faith in chapter-stories is firmly fixed. When he gets to the Coast he will doubtless "start something" that has not been, as yet, revealed in connection with the Burston plans for the future.

More Papers Featuring "Hall Room Boys" Films

Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of the Hall Room Boys Comedies, in which Neeley Edwards and Hugh Fay are featured, report that additional newspaper publicity is being received on this series. The Chicago Journal is the latest of a string of papers to add the line "See them in the movies at your favorite theatre." The New York Sun is now running a full page of Hall Room Boys cartoons in the Sunday issue.

In addition, an exploitation campaign will shortly be inaugurated, including hook-ups with novelty stores in connection with the latest release, "Tell Us, Ouija," which is a two-reeler based on the present ouija board craze.

Aywon Gets World Rights to Series of Fifteen Two Reel "Joy Comedies"

NATHAN HIRSH, president of Aywon Film Corporation, announces he has just acquired world rights to the Joy Comedies and will release a series of fifteen two-reelers starring Charlie Joy, known on the stage as Charlie Granlich.

This is described as a series of up-to-the-minute comedies full of pep, action, fun, laughs and pretty girls. The first three, which are complete and ready for distribution are "Too Much Girlie," "Back to Nature" and "The Wampum Hunter."

"We will release one Joy comedy a month for the next fifteen months," says Mr. Hirsh. "I believe them to be the most laughable comedies I have ever seen. They are made up of the proper elements of real comedy, a funny story, laughable bits of business, trick photography and a bevy of unusually beautiful girls.

Latest Art-O-Graf Picture Features Violet Mersereau and Edmund Cobb

THE Art-O-Graf Film Company of Denver, of which Otis B. Thayer is director general, announces that production is well under way on "Finders Keepers," adapted from a story by Robert Ames Bennett. Edmund Cobb, star of the previous Art-O-Graf productions, "The Desert Scorpion" and "Wolves of the Street," is featured in this production, together with Violet Mersereau.

The story is a society-crook-melodrama, and is said to be filled with thrills and pep. Art-O-Graf has also secured film rights to another story by the same author, "Out of the Depths," and Mr. Cobb and Miss Mersereau will also be featured in this production.

Having finished her work in "Finders Keepers" Miss Mersereau is now en route to her home in New York.

Louise Huff Picture Announced by Pioneer

Louise Huff, in "What Women Want," will follow Marie Doro on the list of spring releases of Pioneer Film Corporation. This picture is now in the hands of the editorial staff, where it is being given the finishing touches under the direction of Southard Brown and A. Cantor, and will soon be ready for the laboratory.

A press book is also being prepared and details of an exploitation campaign arranged, which will include twenty-four sheet stands and illuminated signs on Broadway.

Sol Lesser Ready with Newest Kellerman Special and Two Other Film Productions

SOL LESSER arrived at his New York office May 3, coming from the Chicago convention of film-folks, where he stopped off on his way East from Los Angeles. From his office in Chicago Mr. Lesser and his West Coast publicist, Hamilton Beall, issued a four-page, newspaper size, bulletin covering the late film news, and advocating the various Sol Lesser enterprises in red-ink arguments addressed to the assembled picture showmen.

Maurie Meyers took the Moving Picture World man's interviewer away from Mr. Lesser long enough to tell about the "stunts" at the Chicago convention—about the "cut-outs" of Annette Kellerman that were all prepared for the banquet that was never given, about the pads of scratch paper with Kellerman standing erect in her aquatic regalia as a side ornament, and about the circular "gimicks" that were slipped over the telephone mouthpieces in all the hotel rooms where film-men claimed temporary security.

Mr. Lesser was imbued with a more stable enthusiasm than was his publicist. The man who has swung some of the biggest deals in the annals of state rights; the man who is now interested in every angle of the film business, and the man who put Broadway in competition with the sands of the Atlantic at the height of the bathing season "looked pleasant" and fidgeted himself into position for an "interview."

Producer, Distributor and Exhibitor.

"I'm not the man who shrinks publicity—for I know its value," said Mr. Lesser, "but I'm not much on interviews." Assured that we wanted to know only what the showman wanted to know and read, Mr. Lesser took kindly to a little questioning, and here's the result:

With Gore Brothers, his partners in franchise-holding for First National in Los Angeles territory, Mr. Lesser will begin active work on a beautiful theatre in downtown Los Angeles, simultaneously proceeding with a new 2,500-seat picture house at the corner of Hollywood Boulevard and Ivar street, in Hollywood.

Last Sunday, May 2, at Mack Sennett's Victory Theatre, Los Angeles, Irving Lesser presented his brother Sol's screen production, "That 'Something,'" an attraction that has already been sold to the Rotary Club of Los Angeles for a three-weeks' run at the Victory. Irving Lesser has decided to devote his entire attention to "That 'Something'" and will "sell" it to the 600 Rotary Clubs that are in the United States. Here is a field for showmanship.

Beban's "Man in a Million."

George Beban is finishing his ninth consecutive month of personal application to "One Man in a Million," a production Mr. Lesser has financed, with Beban given free hand in its preparation. The release will not be made until September of this year—after a twelvemonth of continuous preparation. Mr. Beban supervised the direction, casting, filming, cutting and titling the work, and is now giving "One Man in a Million" its final inspection and subtitling in Los Angeles.

Annette Kellerman, in "What Women Love," entering now upon its final days in the editing department, will be Sol Lesser's greatest work—for Sol said so himself. On this presentation Mr. Lesser asserts he has "gone the limit" in every detail of presentation, and for a man who bought the western half of the United States on "Hearts of the World," set a pace for bathing girls to make dry-land conquests as film adjuncts and shared in the "Mickey" prosperity, "going the limit" may be considered traveling on "high."

Ibanez Names Kellerman Film.

"We had the piece in production," said Mr. Lesser, "when Ibanez, the great Spanish author, in his speech at Philadelphia, gave us the title—'What Women Love.' Ibanez spoke of the way he believed women liked best to be treated—not as 'baby dolls' and dependents, but as self-reliant, willing shareholders in the joy of living.

"Miss Kellerman plays just the sort of role Ibanez described. She is womanly in all things womanly, and she shows how self-reliant a woman may be under any and all circumstances. Miss Kellerman has always trailed a mermaid's tail through pictures heretofore, and we decided, in placing her under contract, to give her a chance to demonstrate her abilities as an actress—but not forgetting her skill as a swimmer, an athlete and a horsewoman.

"Billing Names" to Back Stars.

"'What Women Love' fulfills every expectation. We have given Miss Kellerman an able company with names that can be billed—favorites such as Wheeler Oakman, Walter Long and Ralph Lewis—in her support. As to the production itself, we have not considered the question of money when results were at issue. This is an often-used expression, but I mean it.

"In making this picture I have interested with me some capital that is not concerned in my other interests. We have gone along with 'What Women Love' as though it were the only interest I have in pictures," said Mr. Lesser.

Asked if the Kellerman picture would go the way of First National in its distribution, Mr. Lesser said he was not at all sure. "Because of the interest others have in the picture I cannot let a matter of sentiment guide me in disposing of 'What Women Love.' When they see the production First National may or may not decide to give the terms we shall exact. The picture may be sold on state rights, we may distribute through some organization or sell outright at our price," said he.

Has Legitimate National "Hook-Up."

The World man, as an outsider, was interested most keenly in "That 'Something'"—because of the great elements of showmanship it possessed in connction with its Rotary Club hook-up; something that picture men had never before availed themselves of in a national way. The World man saw visions of 600 clubs, representing the cream of business men in as many cities, "getting behind" a picture, guaranteeing ticket sales, boosting by personal effort, and backing the enterprise, locally, with the best brain of 600 towns.

It looked so good to Sol Lesser when the work was under way that he has detached his brother, Irving, from the other Lesser enterprises (as has been noted elsewhere) to devote himself solely to exploiting the Rotary clubs and "listing" the show. "Listing" is a method known generally in Lyceum work—agents going into a town, canvassing the business men, and securing ticket guarantees to meet the expense of a specific attraction.

Playing to Ticket Guarantees.

With "That 'Something'" the "listing" will be done by Rotary clubs. The initial presentation at Sennett's Victory, in Los Angeles, demonstrates the possibilities. The Los Angeles Rotary Club had sold tickets enough to guarantee twenty-one days before the show opened—and it will stay as long as Rotarians provide the audience, plus the "drop in."

"That 'Somthing'" was written as a story of Rotarians by W. W. Woodbridge, of Tacoma. It has been circulated by the million copies at the hands of Rotarians throughout the country, and so great was its hit as a printed story that a screen production, in six reels, was made and secured by Mr. Lesser for distribution.

An Exterior and Interior Scene from Annette Kellerman's "What Women Love."
With Annette waylaying a shark from her perch on the main boom. Sol Lesser prides himself on this his first production for the screen.

How Sennettville Itself Put Over Producer's New "Down on the Farm"

LAST week it was told how the Imperial, San Francisco, got "Down on the Farm" started. This is the story of how his own home town paid tribute to Mack Sennett in Los Angeles.

The show was booked at the Kinema and the Saturday before the opening the Sennetters invaded the ball park and gave a ballyhoo that amounted to something. "Teddy" was there dragging his trainer in a kid's express wagon, the balky mule was in line, as was the Sennett baby actor and some grown-ups, gotten up in impersonation of the stars.

Every old wagon on the Sennett lot was paraded around the park, and some seemingly impromptu stunts were pulled off.

On the Streets, Too.

Of course, they all had to get to the park and they took the longest way around so as to hike over the business streets and show the downtowners what they were missing by not going to the ball game. The event had been widely advertised as "Sennett Day" and most of the town was out on the bleachers, but for the benefit of those who were not, a number of stunts were pulled.

One of the best was the planting of cameramen on the housetops. Apparently they were about to shoot some airplane comedy and presently the street would become packed, when a banner announcing the showing at the Kinema would be dropped, and the stung crowd would move on to give place to a fresh crop of victims.

Got the Crowd.

All of this worked to make for business the following day, when the run was opened, and the house was packed. Teddy and young John Henry ballyhooed the lobby and took chances on being trampled to death.

The orchestra worked a village band selection for local color and on the stage Teddy and John Henry and the mule and some of the other animals and eight men and women worked in a barnyard prologue to get the audience in the proper frame of mind. A special Sennett song was sung, and some of Charley Murray's humor was spread upon the screen.

And the Records.

And, lest there be any mistake, the house management announces the fracturing of the:

Best Sunday record.
Best Monday record.
Best Tuesday record.
Best Wednesday record.
Best Thursday record.
Best Friday record.
Best Saturday record.
Best week's record.

Outside of that they are not talking much about big business and broken records, but they seem to feel they have covered the ground pretty thoroughly.

Monkeyed with Airplane for Five-Day Front-Page Stories

GIVING a new twist to the aerial advertisement, G. E. Brown, publicity man for Memphis Enterprises, Inc., got front-page stories for five days within a week for "What's Your Husband Doing?" at one of his houses.

The Sanger shows winter in Memphis and Patsy, one of the lady simians of the circus outfit, was told she could get her picture in the papers if she would take an air ride without making too much fuss about it. Patsy held out for a quart of peanuts in addition to the publicity, and when the deal was closed Brown hustled down to the newspaper offices with stories of the first monkey aviatrix.

Of course the papers fell hard. Dogs and goats and birds had been used, but a Memphis monkey was to be the first primate to go flying through the air and write the town down in aviation history. Brown got such good results on the first drive that he beat Patsy to it in voluntarily raising her peanut wage.

Then Patsy was taken out to the aviation field of the Memphis Aerial Company, ostensibly to get accustomed to the machine. About a thousand persons, forewarned, gathered to watch the experiment and see how Patsy took to it. She was game to the core and even the motors did not phase her. Not for nothing had she traveled with a circus most of the years of her young life.

Then the big story broke when Patsy actually took the trip and showered passes on the crowd, and Brown got a new scrap book and the Strand a new bank book. Patsy encored the peanuts.

Similarity Contest a Hit; Newspaper Took an Encore

JIMQUIN, of the Rialto, El Paso, persuaded the Herald to dig into a similarity contest for the double of Wanda Hawley, working on the familiar submitted photograph lines. He assured the Herald it would be good for the paper.

He didn't have to say, "I told you so." The paper beat him to it by announcing a new contest for a double for another star at another house. Jimquin didn't mind. He had skimmed the cream of it and got what he wanted, but he was pleased at the unsolicited testimonial to his idea.

Now that he has parked his cares at the Rialto he is working stunts to beat the band and they have had to hire an extra reporter just to watch Jim. It's a dull day he cannot dig at least two real news items to supplenment the stuff most managers consider as press work. And nine times out of ten he makes the front page. He does not count double page hook-ups. He gets one of those about every other week.

The ten-line space with a kick is better than a poor full page.

"How Are You Going to Keep 'Em Down on the Farm?" Asks the Song.

Mack Sennett supplies the answer in his new five-reel, "Down on the Farm." They have so much fun they couldn't be driven away to the city. This is how the Kinema, Los Angeles, prologued the comedy. Jack Callicott put on the stunt.

Here's a Record Advance Advertisement

Mercy Declares Newspaper Advertising Best in End

ANALYZING publicity conditions in small towns, Frederick Mercy, who now has three theatres in Yakima, Wash., declares in favor of the newspapers for best results. He does not decry other forms of advertising as supplemental to the newspaper work, but contends that they should augment and not seek to replace the newspaper columns in small towns.

Lobby displays may serve where there is transient trade to be reached, but it appeals only to those who regularly pass the house, and he looks to the lobby display to do the work other managers intrust to the prologue. For "In Old Kentucky," for example, he made a paddock out of his lobby, not so much in the expectation of creating business as in anticipation of adding to the entertainment of the patrons gained through other schemes.

Special mail matter is good only if not made common through overuse, and this holds good of other special forms, but the newspaper is consulted week in and week out by those who seek amusement and even the weekly program cannot replace newspaper advertising where this is financially possible.

Mr. Mercy's arguments on the lobby display are novel, but they have a sound basis. They can be made to serve as an addition to the entertainment as the patron who passes through a paddock lobby to witness "In Old Kentucky" is sent into the house in a proper frame of mind to be most strongly impressed by the production.

Texas All-Boy Audience Made Good Exploitation

CLEANING up "Huckleberry Finn" with the kiddies is one of the popular stunts, but Leslie F. Whelan, of the Dallas Paramount staff, added some trimmings when he hitched the Dispatch up to the kids and the story.

The Dispatch issued a coupon, good if presented by any school boy in the grammar grades, and the Old Mill was packed from screen to back wall with just boys of the proper hell-raising age. They whooped it up for the show and went out to tell the world.

But Whelan was not done with them. The Dispatch offered prizes for the best essays on the picture and printed some of the best, and all of the funniest, letting the stuff run a full week because it was good copy.

That was the big angle. The free show got the kids and their parents, but the essays got the entire town. Just mark that down for future reference. You can work it, too.

Gave Two Months' Notice of Intended Return Engagement

ADVERTISING the intended return of "In Old Kentucky" for two months enabled the management of the Orpheum, Fond du Lac, to break two records with a single attraction.

Originally the picture was booked for four days, commencing January 19. Good advertising put it over so strong that the crowd has not been cleaned up at the end of the fourth day, and the manager wired in for a return engagement, at the same time announcing in his regular advertising: Coming Back as Soon as We Can Get It Anita Stewart in "In Old Kentucky."

The return engagement could not be arranged for until March 28-29, but the line kept appearing right along and pretty soon the town was worked up to a new fever. The persistent advertising was getting in its work. Those who missed the first showings were determined to see it when it came back, and those who had already seen it wanted to see it again.

A week before the return it was announced that to accommodate all who wished to see the picture, which could only be secured for two days, an extra performance would be given each night. The third day of the original engagement broke the single day record, and the return, with its extra performances, carried off the six day record; not the record for six days with one picture, but the record for any six days, which is going some.

Talking About Stage Audiences! Look Up.

Several thousand boys—and no girls—formed a special audience at the Old Mill, Dallas, Texas, as guests of a local paper to enjoy the antics of "Huckleberry Finn." The roof still stays on, but it was severely tested.

Got an Effective Prologue with Simple Light Effects

WHILE other managers complain that only the large houses can use the prologue effectively, one of the large houses, the New Garrick, Minneapolis, got an effective curtain raiser with simple light effects plus a little elementary painting.

The picture was "The River's End," which, of course, calls for emphasis on the Arctic locale. At the opening the stage was dimly lighted to show a group of igloos sketched in blue and gray upon beaver board. All of the lights were blue and were cut down almost to the limit, slowly rising as the scene proceeded.

Presently the aurora began to flash on the sky, first white than yellow, changing to flaming red, and as this died out a snow storm began which increased in intensity as the lights slowly went down to blackness.

The New Garrick possesses a felt curtain for lighting effects, though any white curtain will serve as a pinch. The aurora was done with a double ripple and the snow effect was also done with a stereopticon. At a pinch home-made wheels can be made to serve, one punctured for the snow and the other a double wheel, slotted, the discs being moved in opposite directions. It is more simple than it sounds, but effective all out of proportion to the labor involved. Mr. Johnson also used a carryall such as is used in one of the opening scenes of the play, but this is merely a detail.

Used Street Sari Touting "The Virgin of Stamboul"

WORKING the street stunt in a new way got "The Virgin of Stamboul" over very nicely at the Allen Theatre, Toronto. It was worked differently and therefore more effectively.

Sam W. B. Cohn, the exploitation man, gets up the stunts for the Allen and then passes them along to the seven suburban houses and some fifty odd Allen theatres throughout the Dominion. He figured he could make a big clean-up with the visitor from Turkey if he went at it right, so he studied it out and decided on a perambulator without the usual banners.

Sari and her Sheik drove through the downtown streets in an impeccable victoria. Every block or so the rig would draw up to the curb and Sari handed out small cards to all who wanted them—which included about everyone in sight.

These were topped with "See what Sari saw in the Harem." Below, in the name space, was "Introducing Sari, 'The Virgin of Stamboul,'" set in three lines, and in the lower left hand corner "At Home Week commencing Monday, April 26. Allen Theatre."

There was absolutely no advertising on the turnout and only the gaily colored costumes were in the least out of the ordinary, so the people had to get cards to find the answer, if they did not mentally connect the show title with the nationality of the pair, and most persons carried away the cards and showed them to others—which was what Mr. Cohn counted on.

September 23, 1911, Epes Winthrop Sargent established in Moving Picture World the first department applying to Advertising for Exhibitors. Without missing an issue he has continued it ever since—eight years of efficient helps to the showman.

Who Will Be the First to Hook-up an Undertaker?

First National Again Uses Dual Booking to Good End

FOLLOWING the joint booking of "In Old Kentucky" at the Strand and Tivoli theatres, San Francisco, the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has repeated the stunt by booking Katherine McDonald into Loew's Strand and Metropolitan theatres, Cleveland, with equally good results.

The Strand is a downtown house while the Metropolitan is a little out of the central district, but reasonably close competition. Both showed "The Turning Point" for a week to big business and got a larger display for a smaller cost to each house, which is one of the valuable features of this scheme. Another almost equally strong angle is the moral effect on the prospective patron.

With "The Turning Point" and "In Old Kentucky" both successful, the spread of the scheme is to be anticipated, although when first tried by the Universal some years ago the stunt did not seem to get over very strongly. The idea has many angles of interest and the advantages are sufficiently strong to suggest dual bookings even in other wise competing houses

Dance Hall Again Assists Picture Publicity Scheme

GUYON'S PARADISE, a Chicago dancing academy, is rapidly becoming a first aid to press schemes. The dance palace uses boards on all of the elevated stations and several times lately has shared these boards with some local attraction, knowing the benefit of a picture hook-up. The most recent is a tie-up with the Republic's "The Girl of the Sea," playing at the Bandbox, using an attractive cut of Betty Hilburne to announce a "Girl of the Sea Dance" with $50 in prizes to the prettiest girls. The prize was split three ways, $25, $15 and $10.

If You Are a Mister Hyde Use Right Razor and Change

SOMETIMES a hook-up seems to be pretty far fetched, but we think that hooking "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" to a safety razor in stretching it pretty far, yet the allusion was apt and humorous and it struck in.

The Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, got an elaborate hook up with the Barrymore version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" through the Gillette safety razor. The illustration shows the central part of the window with a revolving stage, one of the interiors offering Dr. Jekyll and the other showing Mr. Hyde, the stage being built to the scale of the stills. This was hooked to a motor and the two scenes were alternately presented.

Above hung a huge announcement card showing the player in both characters. Opposite Hyde was shown the old fashioned razor and Jekyll faced a safety. The lettering was so placed that the "Dr. Jekyll" served as a legend both for the portrait and the safety razor while the same held good for the other. To the right of the stage a card read "If you use a Gillette you won't have to Hyde." A balancing card announced the feature at the theatre.

Apart from the turntable feature this display can be adapted by anyone, two fixed sets being used where a turntable cannot be rigged. The wall paper is small figured cloth and doll's furniture can be used to dress the set.

The display was run for two weeks; the week of showing and one week in advance.

Manager Worked Every Possible Angle to Make Certain He Would Get Business

BEFORE you quit cold because you cannot get a window or because you think it will not pay to have a banner painted or to buy ten extra three sheets, sit down and read this story of Thomas Proffin, of the William Penn Theatre, Chester, Pa.

Chester is not so big a place as some others, and it is not as small as some other towns. It's just an average live wire place, with perhaps not too much juice running through the wires—except certain strands. Mr. Proffin is one of the surcharged strands.

Lately he booked in "Pollyanna." Then he figured that with a book title like that he could mop the town up if he went at it right.

Then He Began.

He did not start in by sitting on the edge of his chair and telling himself that the town was too large or too small or too live or too dead. He did not seek to provide himself with an alibi before he started in. He was a bit curious to see just what he could do when he got started.

One of the things which suggested business was hook-up windows. That listened so well he decided to have a few. Other managers in other towns seemed to get show windows and he couldn't, for the life of him, see why he could do not the same little thing.

He did.

He got fourteen.

Good Ones, Too.

He was no hog. He did not get everything in sight, but he got fourteen of the best, including a book store, auto sales room, drug store, two electric light companies, a newspaper office, a clothing store, the gas company, a clothing store, a department store and four others.

For these he made cutouts and signs, hooking up the "glad" stuff with the contents of the window. Electric appliances made you glad, spring tonics made you glad, even the newspaper comics contributed to the general gladness.

Then he stuck a banner in front of the house and put another on a building nearby with a huge fist pointing to the location of the fount of gladness.

That Wasn't Enough.

That might seem to be enough. More than one play has gone over strong with fewer than fourteen windows on the job, but Mr. Proffin was just beginning to be interested. He had read of the success of newspaper hook-ups on special matinees. There were two papers handy, so he arranged for one-sixth of a dozen of special matinees.

This, of course, brought the newspapers into the game strong, and he did not have to worry so much about press work, so he could give his attention to getting up a lot of lithographs and attending to little details like that.

Job Didn't Scare Him.

Taken by and large, he advertised "Pollyanna" so thoroughly that the next week they found a man who had not seen the play and they put him in a jar of alcohol in the local museum.

Mr. Proffin just didn't let the job scare him.

Lion Roar for "Lost City"

Next time you have an installment of "The Lost City," mount a six or the big 24-sheet and back of it pit a small boy with a lion roar. To make this you need only a tin pail, a piece of catgut and a rosined cloth or glove. Punch a hole in the bottom of the pail, knot the gut and string it through and with the pail under one foot and the loose end of the gut in the left hand work the rosined cloth up and down the cord. S. A. Arnold worked this years ago. It is just as good now.

Some Razors Flay Your Hide. Gillettes Take Off Your Hyde.

At least that is what this San Francisco window hook-up claims. How the Imperial Theatre collaborated with a razor concern for Paramount's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." The scene, like the hero, is reversible.

Big Ideas in Tabloid Form. The Idea Counts

Advance Jekyll and Hyde to Pave Way for Play Showing

EMPLOYING two men dressed to represent Jekyll and Hyde several days in advance of the picture was the way the Rialto, New Haven, got over "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" for four rainy days. One man was dressed as Jekyll and the other as Hyde. Each was assigned to a different section of the town that they might not conflict.

Each would greet passing men with an inquiry for the other personality, Hyde's question being: "Do you know where I can find Dr. Jekyll? It is essential that I find him at once." The Jekyll added that Hyde's terrible appearance would identify him at once.

It required little deduction to gather that the play would presently be announced at one of the local houses, and when the Rialto advertising was begun the public was already prepared for it. They were sold except for the playing dates well in advance of the advertising. If the dressing of the Hyde character presents too many difficulties, there is at least nothing to prevent the use of a Jekyll, who should be dressed as a professional man. He could, if desired, present small cards suitably printed. These should not be larger than the regulation business cards.

Used Sockless Sirens for Booming "The Turning Point"

USING ten really pretty girls to parade the streets with sued clad feet minus socks and with unbound hair was the way John de Steffano, of the Queen, Dallas, put over Katherine McDonald in "The Turning Point."

Preparing for the story with a "You'll reach the turning point next Sunday" flashed on the screens of the Hulsey theatres, in the newspapers and on the billboards, Mr. De Stefano had the town wondering what was to be sprung. Everyone was watching on Sunday and they did not have to look very hard. When the feature opened on Sunday the streets in the downtown section were patrolled by the ten young women with signs pinned to the backs of their filmy pink waists. Everyone turned to look back and then streaked to the box office to find out all about it.

Advance Advertising Helped When Display was Curtailed

CHARLES PACINI, of the Majestic and Butterfly theatres, Kenosha, Wis., has decided that it pays to advertise well in advance. When he booked "The River's End" recently, he began his campaign two weeks in advance, planning to wind up with a splash for the tomorrow announcement. And just before the opening the strike came, the local paper had to cut down to the bone to make the visible supply last, and Pacini had to take what he could get instead of what he wanted. The show got over on the advance work where it might have been blanketed on the short run boom.

Two New Suggestions for Hook-up Page Connections

PARAMOUNT exploitation men do not confine their activities to "Everywoman" and "On with the Dance," though the use of these stunts might suggest that this is the case. Hal Oliver, out in the Omaha district, put over a new one for "Excuse My Dust" the other day when he hooked an automobile concern into a full page with the Strand. Most of the space was taken with a reverse cut for the play and Harold Lloyd's "Haunted Spooks." The theatre had a box on the right and the automobile a slightly larger space on the left with line cuts of two models at the bottom of the page. It worked better than a general hook up and gave a really attractive looking page.

Benjamin Laskin, of the Charlotte, N. C., exchange, also put over a page for the Imperial with "His House in Order." This is a new one and it lends itself well to furnishings. The hook-ups covered a book store, a building and loan association, a savings bank, the Public Utilities Company and an electric wiring concern, two piano agencies, two furniture stores, a drug store and the theatre space.

It does not have to be a super feature if you can get the right angle on the title.

This Newspaper Service Includes Window Shows

SERVICE is a terribly overworked word these days, but the Anaconda Standard, Butte, gives its windows to back up its picture advertisers. The cut shows a window planned for the Goldwyn pictures, but the display is changed twice a week, with two windows, and everyone gets a chance.

A Window Board in a Newspaper Office Devoted to Picture Stills for Advertisers.

Most newspapers let their windows lie idle or else give space to a bulletin of late news, but the Standard seems to feel that by helping the theatres it will help its own advertising columns, and this idea of reciprocity explains the local use of large spaces. It almost invariably happens that the size of the newspaper spaces used is in direct proportion to the willingness of the paper to help its theatrical advertisers.

Used Auto Airplane for the Locklear "Great Air Robbery"

AIRPLANE stunts are getting too common to attract the attention they once commanded, but the Moon Theatre, Omaha, putting over the Universal-Jewel "The Great Air Robbery," with Lieut. Locklear, used an amateur aviator to fly over the town dropping bills and passes, but it made a clean-up with a hubrid with an auto body and airplane wings invented by Guy Smith, a local man. The stunt worked well.

All the Boys Came to See the Choir Singers' Pulchritude.

Mrs. McClendon, of Avant, Okla., wanted a prologue for Equity's "Eyes of Youth." She did not worry because she had no facilities. She hired two church choirs to sing, dressed them to match the picture and laughed at bad weather. Prologues are not difficult to put on if you use a little common sense. Allah knows Avant is no production center.

Are You Looking for a Home? Here's an Idea

Buried Treasure Stunt Is Still Good for a Cleanup

CHARLES VOLLMER, of the Lyric and Washington, Belleville, Ill., slightly changed the title of the new Rex Beach, and by calling it the silver hoard instead of "The Silver Horde" got an excuse for working the buried treasure stunt in conjunction with the News-Democrat. The Goldwyn press department calls it a new idea, but you can find it on page 217 of Picture Theatre Advertising.

As Mr. Vollmer worked it, he announced that the silver hoard was buried somewhere in town, using the slogan, "Watch for the Hoard of Silver, Watch for 'The Silver Horde.'" Several small chests were planted in vacant lots containing small silver coins and passes to the performance. These locations the newspaper vaguely hinted at in the succeeding issues until the last of the twelve had been discovered and exhumed. Some of the tips were purposely easy, but a few were hidden out to permit the contest to run over several days.

This buried treasure stuff was all the run in England before the war, where it was used by the weekly papers as a circulation scheme, and the craze reached such proportions that the stunt had to be stopped, owing to the heavy property damages. If you work it steer clear of private property and premises.

Now the Key Stunt Works for "The Woman in Room 13," Too

WHOEVER started the lost key stunt evidently did something. The most recent use is in connection with Goldwyn's "The Woman in Room 13." Twenty keys were "lost" on the streets of Detroit with a tag reading: "13. Keep this key. Look through the Lost and Found columns of the Detroit Free Press."

In the classified advertising the key was advertised as lost with a suitable reward offered, the finder to return the key to the box office of the Adams Theatre.

Two seats were given each person turning in one of the keys and one of the house staff was kept busy losing the keys again. Ordinary baggage tags were used with the keys and the lettering was done on a typewriter.

From the fact that the newspaper gave only a brief comment it would appear that this was worked as a house stunt, but it suggests a hook-up with the newspaper for a big splurge if the paper has a live advertising manager.

Si Spitzer Appreciates the Compliment Paid Nick Ayer

LAST week we printed an appreciative comment on an advertisement used by Nick Ayer for the second week of "Down on the Farm" at the Imperial, San Francisco.

Now appeareth Si Spitzer, of the Goldwyn Corporation, to thank us for them kind words, pointing out that this is more or less of a paraphrase of an advertisement for "The Blooming Angel" appearing in this paper in the issue dated January 17.

All right. We'll make it a double header. It was clever of Si to adapt it from commercial advertising and it was just as clever of Nick to see its possibilities for a daily insertion. And to save writing another paragraph, it was gosh darned clever of the first egg who thought of this idea. That ought to clean it all up.

Street Car Tickets Were Added to Free Showings

FIVE charity matinees with two street car tickets with each free pass sets the record for special matinees. Add to this 5,000 cards distributed by airplane, 20,000 mailing cards, 25,000 reprints from the house program and something more than 1,260 column inches of advertising space, and you can imagine how Finkelstein and Ruben put Mary Miles Minter over in "Anne of Green Gables" in Minneapolis.

The five special morning showings were under the patronage of well-known society people, and the mailing lists for these specials were made up by the Associated Charities and two street car tickets were attached to each ticket to provide transportation. The actual patronesses at each performance were featured in the daily news stories of the events.

The opening gun was a five twenties in each of the three papers, following with a pair of tens the next day. The opening called for two advertisements each three tens and two of the papers got an additional three fifteens. For the run three tens were taken in each paper in addition to the regular house space.

The posted paper included fifty 24-sheets and 30,000 snipes in two styles.

Outside of that they didn't do very much.

Idol Dancer Has Nothing on Sari If it Comes to Cases

USING a "cooch" dancer in a prologue to "The Virgin of Stamboul," was one of the stunts designed by the Superba, Los Angeles, to get over the Universal-Jewel.

The setting showed a roof top overlooking the city, with a lot of atmosphere in the background and Lola Gonzales very much in the foreground dancing for the delectation of her Sheik. If they used the line "See what Sari saw in the Harem," they made good better than the play does, for the Superba audiences saw a lot for their money, and it did not hurt the attraction in the least. It was in keeping with the oriental atmosphere of the story and made an appropriate and sightly interlude.

It also suggests a good idea for a ballyhoo where it is customary to employ such devices. Show a dancer, tell them to see what Sari saw and get two ticket takers, if your audience is of that sort.

Used News Picture to Help Mildred Harris' New Picture

MANY, if not all, of those who booked the Mildred Harris Chaplin First National release, "The Inferior Sex" hooked up with the news to get interest for the star, but the Strand, Louisville, went a bit further and got a two column picture of the star and her husband right alongside the house's three tens.

Shunted Easter Bonnets for "The Silver Horde" Display

GETTING a window in a big department store just at a time when merchants were using all available space to show the spring styles is the score hung up by Miss Jean Darnell, of the Goldwyn publicity in the Texas district.

Persuading Wolf and Marx that a novelty window would help their other displays, she got one of the best locations in San Antonio for the Majestic's showing of "The Silver Horde" with a skin and blanket draped room in which a squaw and a white girl are the central points. Two large signs were displayed for the attraction while the store took its own hook-up from the copies of the book liberally scattered around.

And the novelty of the display drew a crowd which overflowed to the other windows, which is a point to remember when you want to talk a man out of a window he thinks he wants for himself. One window for a novelty will make his other windows draw better.

One Solution of the Struggle for Apartments.

Hire a commodious show window and set up light housekeeping. How a Goldwyn exploitation woman got a showing in San Antonio for "The Silver Horde."

Rig an Adaptation of the Jumping Jack

Grauman Lead the Way, Now Others Follow the Lead

IT begins to look as though the Grauman houses would have to think up something new. For a time the Grauman theatres in Los Angeles used a distinctive style of display, the essential of which was a space cut through the centre by a black band employing the title. It was worked in various ways and various shapes, but the main idea was the same. Now the Grauman style is used in various parts of the country since we began to praise these spaces and other Los Angeles houses are working along the same lines.

A Copy of the Grauman Advertising Style.

This is a very pretty display from the California, Los Angeles, a seven fifteens. But Grauman still has the advantage in that the two houses riding one above the other can do right down the page. Something new in this California display is an organ solo "accompanied by atmospheric stage presentations." It sounds interesting.

Jumping Jacks Are Easy to Work

HOW about the jumping jack stunt which was much used some time ago, but which seems to have been forgotten? It is very simple and right now an actual jumping jack is holding up from 20 to 100 persons in front of a show window on Broadway. The jack is in the window and each time the door is opened or closed a string tied to the handle makes the jack kick its legs and attract attention to the contents of the window.

A regular motion might not work as well. It is the intermittent movement which seems to get the crowd. Fasten a string to the top of your own entrance door, run it over pulleys to some sign in the front of the lobby and you can get all of the value of a motor effect without anything like the cost. For that matter you can articulate a cut out three sheet and make an actual jumping jack for a lobby stand.

Was Careful to Explain "The Brat" Was Not Scenic

WILLIAM SHARPE, of the Amuzu, Winston-Salem, in doing his work for "The Brat" made a good point in explaining that it was "Different." Not a stupendous, massive spectacular picture, but one that thrills you by the dramatic scenes, the appealing humor, the deep tragedy and the genius of the great Nazimova." We think this a point well made. "The Brat" followed "The Red Lantern" and it is possible that many persons would be disappointed in that the newer picture did not follow the scenic lines of the other.

In anticipating criticism, Mr. Sharpe got his patrons in ready to enjoy the artistry of the player without looking for big street mobs and similar effects. He used six large displays for this single picture for a two-day run. None of them carried cuts, but by using open composition he got important looking displays with comparatively small spaces as this four eights shows. His largest space was a "tomorrow" set four inches across the page, but his smallest, a double six, loomed large.

Half Box Does as Well as Full Frame for a Binding

THIS three-column sixty-line advertisement from the Baltimore Sun seems to be an adaptation of C. F. Givan's one-column reverse frame. It works just as well as a two-column and holds in the advertisements just as well as would a box around all four sides. Mr. Depkin further helps the display by breaking the two panels. If he had two sides virtually alike with the stars and titles matched, the effect would be confusing, but by putting the talk for "The Blue Pearl" above the title and that for the Hammerstein film below the name, he gets a staggered effect and both displays get more attention because they are read separately.

A Good Example of a Small Display.

The eye does not travel across the entire space. It comes to the end of a line. Opposite is type which does not match, so the eye drops to the next line and reads down instead of all the way across. This simple expedient more than doubles the value of the display and at very little trouble. It is merely a case of thinking it out and then doing it properly.

The regular arrangement would probably please a printer better, for he is educated to regard an orderly layout, but printers form a small portion of your paying patrons and it is better to displease your printer and get the paid tickets in.

Line Frame Works as Well as Solid Black for Border

USING a hatched line effect for a frame worked well for the Wizard, Baltimore, and gave a better result on the page than a solid black would have yielded. The whole display is good, the copy well written and the composition is better than average. Using an upper and lower case instead of all upper gives much greater prominence to the title and this same idea is carried out throughout the display. It gives an example of what can be done by an intelligent printer to back up the efforts of the man who writes the copy. The space is only a three eight and a halfs, but it looks like a quarter on the page because it stands out above the more usual displays.

Monthly Programs Are Coming Back Strong

MONTHLY programs seem to be coming back after a lapse due chiefly to the war. Before the shortage in everything struck us the monthly program was one of the best bets in the advertising scheme, but the rising costs made it necessary to drop many aids. Now managers are starting in again, and seem to turn more to the monthly than the weekly announcement, keeping the show for the month before the patron. This is a better scheme than a weekly where it can be handled, and bookings now permit the attractions to be arranged for well in advance.

The Grand Theatre, Faribault, Minn., is the latest in line with a very neat issue of four pages, small enough to go into the coat pocket or be folded for the shopping bag. The cover carries a line cut of some star and the back some underline or general text, the inside pages being devoted to the list of coming attractions nicely laid out. Neither of the samples sent will reproduce on account of their color, but the layout is unusually good. Perhaps the management will send you a copy if you want to follow in their steps, but don't forget a stamped and addressed returned envelope.

Used Different Days for the Various School Parties

ALTHOUGH the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, took advantage of the Easter recess to make special appeal to the school children through the designation of different days for the schools of the Detroit system, the same idea can be used for after school matinees for "Huckleberry Finn" and other plays appealing especially to the child. The Strand took a five twelves to advertise Huck to the school children, designating different days for the different schools as shown in the lower portion of the display.

A special notice to parents just above urged them to send the children to the matinees while they attended the evening performance. The idea of making special days for the different schools is a good one. but we think that to juggle the names out of the alphabetical list would make it look still more like a special event. In this the Monday show is allotted to A-C with D-H for Tuesday and so on. The arrangement looks too casual. Making out the list by sections would give a better appearance.

Better Edit Your Hook-Up Pages

THE Majestic, Jackson, Mich., sends in a hook-up double page for "Pollyanna" along the old lines, but one clothing store advertised that the reason Miss Pickford got a divorce was not Fairbanks, but the fact that Moore did not wear a certain brand of clothes they handle. Probably they thought this was clever, but it certainly did not help the theatre any. A certain editorial supervision over the copy for a hook-up page is needed.

Jazzy Lines Dispense With Elaborate Sales Arguments

SEVERAL years ago—three or four—Ralph Ruffner invented "Put the cat out and COME" to sell a story, and a lot of people stopped between the box office and their seats to assure him that the cat had been put out. The New Liberty Theatre, location unknown, has at last improved that old standby with "Leave the supper untouched—the baby with a friend —the dishes in the sink—if you have to—but COME." This is the four lines just below the title in this three eights. We think Ruffner has been passed, at last, on this line. This entire display is well handled. The top line is in the same spirit and epitomizes all of the clever lines in the press boo s into an eight word sentence. Where such lines can be evolved there is no need for labored selling talk. The jounce in the announcement works for the story and creates the suggestion that the production must be worth seeing. If you do not make the mistake of trying to put over a poor show with this device you can dispense with a lot of copy writing—though it is more difficult to write a couple of snappy sentences than to grind out a half column of straight copy.

Made Neilan's "River's End" Bring Back "Old Kentucky"

Neilan's name. It is probable that "In Old Kentucky" could have come back as a rebook to good business, but bringing it back to finish out a "Marshall Neilan Week" gave a little extra kick to the return and make it more probable that the receipts will be large. "The River's End" was played Monday to Friday, and the Stewart picture slid in for Friday and Saturday. It is a new and good way of putting over a re-book. Just keep it in mind. You may need it some time. And before you let go note that this is another example of using almost too much talk in a half page and yet getting it read.

Doing Things Just Right

MORE than once we have had to comment upon the manner in which the Mercy attractions do their stunts, but here is another example of how to do things right. There is to be a new Mercy house opened in Ya'kima, Wash., and the invitation might well be a wedding invitation. It is possibly printed from type, but so well done as to get even an expert guessing. It is on precisely the same dead finish heavy paper used for social events and is inclosed in the usual double envelope and sent out at letter postage.

Nothing anywhere along the line is permitted to slip up. It is all as correct as the announcement of the marriage of a millionaire's daughter and just as well done. Mr. Mercy figures that if a thing is worth doing at all it is worth doing properly, and in consequence he opens the house with the patrons feeling that this is not just another picture theatre, but something worth while. It is only a little more trouble, not much more expense, but it makes a tremendous difference in results.

House Name Ready When Completed.

THE "Mars" is the name that has been chosen by the board of directors of the Luna Amusement Company, of Lafayette, for the handsome new theatre which the company is going to erect on the site recently acquired on North Sixth street, between Main and Columbia streets. A prize of $25 was awarded to F. D. Louth, living near Lafayette, for submitting the chosen name. More than a thousand different titles were suggested.

The company selected the name because it harmonizes with "Luna" the name of one of the theatres now operated by the concern, and because it is unique, easy to spell and easy to pronounce. So far as is known it is the first time the name has been given to a theatre in America. Among the names suggested were Rainbow, Pershing, the Playhouse, Lafayette, Argonne, Marne and scores of others.

Theatres Change House Managers.

J. A. Obreshk, who has several theatres in the Calumet district in the northern part of Indiana, has announced a change of management in two of his theatres. E. J. Lehman, for eight months in charge of the Venus Theatre, Gary, has been transferred to manager the Lyric Theatre, also of Gary. Edward Schultzer, who has been assistant manager of the Star Theatre, Whiting, has been chosen to succeed Mr. Lehman at the Venus.

The new LeRose Theatre at Jeffersonville, owned by Micheal Switow, will be opened at an early date. The new structure is ornately decorated, arranged conveniently and is said to be equipped as well as any of the smaller theatres in Louisville, Ky., which is just across the river. Mr. Switow, who also operates the Dream Theatre, Jeffersonville, intends to use the LeRose exclusively for motion pictures and will present a combination program of vaudeville and pictures at the Dream.

To Lay Cornerstone at Stanley.

APPROPRIATE ceremonies wil mark the laying of the cornerstone of the new Stanley Theatre at the corner of Nineteenth and Market streets, which is announced by Jules Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, for 3 o'clock Saturday, May 8.

Arrangements being made for the exercises include a concert from 2 to 3 o'clock by Hummell's Military Band, under the direction of Silas E. Hummell; addresses by William C. Remodeling Cross-Keys Theatre.

Sablosky and McGuirk, directors of the Cross-Keys Theatre, are completing extensive decorations in marble throughout the lobby and stairway. The interior of the theatre is receiving special treatment in fine marble work, which has greatly improved the appearances of the house. All oak doors and woodwork have been replaced with old mahogany of pompeein design and a new box office has been built directly at the front of the theatre to match, having exceptional artistic features.

Nixon-Nirdlinger Acquire Coliseum.

The Coliseum Theatre, Sixtieth and Market, has been acquired by the Nixon-Nirdlinger interests. The Coliseum will undergo improvements from time to time so that in a very few weeks it will be up to the same standard of personal management evidenced in other theatres under the Nixon-Nirdlinger direction.

Guy Burley who has been the successful manager of the Rivoli will be transferred to the new house. Mr. Tower of the Coliseum, will be transferred to the Victoria in Baltimore, while Hod McKenna, recently of Nixon's Opera House, Dover, Del., will be temporarily in charge of the Rivoli until William Gane, of the Belmont assumes charge.

To Build Large Theatre.

ANOTHER moving picture theatre, with a seating capacity of 1,500, is to be built in Baltimore by the Capitol Theatre Company, and the cost of construction will be approximately $250,000. This playhouse will be called the Capitol and it will be located at 1518 to 1532 West Baltimore street. The plot on which it is to be built measures 124 by 120 feet.

It is expected that the new structure will be ready for the public about September 15. There will be a dance hall on the roof of the theatre. The basement will be occupied by a ladies' rest room, a nursery, a men's smoking room, and will be equipped with fifteen pool and billiard tables and ten bowling alleys.

The officers of the Capitol Theatre Company include Morris Klein, president; William Hoffmeister, treasurer, and J. Louis Rome, secretary. Mr. Rome will manage the new house. He now manages the Broadway and Arcadia theatres in Baltimore.

Victoria Holds Benefit.

Under the auspices of the Kamnetz Podolsk Relief Association for the Ukranians, a benefit moving picture performance was held at Nixon's Victoria Theatre on Sunday, May 2, from 2 to 11 p. m. Norma Talmadge, in "She Loves and Lies," and Larry Semon in "Home, Sweet Home," were the attractions, which were donated for the occasion by Select and Vitagraph companies. Harry Morstein, proprietor of the Queen and Bunny theatres, headed the committee arranging the event. The funds raised went to help the war sufferers in Ukrania.

The three-story building 223 North Howard street, the first floor of which is occupied by the Idle Hour Theatre, has been purchased by Jacob Comprecht, Jesse Benesch and Reuben E. Ottenheimer, the sale being contingent upon a court decree. The price paid was $105,000. This theatre has been operated for a number of years by C. C. Waskey.

Still Oppose Sunday Pictures.

The Lord's Day Alliance, through its counsel, former Attorney General Isaac Lobe Straus, has filed a petition, signed by W. W. Davis and other members of a special committee of that body, asking for a writ of mandamus prohibiting the Supervisors of Elections from printing the Sunday Moving Picture act on the ballots in the election next November. A referendum is provided for in this act of the voters of Baltimore.

Fire Destroys Theatre.

Fire destroyed the Central Opera House at Martinsburg, W. Va., morning of April 28. The structure was partly insured, but the loss has been estimated at $40,000. C. W. Boyer, of Hagerstown, Md., was the lessee and his loss in equipment amounted to $10,000. Defective wires are thought to have been the cause of the fire.

Crystal to Enlarge.

The seating capacity of the Crystal Theatre, 528 North Gay street, is to be enlarged 750 seats. The stage is to be taken out to accomplish this improvement. Harry Cluster is the manager of this playhouse.

W. S. BUTTERFIELD, of the Butterfield circuit, announces the extension of his chain of theatres to Port Huron, Mich., where he has purchased outright the property which includes the Majestic Theatre, and now being operated by Herbert Weil. Mr. Butterfield expects to spend about $35,000 this summer on remodelling the exterior and interior of the house and will change its name. He will play pictures, vaudeville and legitimate attractions there. Mr. Butterfield is now building a new theatre in Lansing, and has several other deals on for new theatres in Michigan.

Jackson's New Bijou Opens.

The New Bijou Theatre, Jackson, opened last week with "The Butterfly Man." The house is very cozy and is very modern. Fushanes Brothers are the owners and they are to be praised for the great change they made in this house.

Puts Life In Dead House.

George Spaeth, of the Temple Theatre, Grand Rapids, is proving what a real showman can do with a dead house. Several exhibitors had this theatre and lost thousands of dollars. Since George took it over it has never had a losing week. In fact, it does capacity most of the time.

Another Detroit Theatre Opens.

The New Linwood-Lasalle Theatre, Detroit, opened its doors on April 30. The theatre seats 1500 and is extremely beautiful. Its location is excellent being in a rich family-residential section that is constantly growing. Dow Thompson is the house manager, while the owners are Wetzman & Zemon. The policy will be four changes weekly, and first-class pictures only.

Pontiac To Have New House.

A. J. Kleist, Jr., of Pontiac, is back from an extended trip to the coast, and announces that he has closed a deal for erecting a new theatre in Pontiac that will seat 2,000. Ground is to be broken within the next few weeks. Mr. Kleist, already operates every theatre in the city of Pontiac, which is probably the fastest growing city in the state of Michigan. Mr. Kleist is only about twenty-five years of age.

Cleveland Cullings

WARD LASCALLE'S very novel and interesting comedy, "Unhappy Feet," was so badly mutilated by the Ohio Board of Censors that it was not exhibited. The comedy made a hit with the Loew people in Cleveland and it was booked for the Stillman. Then it was sent to Columbus for censoring and the best part of it was cut out.

Opens "Jekyll and Hyde" Battle.

There was a merry war on in Cleveland over the showing of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" owing to the release of rival features, one with John Barrymore (Paramount) and the other with Sheldon Lewis (Pioneer).

Loew's Euclid booked the Barrymore picture but did not announce when it was to be shown. The Miles Theatre booked the other one.

Ordinarily a picture opens on Sunday in Cleveland. As soon as it was definitely known that the Euclid would start its run on May 9, the Miles Theatre slapped on its picture May 3 without any advance advertising.

Dominion of Canada

Showman Entertains Horse Police.

A UNIQUE ceremony occurred at the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, on Monday afternoon, May 3, when the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was presented with the Irwin Challenge Trophy which is emblematic of the first aid championship of the St. John's Ambulance Association. The team representing the Mounted Police walked off with the honor in competition with teams representing fire and police departments. Members of all teams and officials in charge of the contest were the guests of Manager J. T. Moxley of the Regent Theatre, for the matinee, a feature of which was the presentation of the trophy by Mayor Harold Fisher.

The Allens Open St. Catherines.

The latest Allen Theatre to be opened in Canada is the brand new house in St. Catharines, Ontario, which has a seating capacity of 1,600. Mr. Rosenthal is the resident manager. The theatre is equipped, furnished and decorated in the usual Allen style. The house was opened under auspicious circumstances April 26.

Exchange Officials Travelling.

Two Canadian film officials have been visiting exchanges and theatres of the Canadian West. One of these has been L. E. Ouimet, of Montreal, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, distributors of Pathe and various British releases. The other man is George W. Weeks of Toronto, general manager of the Famous-Lasky Film Service. Weeks will be on the road for upwards of two months during which time he will call on exchanges and exhibitors throughout the territory west of Winnipeg.

Exploitationist on the Job.

W. A. Bach, of Toronto, assistant manager of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, visited Montreal previous to the presentation of "On with the Dance" at the New Grand Theatre, Montreal, during the week of May 3, for the purpose of arranging special exploitation for the run in the shape of special window displays in downtown stores and other outdoor advertising.

Big Concern Has 100 Houses.

Announcement has been made that the Trans-Canada company now has approximately 100 theatres in the Dominion and it is backed by a number of strong financial men including Lord Shaughnessy of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Sir Frederick William Taylor, general manager of the Bank of Montreal, Sir Herbert Holt, president, and E. L. Pease, general manager of the Imperial Tobacco Company, J. K. L. Ross, the big big Montreal financier and sportsman, and others.

Sells Business to Join the Allens.

Ben Whitham of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has become assistant to W. J. Gage of Toronto, purchasing agent for all Allen Theatres in Canada. Whitham has been the head of the Rialto Theatre Supply Company of Winnipeg for the past three years and he has sold his business in order to join the Allen organization. Before organizing the above company, Whitham was the Mutual exchange manager at Regina for several years.

Canadian Film First Shown.

Vera Berliner, violiniste, travelled all the way from San Diego, Cal., to Montreal in order to appear at the presentations of "The Great Shadow," the Canadian film feature, at the Imperial Theatre during the week of April 25. Her interest in the picture was due to the fact that her brother, Rudolf Berliner, also a talented musician, was the author of the scenario of the feature which was produced by the Adanac Film Company of Montreal and Trenton, Ontario. The presentation at the Imperial was the premier run of the picture in Canada.

To Encourage Canadian Films.

It is stated that Senator Lougheed of Calgary, Alberta, is erecting a theatre in Calgary to form a part of the Trans-Canada circuit and that he is providing the site for the Empire Theatre in Edmonton. The policy of the company is to encourage British productions. The various theatres are conducted on the combination plan of moving pictures and dramatic road shows almost without exception.

The Questions on Optics.

THIRTY-ONE—What is meant by refraction? (P. 92).

32. What is the function of an objective? (P. 91).

33. What is the "optical axis" of a lens? (P. 91).

34. What is meant by "Conjugate Foci"? (P. 91).

35. What is meant by Working Distance (Back Focus)? (P. 92).

36. What is meant by "Equivalent Focus"? (P. 92).

37. What is "Spherical Aberration"? (P. 94).

38. What is the practical effect on screen illumination of spherical aberration in the condenser beam? (According to Griffith it has a tendency to prevent high and low spots of illumination—to make the illumination more even.)

39. How is spherical aberration corrected in the objective? (P. 95).

40. Name the three kinds of lens used for condensing and describe each? (Plano convex (Fig. 56), Meniscus (Fig. 35) and Biconvex (Fig. 32.)

As to Shutters

E. E. Beattie, Signal Corps, Fort Gibbon, Alaska, points out a few minor errors in the handbok, which, while they have all long since been noted and published, are again passed along so that late purchasers may correct their books. Friend Beattie says:

At the top of column two, page 835 of December 13 issue, friend Jarden says that a "five-to-one" intermittent would allow of the use of a shutter blade width of sixty degrees, providing, of course, the ray from the objective has a point diameter.

At the bottom of page 472, and also at the bottom of page 486 of the Handbook you term a movement which allows of the use of a sixty degree master blade a "six-to-one." In the former case, even though Brother Jarden has his ratio reversed. I can see his point, viz., that there are five units of rest to one of movement. I, however, believe you are more correct in stating the ratio as six to one. But both yourself and Brother Griffith have passed on the Jarden problem and have O. Ked it, so I merely call your attention to the discrepancy to the end that a rule may be set for future use.

My Answer to That.

Before going further I want to butt right square into the middle of Beattie's letter in order to explain this point, because he is getting things mixed a bit. Jarden is quite correct in saying that a five to one movement will allow of using a 60 degree master blade, providing the ray of light be of point diameter, which it never is in practice. In the handbook I dealt with practice when I said a six-to-one would allow of the use of a sixty-degree blade to cover the movement plus the width of the ray.

This would, of course, be only an approximate. Put into perhaps more intelligent form, a six-to-one movement would only require a master blade a bit less than 51.5 degrees wide to cover the ray if it were of point diameter. The other eight and a half degrees would, in most cases, cover the ray itself. Do you see the point? Beattie then continues:

I suppose long ere this your attention has been called to the transposition of diagrams on pages 411 and 413 of the handbook; also to the fact that end of second paragraph on page 130 should read Plate 9, instead of Plate 8, and that where it says machine aperture A, in the middle of page 113, it should read machine aperture 2.

Shutter Dope Requested.

And now after getting all that off my chest I will reveal how little I really do know. In the standard Simplex revolving shutter the aperture opposite the master blade is smaller than the other two—referring to the three-winger, of course. Suppose the idea is to get a balancing effect, but would like the exact explanation.

Designs Own Shutter.

I have designed my own revolving shutter, for local use, and it gives a less flicker than the one supplies with the projector. I get a very brilliant twelve-foot picture with twelve amperes, projecting to a duck screen, which is whitened with chalk—thanks to the handbook. I feel that I can afford to lose some light in order to reduce flicker and propose trying out a shutter with flicker blades approaching the eighty degrees I have made the master blade.

This will give the three blades nearly equal width, and of course the apertures will have the same width (meaning the apertures will each be of equal width.—Ed.) It may be possible that the expected reduction in flicker will not occur because of period of darkness exceeding those of light. Propose also to try reducing diameter of beam so that I can use a seventy-two degree master blade, making the other two blades the same width and the apertures forty-eight. This will give the true one and a half to one proportion, in which I see the same possible objection.

As to Handbook Errors.

A fairly long letter, but interesting. Yes, the handbook has about a dozen minor errors all told, but I feel the fact that there are no more is rather a matter for pride, when the difficulty of the work is considered.

The reason for the aperture in the Simplex shutter opposite the master blade being smaller is that, for some reason which even the Simplex engineers do not understand, that particular arrangement gives less flicker, under a given condition, than when the apertures are all of equal width. Experiments have revealed some rather queer things along these lines, and things which have no apparent good reason.

With regard to your present shutter, you will get less flicker, but it is only at the expense of great light loss. Three eighty-degree blades would eliminate 240 degrees of light out of a possible 360, leaving only 120 degrees available at the screen. This is sixty degrees less than fifty per cent., and terrifically inefficient.

And by the way, why isn't that a really better way of expressing the matter than in percentages? Means the same thing and very much less trouble to figure out—also equally, or even more understandable. What do you fellers think of it?

Light Intensity and Flicker.

Of course you will understand that you will have relatively less flicker tendency as you reduce light brilliancy; also less tendency to travel ghost. With lime light it used to be quite possible to run some subjects without any shutter at all, and get a fair result.

With lime light we have seen a fair result with a one-blade shutter, though that was before the Guil Pastel brought calcium light up to relative high brilliancy. You will get precisely the same relative effect by using a normal shutter and reducing amperage. Stopping down your ray will mean light reduction, but why do it that way? Why not "stop down" your current?

But anyhow you very evidently read your books and departments carefully and intelligently, and are not satisfied to just sit tight, draw your pay and watch the wheels go round.

The lens chart that you ordered has gone forward.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Projectionist Dies in Fire

We are just in receipt of March number of South Dakota Fire Marshall, W. N. Van Camp, in which appears the account of a projection room fire in Sioux Falls, South Dakota, as follows:

Projectionist Burned to Death.

John Theobold, twenty-six years old, moving picture projectionist for the Liberty Theatre of Sioux Falls, was burned to death Saturday evening, February 21, while operating the projector. The verdict of the coroner's jury is as follows:

> John Theodore came to his death as the result of a fire occurring in the Liberty Theatre, which said fire was caused by the moving picture projector located therein and spread to other films carelessly and negligently permitted to remain in the opening and outside of the metal box provided for the same.

This terrible accident is the first accident that has caused loss of life since the inspection and licensing of moving picture houses was placed under the Fire Marshall's Department, and while we deeply deplore the accident, there is a big thing in connection with the fire that we must keep in mind, and that is that while this theatre was filled at the time of the accident, it was completely emptied with not an injury to one of the patrons, due to the requirement of a fireproof booth with automatic drops from all openings.

We Agree.

We agree with the fire marshall that promptly acting automatic port shutters are a great help in such an emergency, but would point to the fact that without ample means for egress of the gases and smoke—in other words, ample vent flue area, the quick closing ports can only partly fulfil their mission, which is to keep the audience in entire ignorance of the fact that there is a fire under way.

This has been pointed out many times. With quickly acting port shutters and ample vent flue area, especially if aided by ample size fans, every bit of smoke and gas will pass off, the draft being in through the crevices of the shutters and door.

In other words, under the proper condition when there is a fire the projection room is just a great big stove, with the vent pipe for its flue and the crevices around the door and shutter ports as the draft. It is for this reason we have contended that the intake air should be arranged to be automatically cut off when the port shutters fall.

Has Paid Penalty.

It is unnecessary to point to the folly of the projectionist who kept open reels of film lying about. He has paid the full penalty for his error, but let his fate be a warning to others thus carelessly inclined.

That an intelligent inspection of projection rooms by officials is beneficial cannot be doubted. But mind you we said INTELLIGENT. We have ourself witnessed some inspections which did not quite come up to the mark. For instance, we well remember when Chicago, the home of crazy laws and rules as applied to the projection room and moving picture theatres, enacted a law that all theatres located under rooms used as dwellings or factories must be lined with sheet steel backed by asbestos three-eights of an inch thick (if we rightly remember). The editor of this department was projectionist for W. R. Cozart in "The Electric Theatre," North Clark street, which was a "store room" theatre about ninety feet long. On either side were solid brick walls something like eighteen inches thick.

Mr. Cozart had compiled with the requirement of the new rule, as he understood it, by having the ceiling covered with asbestos and steel of the required thickness. What was our amazement when an inspector appeared one afternoon and threatened to close the house unless the twenty-inch-thick brick sidewalls be covered with asbestos and steel. We bet if friend Cozart sees this (and he is still, for all we know, an exhibitor in New Mexico) he will have one good laugh at the memory.

Kind of Alcohol

Now don't get all excited and het up by the title, because it is merely that J. J. Keogh, Williamsport, Pa., wants to know what is the proper and best kind of alcohol with which to clean lenses; also a list of books we handle which deal with projection, setting up of "booth," etc.

The Handbook, a 700-page book on practical projection, and Hallberg's Motion Picture Electricity are the only books handled by the Chalmers Publishing Company dealing with projection. Neither of these give instructions for "setting up the booth," but in the Handbook will be found detailed instructions as to proper projection room construction.

Presumably friend Keogh refers to setting up the steel frame portable asbestos projection rooms, commonly, though improperly, dubbed "booth." Full instructions for erecting these rooms accompany them.

Kind of Alcohol.

We would not recommend the use of alcohol at all, unless there be oil on the lens. Just breathe on them and polish with a very clean, very soft cloth.

If alcohol is preferred, however, or if the lens be very dirty or if there is oil on its surface, then mix denatured or wood alcohol with an equal amount of water, wash the lens and polish quickly, while wet, with a very clean cloth, which is soft and free from lint.

An old laundered handkerchief is ideal for the purpose. You will find full instructions regarding lens cleaning in the handbook.

Anvil for Sprocket Pins

Emile S. Carbin, Addison, Missouri, says:

Every time I try to remove an old intermittent sprocket I experience trouble getting the pins out.

Can you suggest any practical way of doing it? I have even ruined the shaft twice by bending it slightly.

If you will make an anvil, as per the following, you will, or should have no trouble, provided you get punches of correct size.

Get a piece of bar iron one three-quarters of an inch square and saw it down endwise about an inch, to form slot A. When both sides are sawed down to proper depth (using a hack saw, of course) run a drill through at X, which will cut off the piece and leave slot A open.

Next, with a file, taper the top somewhat as shown and then when you desire to remove a sprocket pin you have but to clamp your sprocket anvil in a vise, slot end up, lay the sprocket in the anvil, as shown, and there you are. Such an anvil should be in the tool chest of every projectionist.

Will Bear Repetition.

While rummaging through some old papers recently we found some verses written by David C. Adams, then projectionist in the Empress Theatre, though just what "Empress Theatre" it was we do not know. The verses were printed in the department about six or seven years ago, but will, with the change of a few terms to bring it up to date, bear repetition.

When It's "Just a Moment" Time in Photoplay.

When the theatre is crowded, and the picture's on the screen,
And you gaze in admiration at the moving picture queen;
While the music's softly playing, then you let your fancies roam
Mid the scenes which form a story, bringing thoughts of folks at home.
When the light is clear as crystal, with projection bright and keen,
You forget the guy, with eagle eye, beyond the port, unseen.

When we get our reels of film they're not always new and clean;
Some are full of "rain" and flicker, with bad patchs in between.
When the show is nearly ended, if a "rainbow" looms up dim—
It's a sign we're using carbon stubs and time we need a trim;
So, while we fight the flicker, if you're pleased with what you've seen,
Don't roast the guy, who hopes they'll buy an up-to-date machine.

When the picture's on the curtain and the audience, serene,
Has forgotten work and trouble in the most dramatic scene,
If there comes an interruption and the light is blotted out,
It blames the projectionist, while the facts it leaves in doubt.
It may be a film that's breaking in the upper magazine,
But they knock the guy, who toils up high, and knows what troubles mean.

When the sparkling snow has painted white the fields and hills a plenty,
And with bells and noise we welcome the year Nineteen Hundred Twenty,
It is time for resolutions and the men who speed the cranks
Will resolve to throw a better show, and try to win your thanks;
But trouble comes at times and then, you critics of the screen,
With patience try to help the guy who runs the old machine.

Non-Winding Device

Recently the editor was summoned to the National Institute of Inventors, New York City, to witness the demonstration of a non-rewinding device, the invention of Harry M. Stephenson, formerly instrument maker for the Bureau of Standards, Washington, later assistant to the superintendent of the Waltham Watch Company, and now located in Denver, Colorado, whence he had journeyed more than two thousand miles to show us the device.

But alas, when it was unpacked it was discovered that the transportation men had gotten in their deadly work, and the main casting was broken beyond the possibility of repair.

But, anyhow, the mechanism of the invention was interesting. It would require no change in the projector itself. It sits at an angle from perpendicular, receiving the film from the lower sprocket of the projector upon a sprocket of its own, by which the film is built into a roll, from the outside in, without any slippage of the film upon itself. The film is laid in against the interior of a metal ring about, from memory, sixteen inches in diameter.

The inventor assures us it is fool proof—a measurable commendation. It will not, in all human probability, reach the manufacturing stage for quite a considerable time in the future.

Among Busy Film Exchangemen

Baltimore

Back to Film from Clothing.

Harry Cohen, who has been in the clothing business in Washington, D. C., since December last, has returned to the film business and is now managing the Washington, D. C., office of the Special Pictures Corporation, handling Comedyart pictures. Mr. Cohen was connected with Metro prior to leaving the film business last November.

McShane Pinch Hitting.

During the absence of M. Courtney "Plain" Jenkins, Republic representative in Baltimore, who was on vacation, E. S. McShane, formerly manager of the Washington, D. C., office of Robertson-Cole covered the Baltimore territory for him.

Screenart's Washington Branch.

Michael Lessy, general manager and owner of Screenart Pictures, of Philadelphia, will open a branch office of that company in Wsahington, D. C., in the near future. Mr. Lessy stopped over in Baltimore April 27, to see the Baltimore branch and then continued to Washington, to look over the situation.

E. R. Price a Benedict.

Edward R. Price, well known to the film men of this territory, was married to Kathleen V. Kendall, of Brooklyn, N. Y., on May 1. Mr. Price is receiving the congratulations of his many friends. He has now assumed the duties of manager of the Baltimore branch of Screenart Pictures, and S. Palan will again go on the road for that company. Mr. Price has recently been in New York handling state rights features. Prior to serving in the world war, he was connected with many companies including Paralta and Mutual.

Jans Pictures Holds Meeting.

To attend a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Jans Pictures, Inc., most of whom are Baltimoreans, H. F. Jans, president of that company, came to Baltimore April 26. He was met by George C. Easter, secretary and treasurer of the company, who took him to call on several of the prominent exhibitors in Baltimore. After that they attended the board of directors' meeting at the Hotel Emerson, which was to decide the means of disposal of their latest production, "Madonnas and Men," a ten reel production, directed by B. A. Rolfe.

Will Try Another Style.

Dr. A. H. Rollnick, owner of the "Are You Fit to Marry?" film, who brought that feature to Baltimore several months ago, is again in Baltimore for an indefinite stay with a new production which he calls an economic feature.

Cleveland

Moving Day in Filmland.

A regular moving day was May 1 in Cleveland and indications were that it would be a moving month for the exchanges. The Metro moved from the Sincere Building to the third floor of the Standard Theatre Building. The Masterpiece Film Attractions moved from and to the same places. Their occupancy is only temporary until the new film building is completed in the fall. The Dave Warner Films Company moved from the Sloan Building to the Erie Building. This concern has a big suite of offices there.

Shifting Away from Film Center.

The latter part of this month the First National will be installed in its new home, 3648 Euclid avenue. A big residence is being rebuilt to accommodate this concern and the Collins Film studios. This is a big move from the film center (about eight blocks) and these will be the only film companies outside the present film district.

Federated Forms Holding Company.

The Federated Film Exchange of Cleveland was incorporated May 1 for the purpose of distributing motion pictures. It is an Ohio holding company for the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Joseph L. Friedman, president. The Ohio franchise is held by the Standard Film Service Co. of Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit.

"Stamboul's" Third Cleveland Week.

Manager Smith of the Universal announced that "The Virgin of Stamboul," after a week at Loew's Stillman and another week at Loew's Mall, would play the week of May 8 at the standard theatre.

He has been engaged to play Jim Callendar, the "heavy" in the Drury Lane melodrama, "The Marriages of Mayfair," now in production at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street.

"I'm only a beginner in pictures," Mr. Ross explained when seen at the studios, "but I'm convinced that it's the biggest game now, and I intend to devote the rest of my career to it."

Mr. Ross first flashed in big letters upon Broadway in 1903 when he captured the town by his performance in "Checkers." He played "Checkers" for two seasons and in 1905 became a Dillingham star in "The Fair Exchange."

In 1907 Mr. Ross created the name role in "The Traveling Salesman," by James Forbes, later played in New York by Frank McIntyre. The next two seasons he starred in "The Fortune Hunter," creating the title role in the Chicago production.

Mr. Ross continued in "The New Henrietta" through the next season on a coast to coast tour and in 1916 he co-starred with Macklyn Arbuckle in "What's Your Husband Doing?" He retired then until the fall of 1918 when he went on a Southern tour in "Out There."

Says Europeans Had No Idea of Picture Business Done Here; Praise Our Houses

LOUIS DESTENAY, United States representative for L. Gevaert & Co., of Antwerp, Belgium, has been in New York at the Hotel Astor for the past four weeks, to establish headquarters for his firm, which is a large manufacturer of raw cinema film and to open trade with this country, Canada and Mexico.

In an interview Mr. Destenay said that conditions in his country have greatly improved in the past year and his firm does a large busines with France, Holland, Italy, Switzerland and England, as well as with some of the other countries. In fact it is working day and night to fill orders.

Mr. Destenay also said that Europeans had no idea of the tremendous business done in this country in film. They are more advanced here and more up-to-date. American films are popular in Belgium and moving picture houses are well patronized. Moving picture theatres are not nearly so numerous in Europe as here and the performances are only given in the evenings and Thursday and Sunday afternoons.

He has visited several of the motion picture theatres in New York and says there is nothing in any way approaching them on the continent. They are a great surprise and delight to him. He does not think the cities of Europe will, in the near future, attempt anything like them, as available capital there will scarcely permit of such expenditure and the present high prices for building material all will tend to discourage any splendor in building.

Pathescope Gives Dinner Which Proves an Enlightening Divertissement to Guests

A DINNER, held at the Cafe Bouevard on Friday evening, April 30, by the Pathescope Company, which was attended by about fifty people, of whom the majority were connected with the schools and New York Board of Education, proved to be not only interesting, but enlightening on matters of visual education.

Owing to the various discussions that have recently taken place regarding the use of portable machines in which non-flam film only can be run, the declaration of Ernest L. Crandall, Director of Lectures and Visual Instruction of the Board of Education, that in every school in New York City there should be at least six portable machines, for use in the classrooms, and one standard machine for the aud.torium, was of special moment. The demonstration by the Pathescope Company of their old style machine against the new machine which throws a picture four times as large as the old one, and entirely without flicker, was another interesting feature of the evening. The offer by the Pathescope Company to reclaim their old machines, and substitute new ones practically free of charge, evidenced their willingness to make good.

This event, which in itself may not have seemed of great importance, will be remembered as one which threw considerable light on the requirements of visual education. The speakers of the evening opened their hearts on the subject, and it will be gratifying to those interested in the non-theatrical field to know that the schools are interested not alone in educational films, but in all good films, and are especially anxious for good comedies to be used in recreation periods.

Mr. Willard B. Cook was the chairman of the evening, and the speakers were Frank D. Wilsey, Dr. Ernest L. Crandall, Don Carlos Ellis, William P. McCarthy, and Edward W. Stitt.

Government Handbook Answers Queries on School Equipment

THOUSANDS of educators, church people, community workers and others interested in the non-theatrical exhibition of motion pictures will welcome a booklet which has just been issued by the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior. "Motion Pictures and Motion Picture Equipment" is the title and it was written by Mr. Carl Anderson, now of Educational Films Corporation, during the period that he was with the Bureau of Education in association with Mr. F. W. Reynolds of the extension division of the University of Utah.

Before this time the teacher or other person that considered the installation of motion pictures have had to depend on some book prepared largely with the idea of its use by the professional operator or on questions addressed to persons who have had more or less experience in the work. Many of the mistakes that have been made have been attributable rather to the misinformation given than to any imperfection in the apparatus or the work of the individual.

It is interesting to note how this booklet came to be compiled. The Bureau of Education had occasion to send out questionnaires to the schools of the country in order to learn the equipment of these institutions and their ability to use motion pictures made by the government. Returns of these answers was accompanied by thousands of questions and these Mr. Anderson promptly classified and the booklet resulting is a comprehensive answer to all of these questions.

Copies of the booklet can be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, and mentioning the name, or the number, "Bulletin 1919, No. 82, Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior."

"Artistic Antwerp"

One of the latest Paramount-Burton Holmes travel pictures covers thoroughly the city of Antwerp. The photographer does not seem to have forgotten any phase of life in and about the city, and from its country folk come to town from the outlying districts, to the soldiery, plain townspeople, and silk-hatted aristocrats.

The streets of Antwerp pay tribute to the artistic sense of the citizens, lamp posts are garnished with plants and flowers in bloom, the buildings of importance are beautiful examples of architecture, and the statuary with which they commemorate their artists and their heroes are of the finest. The picture is both pleasing and informative.

Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph Has Group of Interesting Subjects

THE first subject in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph for May 8 is called "Beating the Landlord," and deals with ways of meeting the high cost of living quarters.

Rather than concede to an advance in rent, the families in one New York neighborhood went on strike and moved their belongings to the street. More fortunate families secured house boats on the river bank and transformed them into comfortable homes. But stranger yet was the move of a resourceful young couple who purchased an abandoned street car on Staten Island and made it habitable.

The second number in this issue goes under the title of "How's Your Eyesight?" and presents, through a series of animated drawings a study of the eye, explaining in an interesting and clear manner the cause of short-sightedness, far-sightedness, astigmatism and other defects of the vision. We see here a new version of "nosing for news," "a laugh at long range" and two very good reasons "why eyes go wrong."

As is customary in the Pictographs, the closing subject is a comedy cartoon, the selection for this issue being Jerry on the Job in "Swinging His Vacation." At this season of the year Jerry, in common with hundreds of thousands of other men and women, suffers an attack of spring fever. The results are highly amusing.

Some Things Worth Knowing

THAT the committee appointed by Ernest L. Crandall, Director of Lectures and Visual Instruction of the New York City Board of Education, to investigate the possibilities of adopting moving pictures as aids to text book teachings, has found about half of the material required for the study of biology to be now in existence. In all likelihood the New York Schools will adopt moving picture aids to biology lessons, late this fall, or the first of the next year. They are now investigating sources of supply for the study of geography and English literature.

Kent Buys Mountain States Rights to "Up in Mary's Attic"

WILLIS KENT, head of the Equality Pictures Company, Denver, made a special trip to New York to purchase rights to "Up In Mary's Attic," the five reel super-comedy produced by the Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., Murray W. Garson, president. He had never seen the picture but was attracted by advertisements in the trade press.

"To open my new exchange in Denver," says Mr. Kent. "I realized that I should have one big headliner—one picture that everyone would have to use. Therefore, when I saw the announcements of 'Up in Mary's Attic' I came to New York to look the picture over on the off chance that it might be what I wanted.

"Since seeing parts of it I want to say that this production is not only far better than I hoped or dreamed, but in my opinion will be among the greatest money getters.

Mr. Kent paid a high price for the rights to the "Mountain States"—Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming.

This Baby Girl Surely Holds a Unique Record

TO have been cast before her birth, for a role in a motion picture, is the unique distinction attained by "Baby Democracy" DeLeon, who appears in the final scenes of Lee Francis Lybarger's "Democracy, the Vision Restored."

When Director William Nigh was preparing the scenario he remarked to Walter DeLeon, one of the players, that he would require a three weeks old baby toward the close of the production. DeLeon whispered something in his ear.

"A few weeks later" Nigh's assistant phoned the DeLeon household. The next morning found the young player at the studio, and the infant actress registered her emotions without any megaphone calls from the director, scoring a success as an actress and earning the title of the first actress to be cast for a role before her birth.

Associated Exhibitors, Inc., Influenced Activities of Independent Convention

ONE of the most important and significant sidelights of the gathering of independent exhibitors at Chicago was the informal "convention" of about a dozen of the franchise holders in Associated Exhibitors, Inc. The sessions of the Associated group, while unofficial, may have been the pivot around which turned some of the progressive activities of the men whose presence in Chicago resulted in the formation of the Independent Exhibitors of America.

While no official connected with the Associated Exhibitors took official part in the doings of the independent exhibitors' convention, it was made known to those in Chicago that Associated Exhibitors, Inc., pledged its support to any plan or organization that is designed to protect exhibitors' interests. This pledge dovetails with the exhibitors' indorsement of co-operative propositions such as is exemplified in Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Compliment First National.

"The Associated Exhibitors are heart and soul in accord with any movement or plan that is designed to further the unselfish interests of independent exhibitors," stated an announcement, "and for that reason we wish to compliment the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the great progress made in its convention, and especially to emphasize the value of franchise protection and benefit offered by First National to independent exhibitors."

The gathering of the Associated men brought to light the fact that the franchise holders in Associated are receiving co-operation and pledges of support of the Associated plan from the independent showmen throughout their respective territories. Associated franchise holders also stated that keen interest is being expressed in the announcement that Associated sub-franchises will be available very shortly.

Franchise Holders Present.

The franchise holders say that exhibitors are attracted by the soundness of Associated's business-backed promise of 100 per cent. protection, 100 per cent. pictures, 100 per cent. profits and 100 per cent. ownership in a purely independent exhibitors' organization.

Among those who took part in the informal meetings of Associated franchise holders were I. H. Ruben and M. S. Finkelstein of Ruben & Finkelstein, Minneapolis; Harry M. Lubliner and Joseph Trinz, of Lubliner & Trinz, Chicago; John P. Harris, Pittsburgh; I. Libson, Cincinnati; C. M. Olsen, of Olsen & Sourbier, Indianapolis; J. H. Cooper, Oklahoma City; Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee; R. D. Craver, Charlotte, N. C.; Saul Harris, Little Rock; Judge Wilkerson and E. R. Rogers, of Signal Amusement Company, Chattanooga; Joseph Morgan, Washington, D. C.; F. C. Quimby, general manager of Associated, and Phil Ryan, also of Associated.

All attending the Associated sessions were enthusiastic over the signing of Geraldine Farrar, and much satisfaction was expressed over the purchasing committee's acquisition of "The Riddle: Woman" as Miss Farrar's initial Associated Exhibitors' vehicle.

Beatrice La Plante in Rolin Comedy.

"Merely A Maid," which Pathe will release May 16, is announced as the title of the first Rolin comedy featuring Beatrice LaPlante, the latest entry into comedy films from feature pictures. Miss LaPlante is well known to film fans and exhibitors, having appeared in leading feminine roles in various feature productions, her latest being with Sessue Hayakawa in "The Beggar Prince."

Associated Franchises Go to Thomas Saxe and R. D. Carver

THE two newest franchise holders in Associated Exhibitors, Inc., are Thomas Saxe, of Milwaukee, and R. D. Craver, of Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Saxe, a pioneer exhibitor and one of the best known showmen in the country, has acquired the franchise for the Milwaukee territory. This franchise was transferred to Mr. Saxe from the Merrill Theatre Amusement Company, whose Merrill Theatre recently changed hands.

Mr. Craver, with large independent theatre holdings in the South, obtained the franchise for the Charlotte territory, which includes North and South Carolina. Mr. Craver was one of the first and is one of the foremost exhibitors in the country.

It is understood also that the Dallas territory franchise in Associated Exhibitors has been secured by prominent southern independents and that announcement of this will be made shortly.

Both Mr. Saxe and Mr. Craver affiliated themselves with Associated during the Chicago convention of independent exhibitors. Mr. Saxe stated that the majority of the exhibitors in his territory are enthusiastic over the possibilities of Associated sub-franchises. He says that already more than 150 theatre men in Milwaukee have expressed their eagerness to co-operate under Associated's plan. Mr. Craver was equally enthusiastic.

Judge and Mrs. Ben Lindsey Have Parts in New Paramount

WHEN the current William D. Taylor production for Paramount Artcraft temporarily titled "The Boy," is shown on the screen it will be seen that the cast will include Judge Ben B. Lindsey and Mrs. Ben B. Lindsey.

For not only does the "Little Judge," founder of the famous juvenile court in Denver and an authority on the American boy, appear in the picture, but a part is played by his wife, who is his chief aide and confidante in his life work and who makes his hours in his courtroom and office her hours.

The picture is from an original story by Julia Crawford Ivers. It is the story of an American boy of the lowest stratum who is saved and becomes a useful member of society. It is a story with romance and every requirement of a great picture and through it runs the powerful theme of the boy problem.

Neilan Engages Colleen Moore.

Colleen Moore has just been engaged by Marshall Neilan to play one of the two female leads in a forthcoming Neilan picture which will offer Wesley Barry in the featured role.

In the new Neilan film, Miss Moore will have an excellent character part particularly suited to her clever talents and it is probable that when her current engagement is finished, Mr. Neilan will sign Miss Moore to a long term contract as a permanent member of his company.

German Distributor Tells Inter-Ocean American Films Will Be Much in Demand

A LETTER just received by an official of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation from one of the largest independent motion picture distributors in Germany describes the film conditions in the Teuton regions.

The status of the German motion picture industry is at once defined and explained by the writer whose name is withheld for obvious reasons. He is hopeful that the present embargo restricting the import of American films into Germany will be lifted by the end of May, and believes that when the embargo is lifted American motion pictures will find a big market in Germany. He also feels certain that German films will become popular in this country.

The letter, originally in German, translated into English by Inter-Ocean follows:

"For the time being in Germany, the importation of motion pictures is not permitted. It is expected and we are hopeful that the embargo will possibly be lifted by the end of May . . . It is feared in producing circles that with the flood of American pictures into Germany, business will take on an unpleasant aspect. Competition will very likely begin and bring with it hard times for the German producer and his product.

Says America Wants German Films.

"The German public demands American motion pictures, and consequently the American product will find a large market in Germany. But in exactly the same manner, German films will be demanded in America because the particular elements of interest in German pictures bring the variation that motion picture audiences in America demand.

"German producers will never be able to compete with American producers in offering lavish and spectacular productions to the public. In this respect America dominates the situation. The German strength, however, lies once and for all time in the logic of the action and in the sentimental values of the story being filmed.

"It is certain that no business is so rich with possibilities as the motion picture industry, which in America ranks as the third or fourth largest industrial enterprise, and which in Germany is numbered among the country's leading industries.

"I have formerly sold American pictures in Germany and intend to continue doing so in the future. Even though the import of films to Germany will be impossible for some time, it nevertheless will be possible to do a big business as soon as the exchange approaches normal. The business possibilities are gigantic, provided, of course, that the right pictures are available.

"The motion picture business in Germany has grown immensely. Motion picture theatres have sprung up almost overnight with the admission prices ranging 15 marks and more. At the same time rentals have advanced considerably. In brief the upward movement in prices has been the same in Germany as in other countries."

Dwan Producing His Own Scenario.

Allan Dwan has returned to his first love in the world of films. He has again become an author. It was by writing a scenario several years ago, that Dwan "broke" into the motion picture business. He has since gained fame as a director and producer. Now it is announced that his next production, the sixth production under his contract with Mayflower which he is to start at once is from his own pen. Mary Thurman will play an important part in the Dwan production.

Universal Signs Character Comedian for Comedy Series

LEE KOHLMAR, one of the best known character comedians on the stage, has been signed by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, to appear in a series of one and two reel comedies. Kohlmar once supported David Warfield in "The Music Master." He also had one of the chief comedy roles in the "Potash and Perlmutter" series. Recently he has been headlined in vaudeville.

Another stage favorite recently engaged by Universal is James Liddy, who has gained a name both in drama and on the musical comedy stage. He played light comedy roles for many months with the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco.

With Universal, he will play opposite Anne Cornwall in her latest five reel feature, "The Girl in the Rain," from the novel "The Girl by the Roadside," by Varick Vanardy. Rollin Sturgeon is directing the picture. Others in the cast are Lloyd Bacon, Jessalyn Von Trump, James Farley and George Kunkel.

Davis to Make "Brownie" Comedies.

Brownie's latest picture, "The Tale of a Dog," has just been completed by Thomas Buckingham.

Miss Darling is said to know nothing of the hard road of apprenticeship traveled by most screen players. Among the women stars in whose support she has appeared are Norma Talmadge, Pauline Frederick, Elsie Ferguson, Constance Talmadge, Marguerite Clark, Madge Kennedy, Marie Doro, Mae Marsh, Irene Castle and Ethel Barrymore. She played with Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale," the first picture Miss Barrymore made.

Fox's Message from the Sky Gives His Regards to Fleet

A MESSAGE from the sky was sent to Admiral Henry B. Wilson, commander of the Atlantic Fleet, as it steamed up the Hudson River off New York City on the conclusion of the fleet's winter cruise and manoeuvres in West Indian Waters. The message was in the form of greetings by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, and congratulated the admiral and his officers and men on their achievements during the last four months.

Mr. Fox's letter was dropped upon the deck of the flagship Pennsylvania as it slowed down to anchor off Ninety-sixth street. It was released for its downward flight by Alfred D. Brick, staff cameraman, who was picturing the arrivals of the warships in an aeromarine seaplane piloted by Lieut. Paul Zimmerman. On the lower wing of the flying boat was stretched a banner with the words "Fox News." The letter hit the deck squarely and was picked up by a representative of Fox News who had boarded the superdreadnought down the harbor. The Fox News man turned the communication over to the admiral, who read it and expressed his thanks to Mr Fox.

Cardinal Gibbons Likes First Glimpse at Movies

THE first moving pictures that Cardinal Gibbons has seen were viewed by him on Tuesday, April 27, in the library of his residence on North Charles street, Baltimore. He expressed admiration for the invention of the moving picture machine and said he was highly pleased with the exhibition.

Six reels of film were shown the Cardinal. The picture was entitled "American Catholics in War and Reconstruction," and showed the patriotic activities of 20,000,000 American Catholics. Only the official family of the Cardinal and a few personal friends were present.

Later the same reels were shown at Loyola College Auditorium. The pictures were shown by the National Catholic War Council Motion Picture Committee.

"I Need the Money."
Says Sid Grauman to Al St. John, Warner Brothers' star, just after the comedian received a watch as a token for having appeared at Grauman's Theatre.

Lucille Lennox a Pathe "Find."

A new star is approaching the film firmament, according to the calculations of George B. Seitz and others connected with the production of Pathe serials, who have given such enthusiastic accounts of the talents and beauty of Lucille Lennox, a winner in a recent beauty contest with no previous stage or screen experience, to Paul Brunet, that the vice-president and general manager of Pathe has signed her to a contract to play parts in serials. Miss Lennox is now doing a part in the serial "Velvet Fingers," which Mr. Seitz is producing in the New York studio. Lucille Lennox, it appears, is a Pathe "find."

Schussel Made Assistant Head of Realart Exchange

THE promotion of Seymour R. Schussel to become assistant branch manager of the New York City office of Realart Pictures Corporation has been announced by Lester W. Adler, manager. Mr. Schussel has been sales representative in the New York office since its organization last fall. He has won for himself an enviable record as a salesman in Manhattan territory and his promotion comes as a result of this, according to Mr. Adler.

Schussel's rise in the motion picture industry has been rapid and steady, showing business capacity of a high order. His first position was with the Triangle Film Company in 1915 as poster clerk. Within a short time he became bookkeeper and then was appointed cashier of the company.

He has a large acquaintance among exhibitors throughout New York City and State, who will be pleased to hear of his promotion. The increased business done at the New York office in recent months made it imperative for Mr. Adler to have an assistant and Mr. Schussel was immediately picked for the post because of his ability.

Tri-Star Signs Claire Whitney.

Claire Whitney, who has been starred in numerous film productions in the past few years and is almost as well known on the legitimate stage as in the silent drama, has been signed by the Tri-Star Pictures Corporation to be starred in a series of feature productions, under the direction of Directors Joseph Byron Totten and Joseph W. Smiley. Miss Whitney is the second star to come under the Tri-Star banner.

"Humoresque" Will Appeal to All; Country-wide Advertising Campaign Planned

IN announcing to exhibitors Cosmopolitan Productions' latest release, "Humoresque," a Fannie Hurst story directed by Frank Borzage and featuring Alma Rubens, Henry M. Hobart, vice-president, calls particular attention to the phases of greater interest to exhibitors—the exploitation and box office phases.

"'Humoresque' is one of the biggest things Cosmopolitan Productions has turned out since its organization," said Vice-President Hobart. "It is a story of rare emotions, of transcendent mother love, of superb characterizations, a story of tears and of laughter, of human heart throbs, of everyday life that you know and I know and everybody else knows. It is not a story of war and the war does not enter into it, but it is a story of after the war. It is the sort of a story that you cannot forget because it is unforgettable.

Will Appeal to the Masses.

"We have unbounded faith in 'Humoresque' because it has every quality of success. It has that superlative breadth of appeal, interest for the great masses. Realizing the story's potential value as a box office magnet even before production was begun, we determined to turn it into the very best picture that money and human ingenuity, genius and science could produce. Accordingly, we assigned Frank Borzage to make it.

"Then we gave the story an all-star cast of players, featuring Alma Rubens. For the difficult role of the mother we engaged Vera Gordon. Others in the cast are Dore Davidson, Gaston Glass, Sidney Carlyle, Ann Wallick, Maurice Lavigne, Edward Stanton, Maurice Pecker, Ruth Sabin, Louis Stearns, Bobby Connolly and Miriam Batista, the lovable tot who is the hit of 'Florodora' in New York today.

Extensive Publicity Campaign.

"'Humoresque' will be released by Paramount-Artcraft on June 6. We have surrounded it with an extensive advertising, publicity and exploitation campaign. A string of big daily newspapers stretching from coast to coast will carry full page, half page and quarter page advertisements daily tying up with the local exhibitors in every possible way. Special publicity stories have been arranged for with these newspapers, and special exploitation ideas and plans have been entered into with several national business institutions which will give 'Humoresque' a large amount of the best sort of publicity.

"Exhibitors will find 'Humoresque' a rare and ideal subject for exploitation. It lends itself admirably to artistic lobby and stage displays, and it presents many phases that permit of the most lavish and unusual kind of local exploitation."

Madge Kennedy Begins Making "The Girl with the Jazz Heart"

GOLDWYN has started work on its third eastern production starring Madge Kennedy. The vehicle is "The Girl with the Jazz Heart," from the story by Robert Shannon which first appeared in Munsey's Magazine. Miss Kennedy recently finished the picturization of "The Truth," taken from the famous play by Clyde Fitch.

"The Girl with the Jazz Heart" is regarded by officials of the Goldwyn organization as a certain money-maker. Although cast along different lines, it possesses the same universal appeal which distinguishes "The Truth." It gives Miss Kennedy every opportunity to display her humorous and emotional talents.

"The Girl with the Jazz Heart" will be directed by L. C. Windom, who directed "The Truth." Joe King is playing opposite Miss Kennedy. The rest of the cast is being selected while Miss Kennedy and Mr. King are working together.

Hodkinson Announces "No. 99" as Kerrigan's May Production

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces for late May release the seventh in J. Warren Kerrigan's series of Robert Brunton productions, "No. 99," prints of which have been received from the Brunton Studios, Los Angeles.

"No. 99" is one of the most colorful and entertaining comedy-dramas this engaging star has ever produced. It is a fast moving story of New York society life from the original magazine serial by Wyndham Martyn, the well-known English author.

"No. 99," directed by Ernest C. Warde, who supervised the production of all Kerrigan-Brunton vehicles since the amalgamation of star and producer, contains enough concentrated action, suspense and original, serio-comic twists for the making of three successful pictures. Impelling, bomb-shell situations follow close upon each other with dash and rapidity.

Kerrigan is supported by Fritzi Brunette, Emmet King, John Steppling, Lilie Leslie and Roy Laidlaw. Jack Cunningham is responsible for the screen adaptation of the Wyndham Martyn serial.

Elmer Harris to Adapt "Miss Hobbs."

Elmer Harris, author of many original musical comedies, plays and scenarios, and collaborator with Oliver Morosco on two musical plays, "Canary Cottage" and "So Long, Letty," was chosen to undertake the task of scenarizing Jerome K. Jerome's play, "Miss Hobbs," Wanda Hawley's first starring vehicle for Realart.

By many it is believed that "Miss Hobbs" will be the best of Mr. Harris' many motion picture adaptations. Donald Crisp is directing the production.

Chamberlain on Exchange Tour.

F. V. Chamberlain, general service manager of the distribution department, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is on an extended trip on which he will visit ten of the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges. The following offices are included in the itinerary: Kansas City, Denver, St. Louis, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Minneapolis and Chicago.

Mr. Chamberlin's purpose is to study the conditions in the respective territories, with the idea of bringing the service system up to the highest point of efficiency.

Six Republic Films Book Fast.

Six Republic productions, "The Gift Supreme," "Trilby," "The One Way Trail," "The Blue Pearl," "Twelve-Ten" and "Romany, Where Love Runs Wild," according to Sam E. Harris, general manager of the Republic Distributing Corporation, are being booked with rapidity by scores of exhibitors.

Mr. Morris stated that three, four and five day bookings on the productions are common in the latest reports received from the various Republic Branch offices.

A good press agent should be a combination of George Washington, Annanias, P. T. Barnum and Victor Hugo. That's the proper combination. Come as close to it as you can.

Johnson & Hopkins Organize Company to Enter Distributing Field of Industry

A NEW national distributing organization to be known as National Exchanges, Inc., has just been organized and is financed by the Johnson & Hopkins Company, 398 Fifth avenue, New York City, finance construction, capital management.

Hunter Bennett, well known as a general sales manager for large distributing corporations, has been elected vice-president and general manager. Mr. Bennett until recently was a special representative for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He was sales manager of the Mutual Film Corporation when that company was maintaining sixty-eight offices throughout the country. He also at one time was assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation.

Mr. Bennett has had a wide experience in theatrical fields as well as the motion picture industry. When interviewed, he said: "During the past several years I have handled practically every known situation which might arise in the dealings between distributor and exhibitor. I have been all through the experimental stages, changes of policy, etc., of various large distributing concerns, and I feel that with a new organization at my disposal, we will be in a position to avoid all the useless extravagance and costly experiments entailed by others during their development.

W. L. Johnson Is President.

"I know also that I am in a position to secure a branch office organization which will prove second to none in selling and franchise holders partners in our business, and what we require is men of the highest calibre who will assist us in surrounding the organization with an atmosphere representative of the house of Johnson & Hopkins.

"I have devoted the entire past three months with Johnson & Hopkins, perfecting the plans and policies of our organization, which I know will prove a revelation. Our capital is fully paid and there is no stock for sale."

Walter L. Johnson is president of National Exchanges, Inc., and Earl H. Hopkins is treasurer. Mr. Johnson said: "While we have assisted in the financing of certain projects in the industry during the past year, we have been carefully studying the various branches of the industry at large with the thought in mind that eventually we would devote our entire energies and resources to a proposition which ultimately would prove a prominent factor.

"We have therefore become associated with Mr. Bennett in the organization of National Exchanges, Inc., a corporation founded upon sound business principles and a solution of many of the problems worrying certain distributors. Our intention is to release only a limited number of high-class productions yearly to exploit big pictures in a big way."

Pathe to Release Miss Sweet in "Simple Souls" on May 23

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces that "Simple Souls," the latest Blanche Sweet production, will be released on May 23. The production comes as a climax to the pleasing success of the star in "A Woman of Pleasure." "Fighting Cressy" and "The Deadlier Six."

The appeal of scores of exhibitors for another Sweet production of the caliber of "The Deadlier Sex" made it necessary to advance the date of release on "Simple Souls." "The Deadlier Sex" started out with a greater number of advance bookings than any other Pathe production of the season, and in every case it met with such genuine and widespread approval that exhibitors who played it wrote in asking for the early release of another Blanche Sweet production.

Although the first announcement of the new picture was made but a week ago, bookings have started to come into the Pathe branches. The steady increase in the popularity of the star has been measured in the increase in contracts on each production, and today she is playing in as great a number of motion picture houses as any other woman star, according to Pathe.

Start Work on "Black Pawl," Reginald Barker Production

DIRECTOR REGINALD BARKER has started work at the Culver City studios on the all-star production of "Black Pawl," from the widely read story by Ben Ames Williams. "Black Pawl" is a virile tale of the sea, intensely dramatic and replete with spectacular incidents that will be utilized to the fullest extent in the film version.

Russell Simpson, a powerful actor who profits by a rugged physique and a dominant personality, has been chosen to interpret the masterful character after whom the story is named. He has just completed a strong part in another all-star Goldwyn production, "The Branding Iron," and his work in that picture is responsible for his choice to fill the exacting role of Black Pawl.

Director Barker is now considering a number of actors available for the character of Red Pawl and expects to reach an early decision. John Bowers, one of the most popular young leading men on the screen today, will play Dan Darrin, Helene Cradwick will be Ruth Lytton and Alec Francis will fill the role of Samuel Poor.

Hope Hampton Buys Van Loan Story.

For her second production to follow "A Modern Salome," which is doing heavy business throughout the country on the Metro program, Hope Hampton has just bought a new story written by H. H. Van Loan.

"A Modern Salome," which was Miss Hampton's first production with her own company and also contributed her debut before the public, was a sumptuously staged picture and one in which no expense was spared.

Fox Buys Story for Eileen Percy.

William Fox has purchased "Myra Meets His Family," an original Saturday Evening Post story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, for use as a vehicle for Eileen Percy, the latest addition to Fox featured players. It is a comedy and contains plenty of fast action. The story appeared in the March 20 issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

Mrs. Hilliker Leaves Chester.

Mrs. Katherine Hilliker, who has been writing the sub-titles for the C. L. Chester Scenics, has resigned as secretary and director of the company. She will leave as soon as several productions in work are completed. No announcement of her future plans is at present forthcoming.

Beatrice McCauley.
Who manages her father's $60,000 house in Glenwood, Minn.

Young Woman Manages $60,000 Theatre.

Miss Beatrice McCauley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. McCauley, of Glenwood, Minn., has become manager of a new $60,000 picture theatre which her father has recently erected. A singer herself, music plays a leading part in the programs, and she books nothing but first-run films. Miss McCauley also manages, during the summer months, a large pavilion at a nearby lake. Moving pictures, roller skating and dancing predominate there. Miss McCauley is not yet 25 years old.

Metro Takes Capitol Studio for Buster Keaton Comedies

AS a home for the new Buster Keaton comedies, which will be produced by Joseph M. Schenck, for release through Metro Pictures Corporation, the studios in Hollywood, formerly occupied by the Capitol Film Company and at one time by Metro companies, have been taken over by Metro and are being specially fitted up for their new uses.

Occupation of these studios, which cover an entire city block at the juncture of Canuenga avenue and Romaine street in the Los Angeles suburb, enlarges the ground area of Metro's producing plant on the West Coast to four city square blocks, or something like twenty-two acres. Stages and open spaces in the newly acquired studios are being cleared of old sets to make way for a series of contrivances being worked out by Mr. Keaton and his director, Edward Cline.

Lou Anger will be production manager. Mr. Keaton will be starred at the head of a specially selected company of screen funmakers. This company is to begin work very shortly, with the intention of turning out eight two-reel comedies a year.

"Traveling Salesman" for Arbuckle.

An indication of the plans which have been made for Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle under his new contract to make feature comedy productions for Paramount Artcraft was given out recently by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The comedian is to be starred in James Forbes's stage success, "The Traveling Salesman."

The role of the fat, genial salesman is considered an ideal one for Arbuckle. The picture will be directed by Joseph Henabery.

Ince Separates Team of MacLean-May; to Present MacLean as Star in His Own Right

HEEDING the direct and indirect demands of the country's exhibitors, Thomas H. Ince has separated the team of MacLean-May, and will present Douglas MacLean as a star in his own right.

MacLean's first individual starring vehicle, now in course of production under the direction of Jack Nelson and the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, is an adaptation by Agnes Christine Johnston of the popular Saturday Evening Post story, "The Yanconna Yillies," by Herschel S. Hall.

The new MacLean series of productions will be released by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation through an agreement which gave Paramount Artcraft an option on additional Douglas MacLean starring pictures following the completion and release of six comedies co-starring MacLean and Doris May.

The future plans of the feminine member of the co-star team, Doris May, will be unfolded in an announcement in the near future.

In outlining the plans for MacLean's starring career, Mr. Ince stated definitely that no set form of story material would be employed.

Ince Praises His Protégé.

"Mr. MacLean is first of all versatile," said Mr. Ince. "His ability to portray farce, broad comedy and light drama has been very clearly demonstrated in the pictures already made in my studios. I expect to star him in pictures that will emphasize his diversity and bring to exhibitors and their patrons 'something new, different and unexpected' with each release. My communications and personal contact with representative theatre owners have backed my own opinion and judgment that in Douglas MacLean the screen has a new and refreshing personality that will become more ingratiated in public favor and prestige as bigger and broader opportunities are afforded."

Bert Lytell Prepares to Come East from Coast for Four Pictures Under Karger

IMMEDIATELY after completing his work in "The Price of Redemption," his newest starring vehicle, at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, Bert Lytell will leave Southern California for New York. He will be engaged in his next four productions at Metro's eastern studios in West Sixty-first street, which are under the personal guidance of Maxwell Karger, Director General.

Although the list of stories to be picturized has not yet been made public, it is known that they are of the variety that will require the background of a great city, rather than the natural settings provided by Southern California's mountains.

The Lytell specials made in New York will be under the general personal supervision of Director General Maxwell Karger. A few members of Mr. Lytell's company, including Sol Polito, his camera man, will accompany him on his transcontinental trip.

Practically all the interior scenes for "The Price of Redemption" have been completed and two shifts of carpenters are rushing work on colorful architecture that will furnish the setting for the streets of Akbar, the fictitious East Indian city where the most important of the play's action takes place.

Mr. Lytell has been working continuously at the Hollywood studios for three years. He welcomes the opportunity to renew his acquaintance with Broadway where he has many friends of his days in the theatre. His current picture, is an adaptation by June Mathias of I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Temple of Dawn." Dallas M. Fitzgerald is the director.

Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" Moves Showmen to Wire Congratulations

ACCORDING to a statement from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, based upon reports received at the home office, the Paramount-Artcraft version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" starring John Barrymore is being acclaimed in the larger cities in all sections of the country, just as it was during its recent record-breaking engagements at the Rialto and Rivoli in New York, as a triumph of the screen.

Moe Kridel, who showed "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" at the Goodwin Theatre, Newark, the same week it was breaking records at the Rivoli in New York, telegraphed as follows: "John Barrymore in 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde' biggest box-office attraction ever played in my house. This is Holy Week and receipts are running $200 and $300 a day over anything that has played this theatre. Such an artistic production demands recognition and Paramount-Artcraft productions have my best wishes for future success."

Frank L. Newman, of Kansas City, recommended the picture in letters to his patrons and did a big business with it. So great was the business done by "Jekyll and Hyde" at Grauman's Mill-Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles, during its week's engagement there that Sid Grauman found it necessary to bring it back for a return engagement at his new Rialto starting May 2.

Rothacker Officials in New York.

Douglas D. Rothacker, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, sales division, is spending several weeks in the New York office in an intensive industrial films selling campaign. Before returning to Chicago he will visit some of the other eastern Rothacker industrial selling agencies.

H. J. Aldous, Rothacker treasurer, also is spending several weeks at the New York office. He leaves May 12 for Los Angeles, to give personal supervision of placing the contracts for the construction of the Rothacker Coast laboratories.

Plan Publicity Drive on Darmond Serial.

An unusual publicity campaign is planned to start preliminaries for "The Hope Diamond Mystery," the fifteen-part serial featuring Grace Darmond and an all-star cast. The Hearst newspapers are to publish a fiction version of the May Yohe serial simultaneously with the release of the film, and Miss Yohe plans personal appearances at leading theatres showing the serial.

Nazimova Makes Ruoff Art Director.

Pleased by the original settings he designed for "The Heart of a Child," her newest picture, Nazimova has appointed Allen Ruoff, a young Western architect, as her technical art director. Mr. Ruoff has achieved a unique position for a man, only twenty-nine years old, who has neither attended high school or college, nor studied any art courses.

"The Heart of a Child" was adapted by Charles Bryant from Frank Danby's novel of London life. It was directed by Ray C. Smallwood. The production is a current Metro release.

Says Saturday Evening Post Fiction Has Big Film Value

SATURDAY EVENING POST stories are proving to be among the most successful of present day screen vehicles as regards entertainment value and drawing power of title, according to Arthur S. Kane, president of Kane pictures, who declares that the acquisition by Charles Ray of two Rob Wagner scenarios represents an astute business move on the part of the First National star.

According to Mr. Kane there is no magazine fiction published today which has as wide a circulation and as extensive a body of readers as the stories from the Post. For some time past, producers have recognized the value of Post fiction as screen scenarios, and the development is such, it is said, that within a few hours of the appearance of this magazine for sale, the weekly crop of stories suited to photoplay uses is telegraphed for and bought. Let alone the merit of the narratives themselves, says Mr. Kane, the value of this purchase as far as publicity in the title is concerned is indisputable.

The modern tone and the spirit of contemporary times reflected in the Saturday Evening Post fiction is in the opinion of Mr. Kane particularly well suited to the needs of the screen and the tastes of modern audiences. Among recent successes proving the type of Post fiction finding popularity is quoted "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave," the story by Mary Roberts Rinehart which was converted into a play from its magazine version.

Ince Adds to Publicity Staff.

Dwenelle Benthall, well known as a newspaper and magazine writer, has joined the Thomas H. Ince publicity headquarters on the West Coast. Miss Benthall will confine her efforts exclusively to the preparation of articles for "fan" magazines and women's journals.

Antonio Moreno Starts on Another Vitagraph Serial

VITAGRAPH now has three serial companies working simultaneously out on the West Coast. William Duncan is on the final episodes of "The Silent Avenger"; Jose Ryan and Jean Paige are well along on "Hidden Dangers"; but that company has formally announced that Antonio Moreno, previously starred in three successful Vitagraph serials, is working full tilt on another.

Albert E. Smith and Cleveland Moffett, who wrote the Vitagraph serials, have spent the last few weeks on the Coast in finishing the scripts for the current Moreno serial, the title on which is as yet unannounced. That a tense mystery element travels throughout the story is indicated by the working title, "The Veiled Mystery."

Pauline Curley, who created such a favorable impression as leading woman in "The Invisible Hand," will again be seen as Mr. Moreno's leading woman. H. A. Barrows and Nenette De Courcy head the supporting cast. Webster Cullison is directing.

Congratulates Blackton on "Passers By."

J. Stuart Blackton is being congratulated by those who have seen advance showings of his coming feature, "Passers By," a picturization of C. Haddon Chambers' play, upon his selection of types for the characters of London which add so much to the atmosphere of the story. Like Peter Waverton, played by Herbert Rawlinson, in the play, Mr. Blackton stepped out into Broadway and made his choice. William J. Ferguson, playing in "The Little Whopper," was cast as Pine, the valet, and Tom Lewis, known from New York to San Francisco in vaudeville, plays Nighty, the cabman.

Correct Statement Regarding First Lionel Barrymore Film

WITH the definite announcement that his initial production starring Lionel Barrymore to be released through First National Exhibitors' Circuit will be "The Master Mind," adapted from the Broadway stage success in which Edmund Breese appeared, Whitman Bennett now states that the announcement given the trade press for publication last week was erroneous.

The statement Mr. Bennett corrects was to the effect that his first release through First National would be "The Devil's Garden." It is likely, however, that the latter picture will be the second Barrymore feature through First National's distributing channels.

In "The Master Mind" Mr. Barrymore is given dramatic opportunities seldom offered. Incidents leading up to and surrounding the adoption of an orphan girl by a wealthy and fashionable family, the revelation that unknown to the entire household, the butler (played by Mr. Barrymore) is the father of the girl, the love test that comes with the girl's decision between happiness and wealth all work together to form a story of appealing tensity.

Under the personal supervision of Mr. Bennett, the production of "The Master Mind" is well under way. Examination of the script and the camera results coincident to the first few pages of the continuity have engendered expressions of gratification on the part of the Barrymore staff and a number of First National executives.

Ivo Dawson Becomes a Communter.

Ivo Dawson, the distinguished English actor who has long been a famous figure on the English and American stage and is now firmly established in photoplays through his appearance in "The Miracle of Love" and with Olive Thomas in "Footlights and Shadows" has taken a house in the country and bought a commutation ticket for the summer.

Tarrytown is his summer address and Dawson chose this delightful Westchester town because it was the nearest approach, in his mind, to the rural beauty of his native England.

Billie Burke Signs Contract for New Series of Artcrafts

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that Billie Burke has just signed a new contract for a series of Paramount Artcraft pictures by arrangement with Flo Ziegfeld, Jr.

Miss Burke, whose latest picture, "Away Goes Prudence," will be released early in July, will begin work on the first of her new series in the near future. The play is now being put into continuity, and as soon as the script is completed, Miss Burke will begin production in the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

American Film Reports "Something New" in Artistic Titles of "House of Toys"

THE art work on the titles of "The House of Toys" has met for the time the insistent demand for "something new" which each production in its turn encounters. By a happy combination of illustrations and reproduction of fabric background the American Film Company announces a pleasing change from the usual style of title.

Suggestive illustrations which bridge the time and space from one scene to another, sometimes more or less explanatory in purpose and carrying the atmosphere without confusing the thought or detracting from the main theme have, of course, been the usual goal, but added to this achievement is the elimination of eye strain and a sense of restfulness which is one big point ahead.

It is said that the smoothness with which the titles blend into the illustrations and the illustrations in turn fade into the titles, prevents the usual dilation and contraction of the pupil of the eye and prevents a "jolt" from black to white and white to black which strains the muscles and nerves.

In addition to the decorative element these titles serve a real and comprehensive purpose, not as a finger-post or label to assist lame continuity or mediocre acting, but embodying in terse sentences a sketch of each important character and giving a background to the role portrayal, putting the spectator en rapport with conditions leading up to the present action. In other words, the titles help the audience to know the people moving on the silver sheet before them, much the same as the readers of Dickens knew the characters which he created.

A trade journal critic, voicing his approval of "The House of Toys," has said: "This is not a preachment, but philosophy dignified—a picture that keeps one on the tiptoe of expectation all the way through with its powerful message and timely theme."

Young Buffalo in a Series of Pictures of the Outdoors To Be Released by Pathe

ACTING on an expression of opinion from exhibitors in all parts of the country to the effect that there is a great demand on the part of the public today for motion pictures of the great outdoors, Pathe Exchange, Inc., will release, beginning July 11, a series of two-reel Western outdoor pictures, featuring Young Buffalo in the stellar role. The pictures were made in the Canadian Northwest and in the lumberlands and are in settings of mountains, streams and forests.

Carrying all the dramatic strength and action of longer productions and with practically no interior scenes the plays are unique. Young Buffalo, known in his picturesque way the world over, is just the type of strong heroic manhood to center in pictures of this kind, and he is supported by an able cast. George Redgewell directed the series, and the stories are from the pen of William Addison Lathrop.

Five Pictures in Series.

There are five pictures in the series and their striking titles tell much of what may be expected in the productions. The first, "Tex of the Timberlands," will be released on July 11; "His Pal's Gal," on July 18; "The Law of the Border, on July 25; "The Hobo of Pizen City," on August 1, and "The Hold-up Man" on August 8.

In announcements of the series Pathe frankly states that they are westerners full of thrills, but unlike many westerners of the past these productions have been carefully filmed. They are not merely of the outdoor life, but they are also noted for the real beauty of the natural settings in which they have been made.

"Riders of the Dawn" Praised by Press and Public at Its New York Premiere

UNHERALDED save for the opening announcement by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of its arrival from the Coast, "Riders of the Dawn," Benjamin B. Hampton's production from Zane Grey's novel, "The Desert of Wheat," had its world-premiere at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, last week with an opening day rush that found the large Broadway photoplay palace all too small for the crowds clamoring for admission at every performance.

So taken were President Moe Mark and Managing Director Jack Eaton with this Benjamin B. Hampton picture at a preview that, despite the fact that press material and accessories had not yet been completed, they decided to shelve another picture and give "Riders of the Dawn" immediate presentation. Record-breaking crowds and the tributes paid the production by the newspaper critics vindicated their judgment.

Its premiere at the Strand bears out the statement of a prominent Eastern exhibitor that production has the combined ingredients of Benjamin B. Hampton's previous successes, "The Westerners," "Desert Gold" and "The Sagebrusher"—wonderful acting, heart interest, faithful scenic effects, action galore and a wealth of realism.

Recognition of Zane Grey's audience-pulling power was shown conclusively in the volume of business done by the Hodkinson organization on his previous Benjamin B. Hampton production, "Desert Gold," but "Riders of the Dawn," to judge by the widespread exhibitor interest, gives every promise of eclipsing the mark set by its predecessor.

Hodkinson managers throughout the country will hold trade showings on "Riders of the Dawn" this week. Announcement of its release date will be made next week.

Fox Has Fifteen Productions for May, Including "The Terror," Starring Mix

ALTHOUGH the list of releases scheduled by William Fox for release during May includes four of the regular Fox entertainments and one of the Tom Mix star series productions, these five releases represent as brilliant an array of literary and artistic talent as ever has been published by this firm on a regular schedule, says an announcement.

To begin with, there is "The Terror," a web of wits, horsemanship and daring of the American cowboy woven through a story which places Tom Mix, the popular Fox daredevil star, in an entirely new series of backgrounds. It is the second of the Mix series directed by Jacques Jaccard and the director is responsible also for the scenario.

The exterior scenes for "The Terror" were photographed in and around Sonora, Cal., a section made famous during the gold rush of '49. The company includes Francelia Billington, Lucille Younge, Lester Cuneo, Charles K. French, Joseph Bennet and Wilbur Higby.

"The Dead Line," in which Fox is starring the athletic George Walsh, is a melodramatic story of the southern hills written especially for Walsh by Paul H. Sloane, of the Fox staff. The press department is heralding it as the greatest Walsh production ever released by the firm. The cast includes Irene Boyle, Baby Anita Lopez, Joseph Hanaway, Al Hart, Henry Pemberton, James Milady, Gus Weinberg, G. A. Stryker, James Birdsong, John Hopkins and Virginia Valli. Dell Henderson directed.

New Shirley Mason Feature.

In "Love's Harvest" the winsome Shirley Mason shines forth in her second screen role from the versatile pen of Pearl Doles Bell. The story of the play is an adaptation of Mrs. Bell's novel, "The Harvest," and is said to be quite as becoming to the tiny star as was "Her Elephant Man," in which she made her debut under the William Fox banner and which also was from a book by Mrs. Bell. In the supporting cast are Raymond McKee, Edwin Booth Tilton and Lilie Leslie.

Another eminent author contributing to Fox entertainments for May is Charles Alden Seltzer, whose "Forbidden Trails" is the fourth of the releases for the month. Buck Jones is to be seen in this Seltzer story. It is, of course, a western theme and gives the cowboy actor his second opportunity to show his skill as a horseman. The principals supporting the star are Winifred Westover, Stanton Heck, William Elmer, George Kunkel, Harry Dunkinson and Fred Herzog, while the scenario was made by Scott Dunlap, who also directed the staging of the play.

Denison Clift, of the Fox West Coast staff, is the author of "The Iron Heart," a May release in which Madlaine Traverse is the star. He also wrote the scenario and directed the production. George McDaniel, Edwin Booth Tilton, Melbourne McDowell and Ben Deely form the supporting cast. The story is said to deal with life in the steel mills, disclosing many scenic flashes of the blast furnaces and ovens.

Five Sunshine Comedies.

A total of five bright and snappy Sunshine Comedies will go to first-run houses during May. They are, in the order listed, "A Waiter's Wasted Life," "Dangerous Eyes," "The Diver's Last Kiss," "Should Dummies Wed?" and "Mongrels." Five Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons which are listed for May are "A Diver's Last Kiss," "Nothing But Girls," "Mongrels," "The Wrestlers" and "Girls and Gunpowder."

This makes a total of fifteen productions from Fox Film Corporation for May, offering a wide assortment of subjects and a quintet of popularly approved stars supported by well-known players. Fox News continues steadily twice a week.

Reputable Schools for Budding Genius Can Advance Screen Art, Says Director

A REPUTABLE institution devoted to the picture art should be encouraged and advocated by all producers having the best interests of the industry at heart," says Thomas H. Ince. "Many, very many, talented young persons have failed to pass a studio test and try-out merely because a total lack of experience and training placed them hopelessly and ludicrously in the light of undesirable amateurs.

"Personality cannot be undermined, nor can it be boycotted from the ranks of professionalism. To combine natural personality with natural talent—properly rehearsed before the great test arrives—is the duty of every aspirant to motion picture recognition.

"The increasing production of motion pictures the world over and the public's growing demand for new talent has made deep inroads on the available material. The establishment of a reputable school to serve as a clearing house for ambitious persons, where an applicant would be diagnosed promptly, with a free and candid opinion of the possibilities before them, could only advance the welfare of the business and provide real opportunities for those who have ability and the sincere ambition to back it up.

"I can see no valid reason why the great majority should be curtailed and detrimented because of the transgression of a few unscrupulous fakirs. Granted that there are numerous so-called 'schools' that prey on innocent victims and extract hard-earned money under false or misleading pretense, there are, or should be, institutions in Los Angeles, New York and other big centers where aspiring players could seek authentic information and guidance.

"I firmly believe, however, that such an academy should be conducted for the general interest and advancement of the motion picture industry rather than for individual or collective profit.

"The institution should be self-sustaining only, and any dividends accruing from tuition should be reinvested by the directorate for the provision of added facilities and courses, or for free scholarships to those talented persons who cannot afford even a reasonable fee.

Would Minimize Disappointments.

"Under this system the student body would comprise only those men and women who have been adjudged mentally and physically 'fit' for motion picture work. Advance tests and trials by a faculty of directors at the top of their profession would determine whether or not the applicant should devote further time and energy to the chosen line of endeavor.

"America and Europe boast of very many conservatories of art in which genius is ripened and rough-shod talent polished into shining accomplishment. These institutions are highly respected because their motives cannot be questioned even by the most skeptical of unbelievers. If music, literature and the allied arts are benefited by such reputable academies, the motion picture art should have a similar opportunity.

"From the straight commercial viewpoint, I would like nothing better than to engage talent from a real school which understands the requirements of producers and which undertakes to prepare students for every phase of studio work."

La Rocque Continues in King Pictures.

Rod La Rocque, who played the leading male role opposite Grace Darling in "The Discarded Woman," Burton King's second independent production, has been re-engaged by Mr. King for his next picture. "The Common Sin," an original story by Willard Mack, which is scheduled as the next Burton King production, is said to be admirably suited to his talents.

Clawson Writing Scenarios for Metro.

Edward J. Clawson has joined the Metro scenario department at the company's studios in Hollywood, and will do as his initial script, "Big Game," the play by Willard Robertson and Kilbourne Gordon, which was produced in New York this season at the Fulton Theatre.

Cosmopolitan Signs Edith Hallor.

Edith Hallor, well-known motion picture player and former star in the stage play, "Leave It to Jane," has been signed up to play the leading female role in Winston Churchill's "The Inside of the Cup," which Albert Capellani is now making for Cosmopolitan Productions. Miss Hallor will play the role of Allison Parr, which Director Capellani considers one of the most difficult characterizations in the whole production.

Slim, Svelte, Smiling Doris Kenyon Talks About Art and Avoirdupois

By MARY KELLY

IN contrast to everywoman, and specifically in contrast to almost every screen star, is Doris Kenyon in her heroic attitude toward that most haunting of feminine bogeys—getting fat! She says she never will.

At a recent breakfast tete-a-tete in Chicago, where she is playing a two-week engagement at the Woods, in "The Girl in the Limousine," she calmly announced her decision never to commit this unpardonable sin. Thereupon she made no frantic attempt to rap on wood so as to insure her immunity from this misfortune. She merely pressed her dainty lips a little more firmly together and registered resoluteness.

"No, I shall never grow fat," she said. "It isn't necessary, you know." She leaned forward confidingly. "You see, it's in any woman's power to regulate her weight. I don't mean by studying the 'then and now' ads for reducing, fascinating as they are. And I don't mean that bon-bons and French pastry have to be given up—not altogether. But," and here she issued the momentous secret in hushed tones, "do you know it's actually true that a woman can 'wish' herself any desired size!

"It's a faith remedy," the lithe young star continued, "but it's a strictly nonsectarian one. Anybody can work it, if they have the right temperament."

Her Dimensions Increased.

Then, in animated, entertaining style, she told how it is done. One of her friends who was a "perfect 56" longed to be a flitting shadow. She was told to concentrate for twenty minutes each day on her desire and intention to become thinner. Three months it took to do the work, but at the end of that time, the result was "beautiful," Miss Kenyon says.

"And I know others who have tried it," she insisted, "so that is one worry that is permanently off my list."

Having dismissed this tragic possibility, "Doris" of the deep blue eyes and saucy nose turned to discussing a subject, hardly more important (for how could that be), but more apropos.

"No, indeed, I've not given up the screen for the stage," she announced. "I shall be back at the W. W. Hodkinson studio early in May. My engagement at the Wood's Theatre here closes May 1, and I shan't go back on the stage until this picture is finished."

Just what the new production is to be the star could not definitely announce, but she implied that another of Augustus Thomas' plays, "Indian Summer," will probably be her producer's next choice. The most recently released of her vehicles is "The Harvest Moon," which she saw a few days ago at a pre-showing in Detroit.

Will Never Leave Film Work.

"That's the hardest ordeal of all in connection with movie-acting," Miss Kenyon said with seriousness. "It's so strenuous to watch one's self on the screen. The nervous dread of seeing one's pictured performance for the first time is as uncomfortable an experience as appearing on the stage for the first time. There are a thousand little things that I realize I ought not to have done, and another thousand that I have failed to do. It's tantalizing, but it's profitable, nevertheless. One can learn so much from such a study."

When asked if applause would be likely to lure her away from the silent art altogether, Miss Kenyon answered slowly: "No, I think it never will. Picture-making is too enjoyable for that. And the consciousness that one's performance is seen in all parts of the world, in places where one can perhaps never be, personally, is really quite wonderful."

Josephson Resigns from Ince.

Julien Josephson has purchased his contract release from Thomas H. Ince and will join the ranks of independent writers. Mr. Josephson's resignation from the Ince forces is not surprising to his intimate friends and studio associates, who have known for some time of his desire to take a long rest prior to becoming a free-lance author of photoplays.

Josephson will establish headquarters in Hollywood, Cal., where his future plans will include the provision of original scripts for several of filmdom's prominent stars. He also plans to write stories and continuities for specials.

Congressmen Like "Topics of the Day," First Released by Pathe One Year Ago

THE Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Timely Films, Inc., are celebrating this week the first anniversary of the releasing of "Topics of the Day" by the Pathe organization. The close of the first year finds the film in use in practically every first-class theatre in the country and it is in use in at least one theatre in every city, and in most villages and towns.

Aided Public Movements.

Aside from its functions as a distributor of the best laughs of the week, all selected by the editors of the Literary Digest, it has aided in many public movements in the course of the year and has become a decided influence on the public opinion of the nation. In Washington the members of the Senate and the House form theatre parties to see the newspaper comments on world events.

"These jolly theatre parties are the source of much good-natured fun," said Congressman O'Connell in an interview. "Our statistics show that the Senate gets many more 'raps' in newspapers throughout the country than does the House. This is proved by editorial quotations in the 'Topics of the Day' programs. Consequently, our Congressional theatre parties are in hearty accord with the screened comments.

Aided Teachers' Pay Campaign.

"One excellent feature about 'Topics of the Day' is the ease with which one may find a theatre showing the subject. They all seem to be showing it. Whether I am in New York, Washington or some little burg, I am usually able to find at least one theatre in the place showing these witticisms."

In the recent teachers' pay movement the most important feature of the nation-wide campaign was the contest arranged by the "Topics of the Day" for the best reason given each week by a school teacher for increasing the pay of teachers. Exactly 181,238 topics were entered in the contest by 22,654 teachers. Every state and Canada, Porto Rico and Hawaii were represented.

Among Those Assisted.

The Near East Relief Campaign to aid the starving millions of the Near East was aided by the weekly. The Red Cross was also given assistance in making its appeal to the public. In response to requests from blind soldiers the selected topics have been sent to the Red Cross Institute for the Blind in Baltimore and are read to the soldiers. They are also printed in raised type so that the blind can also glean the news of the day.

Cosmopolitan Gets New Stories.

Cosmopolitan Productions announces the acquisition of several new stories for motion picture purposes. Contracts have been signed with E. Phillips Oppenheim, author of "The Cinema Murder," and Cynthia Stockley, author of "April Folly," in both of which Marion Davies starred for Cosmopolitan Productions, whereby several of the best stories of these authors, which have been published or will be published in Hearst's Cosmopolitan, Harper's Bazaar, or Good Housekeeping magazines, will revert to Cosmopolitan Productions. Announcements of the titles will be made later, but one of the Oppenheim stories is now running serially in Cosmopolitan Magazine and has created a great deal of talk in literary circles.

Musicians See "Humoresque."

More than a score of well-known musicians attended a special private showing of Cosmopolitan Production's "Humoresque," a Fannie Hurst story, directed by Frank Borzage and featuring Alma Rubens, on the evening of May 3 in Cosmopolitan's projection room at 729 Seventh avenue, New York. All expressed themselves enthusiastically as being pleased with the production. Among those present were Fritz Kreisler, Mischa Elman, Max Rosen, Toscha Seidel, Leopold Auer, Arnold Volpe, Eddy Brown, Maximillian Pilzer, Alfred Megerlin, Rudolph Larsen, Philip Mittell, and Jacques Gottlieb.

This Cuban Trafficker in Stolen Film Failed to Secure Single Picture Here

BY being continuously on the job, the film theft committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, with Harold M. Pittman, chairman, is slowly starving out the illicit film dealers in New York. The film "fences" who have heretofore marketed the stolen films are experiencing difficulty obtaining new stock, and quite as much difficulty in disposing of the stolen goods that come into their possession.

A Cuban who, it is said, had always been a large buyer of stolen films, and the Latin-American countries have always been the best market for stolen films, came here the latter part of March to replenish his stock. Until this visit he had always been able to take back with him a large number of stolen films, and he had planned for an especially large purchase this time. So well did the film theft committee, and its agent, W. S. Hawkins, have the situation in hand that this Cuban dealer for the first time was obliged to return to his home without getting a single picture.

This condition is in marked contrast with that of a year ago when practically all of the exchanges were missing prints. There are comparatively few films being stolen now and the crooks gradually are being forced into other lines.

The activity of the Film Theft Committee is resulting in not alone the reduction in the number of films stolen, but a great deal of the stolen film is recovered before it can be disposed. Recently a Metro print of "The Brat" and a Famous Players print of one of the Max Sennett comedies were stolen from the lobby of a Brooklyn theatre. Both prints were recovered through the agency of the film theft committee.

While much of the work is preventive, only recently a plot for the wholesale robbing of one of the large exchanges was frustrated. Some arrests are being made. One well-known film thief, who has been under surveillance for some time, has fled the country, and steps may be taken to extradite him. Arrests have also been made in a film theft case which is before the federal courts.

The film theft committee has also succeeded in stopping the theft of poster paper.

De Mille Issues Statement Regarding His Latest Picture; Denies Rumors About Theme

SO many false reports and rumors have been circulated regarding "Something To Think About," Cecil B. DeMille's latest special production for Paramount Artcraft, that the producer has been moved to make a formal statement regarding his latest creation.

"Nothing was said or published regarding 'Something To Think About' during its production simply because I did not wish to confuse this picture with 'Why Change Your Wife?' which had not yet been generally released at that time," states Mr. DeMille. "There was no 'mystery' about 'Something To Think About'; there was nothing in its production work which could not have been made public at any time had it seemed advisable.

"The story and scenario of 'Something To Think About' are by Jeanie Macpherson. The theme differs rather radically from that of any of its immediate predecessors and it carries a very different sort of a 'punch' from that of 'Male and Female' or 'Why Change Your Wife?'

"Elliott Dexter returns to the screen in this production after an absence of almost a year. He plays the role of 'David Markley' in this story. The character which Dexter portrays is that of physically crippled student and art dillitante. Despite the fact that he plays a cripple, Dexter is not suffering from any serious results of his recent illness. All reports to the contrary can be branded as false and the proof of it to be found in the fact that Dexter is now at work in a 'straight' role in George Melford's present production.

"The rest of the cast includes Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts, Monte Blue, Claire McDowell, Theodore Kosloff, little Mickey Moore, Julia Faye, James Mason and others.

"'Something To Think About' bears little or no resemblance to any previous production either of mine or any other producer. The power of right thinking furnishes the motive for an important phase of the climax but there is no suggestion of religious propaganda of any sort in this production."

Ship Burns in Taking Scenes.

In taking the special scenes for the "Isle of Destiny," the new special Character Picture on board the Gulf's largest steamer, a real fire started on deck. The flames worked their way through the entire boat burning it beyond recognition. Through some error in lighting the United States Government smoke pots an explosion occurred which proved disastrous. According to the story of "The Isle of Destiny," a fire occurs but this fire was realism itself and although the cameramen shot the picture, their lives were in danger for over thirty minutes. Paul Gilmore and Hazel Hudson, who are playing the leading roles, escaped by jumping overboard.

Universal's New Poster Service.

A new system of poster supply and distribution, which will insure every exhibitor a complete line of new posters at all times, is projected by Universal. It will be installed by Edward Armstrong, Universal's district manager for the western division, and will be modeled closely upon his system now in vogue in the Universal's Denver branch.

Armstrong recently arrived in New York to confer with H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for the big film company, and to plan his tour of readjustment. He will leave the Universal home office in a few days and go all over the country, putting in his poster system in each exchange.

Spoor-Thompson Discontinues Office.

The Spoor-Thompson Laboratories have discontinued their New York sales office, which was located at 110 West Fortieth street. Temporary headquarters for the East are now located in their new laboratory building at Sixth and Pearce streets, Long Island City until such time as larger office space can be secured, which will be opened under the name of the S-T-M Film Laboratories, Inc.

Saved by a Blue Pencil!

In Philadelphia, when the people learn from seeing a movie that buildings are sometimes burned down, they rush screaming from the theatre to the street, seized with a wild, un-Philadelphian desire to make Nero's conflagration look like a boarding house furnace fire on October 1.

That is why the censors make marks with their blue pencils like those found recently on William S. Hart's "The Toll Gate." Only a blue pencil line protects Philadelphia from the fate of Rome.

Following are the blue pencil marks found on "The Toll Gate":

"Eliminate views of man crawling under shack, lighting match, firing faggots and coming out from under shack."

"Eliminate views of throwing lamps down into cellar and subsequent views of lamps landing in cellar."

"Eliminate subtitle, 'Hand me the bar lamps and the money.'"

Why not prohibit the carrying of matches in Philadelphia?

"Stamboul" Plays to Record Business.

On its recent Sunday opening in the Superba Theatre, Los Angeles, "The Virgin of Stamboul" averaged $2.50 for each seat in the house. The total receipts for the day amounted to $1,543.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and who now is at Universal City, attended the opening. His delight was great.

"There is no doubt that in this Priscilla Dean picture we have the biggest attraction of Universal's successful career," said Mr. Laemmle.

Eddie Bonns Joins C. L. Chester.

Eddie Bonns, who has been associated with the Warner Brothers, leaves that organization to join C. L. Chester as sales manager of Chester Productions.

Mr. Bonns has left New York for Los Angeles for a conference with Mr. Chester.

The Chester organization, which has in the past specialized in scenics and comedies, has now arranged to extend its activities to feature productions.

Good advertising is not filling a newspaper space with words, but a theatre with patrons. It doesn't matter how you do it so long as you get them in.

Myron Selznick Signs Martha Mansfield to Long Term Contract for Photoplays

MARTHA MANSFIELD, heralded as America's prettiest magazine cover girl, has been permanently captured for the screen, according to Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, who has signed her to a long-term contract.

In adding Miss Mansfield to the Selznick constellation, Mr. Selznick has enlisted the talents of a girl whose features are almost as well known to the citizens of "Sleepy Eye" or "Painted Post" as they are to the habitual first-nighter of Broadway. Although she was born in New York, Martha Mansfield is the daughter of the United States in every sense of the expression. She has been referred to as the most photographed girl in America, a statement that is far from exaggeration when one remembers how often her portrait has adorned not only the covers but the pages of practically every magazine that carried illustrations.

But Martha Mansfield's beauty is not alone responsible for her popularity. On the screen she has given such good account of her talents that at the time she signed her contract with Selznick practically every big producing company was bidding for her services.

Played First in "'Op o' My Thumb."

It was when she was a very little girl that Martha's parents moved from New York to Mansfield, Ohio, from which town she later took her stage name. She began her schooling in the buckeye state, and it was just when she was preparing to enter high school that her family returned to New York. After much persuasion she triumphed over parental opposition and was allowed to make her first stage appearance. That was in William A. Brady's spectacle, "'Op o' My Thumb," produced six years ago at the Manhattan Opera House.

Martha played only a minor role in the Brady production, but her unusual beauty attracted the attention of several noted artists and almost over night her picture became the prize coveted by practically every magazine editor in the country. So insistent were the demands upon her time for sittings that for two years she gave up the stage.

She returned to the footlights when she was cast for a role in the Ziegfeld-Dillingham production, "The Cenutry Girl," at the Century Theatre. It was while she was playing at this theatre that Max Linder, the French screen comedian, came to America to make a series of productions. He attended a performance of "The Century Girl," saw Miss Mansfield and capitulated on the spot. "I must have her for my leading woman," he said, and so it came about that Martha made her photoplay debut.

Leading Woman for John Barrymore.

Although this engagement brought her no end of offers from picture concerns, Miss Mansfield decided, at the close of her work with Max Linder, to return to the stage. A. H. Woods immediately engaged her for an important role in "On With the Dance." When the New York run of that play ended she signed a contract with F. Ziegfeld, Jr., to appear in both the Follies and the Midnight Frolic.

Miss Mansfield's next screen appearance was made in an important role in the Selznick production of "The Perfect Lover," in which Eugene O'Brien was starred. After this she played in a picturization of "Civilian Clothes," and then John Barrymore selected her as his leading woman in the screen version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Her success in this trio of pictures was as great as her reputation as a beauty, and while her features may adorn the magazines with less frequency from now on, the citizens of "Sleepy Eye" and "Painted Post" will not be the losers, for they will be able to see her in Selznick pictures.

Mayer to Produce "Isobel."

The popularity of James Oliver Curwood's stories, and the growing demand for special pictures have induced Louis B. Mayer to produce Curwood's novel, "Isobel," as a special attraction.

Work on the production has been started at the Mayer studio, with Edwin Carewe directing House Peters and a strong cast, including Jane Novak. The working title of the picture is "The Trail's End."

Among those in the cast are Tom Wilson, Edward J. Piel, Bob Walker, Pearlie May Norton and Richard La Reno.

Robert C. Bruce on the River
Taking scenes in Cuba and Jamaica for the Educational Films Corporation.

Robert C. Bruce Completes First Series Taken by Him Outside of North America

ALTHOUGH his scenic pictures have been before the motion picture public over a very long continuous period, Robert C. Bruce has just completed his first series taken outside the continent of North America. Before this, all of his work, with the exception of a few pictures made in Canada, have been confined to the United States.

Mr. Bruce has just completed a trip of several weeks to Cuba and Jamaica for Educational Films Corporation and is now editing and titling the pictures made there. Among the titles are "The Castaway," "The Isle of Desire," "Tropical Nights," "The Narrow Winding Road," "The Banana Special" and "Water Trails." Cities and the usual objectives of the tourist have been carefully avoided in these pictures, and novelty is promised as one of their principal appeals.

For some time Mr. Bruce has followed the plan of preparing his scenarios in advance and then seeking the exact material he requires, a policy in marked contrast to that of the average scenic and travel photographer who takes what he comes upon and then assembles the matter later. The "story" element is said to be more pronounced in these Cuban and Jamaican pictures than any other that Mr. Bruce has made.

New England and Then Europe.

While the details of the productions will not be announced in advance, an idea of the story character may be obtained when it is said that "The Castaway" tells the experience of a shipwrecked sailor who finds the delights of the tropical island so great that when aid is finally at his call he elects to remain with the beauties of nature.

Upon the completion of these pictures Mr. Bruce will start on his first professional trip abroad, first visiting the British Isles. He will take his entire expedition with him, and in order that he may be satisfied that all his material is suitable, he will leave next week for a trip to the White Mountains and other sections of New England, covering 1,500 miles in a week and putting his cameras, automobiles and staff to the most strenuous tests. Mr. Bruce will remain abroad for several months, returning only to edit and title some of his pictures, and then continuing his work in European fields.

His work abroad does not contemplate any of the usual travel material but scenic studies of various sections in line with the work that has won him such a high standing in this country.

Yale Supply Company Active.

C. D. Struble, manager of the Yale Theatre Supply Company, Simplex distributors for western Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and northwestern Arkansas, reports that besides having moved his establishment from its old location at the Sheidley Building, to the newly erected Film Building at Seventeenth and Main streets, Kansas City, Mo., he has also been active in spreading the fame of the Simplex projector through his territory.

A partial list of recent Simplex installations made through the Yale company include Princess Theatre, Kirksville, Mo.; Arrow Theatre, Broken Bow, Okla.; El Reno Theatre, El Reno, Okla.; Strand Theatre, Tulsa, Okla.; Electric Theatre, Joplin, Mo.; Electric Theatre, Springfield, Mo., and Fletcher Theatre, Fletcher, Okla.

Leon Gendron Signed for Madge Kennedy.

Although it is only a short time since Leon Gendron made his screen debut as a juvenile in a forthcoming Cosmopolitan-Vignola production, entitled "The World and His Wife," he has just been retained by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for a prominent part in the story on which Madge Kennedy is now working at its New York studio. The name of Miss Kennedy's picture is "The Girl with the Jazz Heart," and in it Gendron plays a role which is not only that of the leading juvenile, but also has a "character" side to the portrayal.

Shackleton's Film Released by Robertson-Cole Is Booked by Prominent Exhibitors

ALL that was predicted for "The Bottom of the World," the Sir Ernest Shackleton Antarctic Expedition picture, by the exhibitors, scientists and others who were privileged to pre-view it, and by virtue of the wide interest in the picture when it was shown in England, has come true. Broadway has taken "The Bottom of the World" to its heart, which is a fact of considerable significance when one remembers that the film is actual history and not a flight of fancy.

Aside from the warmth with which the New York show world has greeted the Shackleton picture, the scientific world in the metropolis is much interested. This is evidenced in the showing of the picture at the American Museum of Natural History, where it was viewed by scores of savants concerned in the various sciences. Through the courtesy of Robertson-Cole, which is distributing the film, it was given a showing at the museum before members of the scientific staff.

Considerable attention was given the Shackleton picture in connection with its Broadway showing from the first. When it was shown to Dr. Hugo Risenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, he did not wait for a salesman to approach him on the matter of booking the picture, but personally ordered it at once from the New York exchange. He saw in its humanly interesting story, as well as its wide scientific interest the greatest picture of its kind ever made. The New York papers more than backed up his judgment.

Besides Dr. Risenfeld, who booked it first in New York, others have followed quickly. Among those are Marcus Loew. The picture will be shown in all the Loew houses.

In the West, Eugene Roth, director of the California Theatre, San Francisco, has booked the picture. In the Madison Theatre, Detroit, one of Michigan's finest houses, John H. Kunsky will show the production. The Stanley Theatre, in Philadelphia, one of the representative houses of that part of the country; the Euclid Theatre Cleveland, one of Ohio's finest picture theatres, and the Auditorium, Minneapolis, a house which is controlled by a competing company, all have booked "The Bottom of the World," and will feature it.

Louis Klopsch Is to Extend Field of Screenews Service

LOUIS KLOPSCH, who for the past nine months has been in charge of production publicity of Fox Film Corporation, has resigned and has left for an extended tour of the United States in the interests of Screenews Service, an organization which serves more than 300 newspapers with a weekly news service of the happenings of the motion picture field.

During the trip, which will take Mr. Klopsch to the coast, he will try to establish in those cities to which Screenews Service is not already sent an understanding with the leading newspaper of the community by which Screenews Service will become a feature of the paper.

Mr. Klopsch was with Metro Pictures Corporation at the time war was declared and immediately resigned his position there to enlist in the Seventh Regiment, later being transferred to the 165th Infantry and going overseas with the Rainbow Division. Upon his return from France Mr. Klopsch joined the staff of his former chief, Arthur James, then supervisor of advertising and publicity of Fox Film Corporation.

Vitagraph Opens Exchange at 1915 Third Avenue, Seattle

AFTER practically finecombing the business section of Seattle for a suitable building to use as an exchange, Vitagraph finally abandoned the search, and put up a building of its own. Manager Cobbs and his staff has moved into the new building, which provides thoroughly equipped quarters. The building is in the heart of that city's film activities, at 1915 Third avenue, and the space is more than twice that used at the previous Vitagraph office at 415 Olive street in that city.

The new Seattle building is but one phase of Vitagraph's expansion in the Northwest. About three weeks ago that company opened an exchange in Portland where previously it had no office at all. It is one of the few film exchanges in the Oregon metropolis.

As in the case of all Vitagraph branch offices, the new Seattle and Portland exchanges are equipped with modern and fireproof projection rooms.

Actors Name Ethel Barrymore for A. E. A. Vice-Presidency

MISS ETHEL BARRYMORE accepted the nomination for the vice-presidency on the regular ticket of the Actors' Equity Association, which is headed by John Emerson as candidate for the presidency, when it was tendered her recently by the nominating committee.

The name of Wilton Lackeye, which originally appeared on the regular ticket for the vice-presidency, was withdrawn by the committee, owing to Mr. Lackaye's failure to either accept or reject the nomination, which was offered him three weeks ago. It was necessary for the committee to nominate at once a candidate for the vice-presidency in order to include the candidate's name in an official bulletin of the regular ticket to be sent to Equity members throughout the country.

Hugo, who in company with other state officials, viewed the film at a private screening in the capitol at Albany.

Metro Gives Claire Whitney Part in New S-L Production

CLAIRE WHITNEY has been engaged for the part of Marian Holbury in the forthcoming S-L special production, "Love, Honor and Obey," adapted by Eugene Walter from Charles Neville Buck's novel, "The Tyranny of Weakness," and now being made at Metro's New York City studios in Sixty-first street. E. J. Ratcliffe has also been added to the cast, which includes Wilda Bennett, Henry Harmon, Kenneth Harlan, William Williams and George Cowl.

Miss Whitney was recently starred in the screen production, "Mothers of Men." Prior to that she was seen in the Metro special, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," with King Baggot. The screen career of this stage actress has also included leading roles in "The New York Peacock," "Thou Shalt Not Steal," "Camille" and "Shirley Kane." Miss Whitney is a New York girl.

Her part of Marian Holbury in "Love, Honor and Obey" is that of a society leader who leaves her brutal husband after a violent quarrel and flings herself into the unwilling arms of Stuart Emmet, a novelist, the role to be interpreted by Kenneth Harlan.

"The Fortune Teller" Begins Its Broadway Run on May 9

ROBERTSON-COLE has placed "The Fortune Teller," the Albert Capellani super-special with Marjorie Rambeau as its star, for a run, starting on Sunday, May 9, at B. S. Moss's Broadway Theatre, New York City.

"The Fortune Teller" presents a number of attractive views in and about the New York of the present and of other days. Miss Rambeau first is seen as a young wife wedded to a cold-hearted scientist who shares little of her warm love for their child. Then she passes through a series of dramatic changes, being robbed of her child and forced into a life of degradation. At last she rises again to find happiness after years of misery and pain.

The management of the Broadway Theatre, in showing "The Fortune Teller," will be aided by the fifty-page exploitation book which Robertson-Cole is issuing, the largest book it has yet gotten out to guide the exhibitor in showing a picture.

Republic Appoints Branch Managers.

Sam E. Morris, general manager of the Republic Distributing Corporation, has announced the appointment of Carl Michael as sales manager of the Republic branch in Minneapolis. Robert Cotton, former branch manager, resigned on May 1.

Mr. Morris also announced the appointment of D. Williston as Republic branch sales manager at Indianapolis.

Famous Players Votes Dividend.

The board of directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at a meeting on April 12 in the company's home office voted the regular quarterly dividend of $2 on the corporation's preferred stock. The dividend is payable May 1 to stockholders of record of April 19.

Acquisition of Regent and Piccadilly Entrenches Loew Strongly in Rochester

BY purchasing a majority of the stock in the companies owning the Regent and Piccadilly theatres, the Loew interests have secured control of those two Rochaster, N. Y., houses. It was long known that Loew was seeking to get into Rochester and that plans were under way to build a house. Now it is understood that in addition to controlling the two largest picture houses in the city, a new theatre will be built to house Loew vaudeville.

Two officers of Loew, Inc.—E. B. Bernstein, treasurer, and Leopold Friedman, assistant secretary and attorney—came to Rochester to put through the deal. Sufficient stock of the Piccadilly Theatre, Inc., was bought to secure control, and George E. Simpson, who had a majority of the stock in the East Avenue Theatre Company, owners of the Regent, turned his stock over to Loew.

To Be Operated by Regorson.

The houses with the Gordon have been operated by the Regorson Corporation, of which Mr. Simpson is president and general manager. The Gordon is owned by the Gordon Photo Theatre Company, the stock of which is held by the Gordons of Boston and Washington. It is understood that for the time being at least the Regorson Corporation will continue to operate all three of the theatres and that Mr. Simpson will remain in charge.

No definite announcement has been made regarding the site of the proposed vaudeville house or when it will be built, but it is said that several sites in East Main street are under consideration. One site is said to be in the heart of the business district and another near the National Academy of Motion Pictures being built by George Eastman.

To Build $1,000,000 House.

The Regorson Corporation recently bought land in Clinton avenue South for about $300,000, on which it was announced that a picture house costing nearly $1,000,000 would be built. It is understood that the company will build this house as planned, but that construction will be held off until building operations take a drop from the present high costs. No more definite announcement is forthcoming now.

Chadwick Pictures Incorporated.

The Chadwick Pictures Corporation with offices at 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, has been incorporated with I. E. Chadwick as president and Jacques Kopfstein as vice president and general manager.

The purpose of this new organization is to sell all type of production on the open market. The product which will be handled will include feature attractions and short subjects from one reel length up.

$300,000 Spent in Making "Joseph."

In its issue of May 1 the Moving Picture World, in describing the making of Armenia Films' "Joseph," stated that $75,000 was spent in the fourteen months devoted to the making of the production. Mr. Zilelian, head of Armenia Films, calls our attention to the fact that the sum of money involved should have been 75,000 pounds, which at the actual rate of exchange would make the sum about $300,000.

Harris Adapting "Old Homestead."

Elmer Harris has been chosen to write the new Paramount Artcraft version of "The Old Homestead," according to announcement from the studios on the West Coast.

Mr. Harris has made a thorough study of the Denman Thompson play and has determined to make the screen adaptation one of the most appealing he has ever undertaken. George Melford will give it a lavish production. Further details will be announced later.

Trade Awaits Educational Description of Its System of Twenty-two Exchanges

THE Educational Films Corporation will next week announce its own complete exchange system with offices in the twenty-two principal motion picture centers of the United States. Actual contracts covering all but three of these territories have been signed, and these will be closed within a few days. These statements were authorized yesterday by E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager.

Details of the exchange system were practically completed during Mr. Hammons' visit to Chicago, since he took advantage of the various meetings there to discuss the details with a number of exhibitors. He found there an unexpectedly strong demand for participation in the Educational plan of distribution, with the result that there were many bidders for each of the territories remaining open. The three now remaining territories could have been easily closed at that time, but Mr. Hammons preferred to wait upon certain developments in the East.

Nothing But Short Subjects.

Each one of the exchanges will be directly controlled by Educational and they will handle nothing but short subjects made and distributed by the parent company. The main organization will be maintained in New York, where Mr. Hammons has been gathering together the men whose association he has desired. Announcement of the home office organization will probably follow shortly after the list of exchanges, their managers and locations are given. It is an important part of the Educational plan to give each exhibitor, through the exchanges, complete service and to perfect a system of distribution that will remove all the usual complaints.

In this announcement Mr. Hammons called attention to the high class of men that are associated with the company in the exchange organization. He is enthusiastic in the belief that they will be able to afford a service and sales group that is without a superior.

Exchange Men Have Financial Interest.

"We have taken our time," said Mr. Hammons, "in selecting these men because we wanted people who will be recognized by every exhibitor as representing the best in motion pictures. The selection of mere territorial representatives would have been simple, but our plans have called for far more than merely salaried employes. We have sought not only men of unquestioned standing, but we have invited their financial participation in the ownership of the individual exchanges because we believe that such interest would insure their greater co-operation to the exhibitor.

"Educational will control the majority of stock in every one of the exchanges, but we have permitted financial participation up to as much as 49 per cent. Each exchange will be under the direct control of the home office and every policy must meet the approval of the general management. It can be seen that such a plan invites the co-operation of men who would not be interested in a mere salary arrangement.

"An important part of the plan to us is that these exchange interests will represent a great number of the first run theatres in the principal cities of the country. In every case the men who are interested in our exchanges have been led to become associated with us because they realize the quality of the material that we will supply."

"The time is near when no school in this country will be complete without its motion picture projection machine and no instructor well prepared or student mechanically inclined well taught without facility in its use."

This is a statement of F. W. Reynolds, of the extension division of the University of Utah, for a time connected with the extension division of the United States Bureau of Education, who has prepared a list of the educational institutions now equipped with motion picture projection machines. His report shows that more than 2,000 colleges and schools and more than 2,600 churches, libraries and clubs are using motion pictures for educational purposes.

Baker Cutting "Whiff of Heliotrope."

Director George D. Baker, who has been working for the past several weeks on Richard Washburn Childs' "A Whiff of Heliotrope," for Cosmopolitan Productions, has completed the shooting of the scenes and is now engaged in cutting and titling.

Long-Run Pictures Are Now the Aim of Directors, Says President of Mayflower MOTION picture producers today are concentrating their efforts on productions of such high standard as will be calculated to guarantee exhibitors indefinite runs with corresponding profitable return," says Benjamin A. Prager, president of Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

"We have given much consideration to the continually growing demand for such feature productions," declares Mr. Prager, "and it has been our aim to sponsor pictures that will not merely be used for restricted dates but may be kept going for a prolonged period because of popular demand.

"Under the Mayflower plan, directors of unquestioned reputations are allowed absolute sway, untrammeled by any restrictions whatever in the preparation of film versions of the works of authors of the highest standing. This brings out the best that is in the director, who benefits from the realization that he alone is responsible for the picture. With such able directors as Allan Dwan, Sidney A. Franklin and R. A. Walsh equipped with these unlimited powers, their already splendid records will undoubtedly be materially enhanced.

"To co-ordinate with these full-power directors, there is a highly organized machine which places at their disposal the very latest developments of the camera, lighting and other equipment, all procured by the liberal expenditure of funds intelligently invested."

Mr. Prager went on to show that fully 70 per cent of the amusement seeking public attends motion picture shows; therefore it should be evident that every possible effort must be made to satisfy such an immense clientele.

"Judging from advanced information furnished for the census of 1920," he said, "it is strongly apparent that the interest in motion pictures is growing in the same phenomenal ratio that has characterized it up to the present. The industry is now rapidly striding to second place among the nation's great enterprises."

Mack Leaves Hill Theatre.

A. Johnnie Mack, who for the past two years has been part owner and manager of the Hill Theatre and of the Hill Theatre Corporation, Newark, N. J., has sold his interest and resigned his position.

Mr. Mack has been in the show business for over twenty-five years, being an expert aeronaut and at one time winning a gold medal donated by the government for performing many stunts with balloons.

After a few months' vacation, Mr. Mack will resume his activities in the motion picture field.

More Than 3,000 Additional Houses Book Semon Comedies

LARRY SEMON'S popularity as a comedian and the real merit of his productions are being splendidly demonstrated by the rapidly increasing demand for his comedies reaching the Vitagraph offices. Some idea of the Larry Semon wave that is sweeping over the country may be gained by the fact that within the past five weeks more than 3,000 theatres throughout the United States and Canada, which never before exhibited a Semon comedy, have added his pictures to their attractions, and are advertising and presenting them as features. The additional bookings are by no means confined to any particular class of theatres, but include a wide range from the smallest to the largest. Among the more prominent theatres that have booked the Larry Semon comedies, beginning with "School Days," which is just being released, are the America in Denver, the New Madison in Detroit, the Portola in San Francisco, the California in Los Angeles, and the Gardner and Loew's Hippodrome in Baltimore.

Some of the exhibitors are so anxious to show their appreciation that they send telegrams. "To our mind 'The Grocery Clerk' and 'The Fly Cop' could not be improved," telegraphed C. F. Rollins, of the Star Theatre, Boston. "However, if Semon's next one, 'School Days,' is any better we will take off our hats and say that Larry Semon is without any shadow of doubt the king of screen comedians."

Larry Semon's newest, "School Days," will open a week's engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York, this coming Sunday.

"Sex" Is Given Three Weeks' Run by a Detroit Exhibitor

"SEX," J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, now registering an unprecedented success in its third big week in Los Angeles, will be given a three weeks' presentation in Detroit, beginning mid-May, as the result of contracts signed the past week by Charles H. Miles, the prominent Cleveland and Detroit showman, and Tom Ealand, general manager of the Miles Detroit enterprises, the Detroit booking having been made with E. A. Crane, local exchange manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

The Louise Glaum production will open for a week at the Majestic, and for the two succeeding weeks will hold the boards at the Orpheum and Regent, respectively. Already Mr. Ealand and Charles Guise, his exploitation expert, have laid their plans for a promotion campaign that will outstrip their drives on "Sahara" and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," Miss Glaum's previous J. Parker Read, Jr., successes.

Among the big first-run bookings reported this week on "Sex" are The American, Troy, N. Y.; the Orpheum, Twin Falls, Ida.; the Ferry Field, Detroit, Mich.; the Mecca-Palace, Saginaw, Mich.; the Strand, Charlotte, N. C., and the Lyric, Lincoln, Neb.

"Desperate Hero" Is Third Moore Picture.

The erection of a large set for the third Owen Moore Selznick production, "The Desperate Hero," is said to have necessitated the construction of a bazaar—a typical country fair—in which several hundred persons were used as extras.

Supporting Mr. Moore are Gloria Hope, who plays the leading feminine role; Nell Craig, former Essanay star, back on the screen after an absence of two years; Henry Miller, Jr., Emmett King, Charles Alling and several other prominent screen players. Wesley Ruggles directed the production.

"The Desperate Hero" was written by Edgar Franklin, and adapted for the screen by Zelda Crosby.

Ince Buys "I Wonder If—."

"I Wonder If—," a story of Manhattan madness as applied to frail femininity, has been purchased by Thomas H. Ince for the next Ince-Paramount picture starring Enid Bennett. The story was written by Frank Dazey.

The production will begin next week under the direction of Fred Niblo. Agnes Christine Johnston scenarized the original story.

"Fatty" Arbuckle—Baseball Fan.

Hodkinson Films Booked by First-Run Los Angeles Houses

PRODUCTIONS released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation played in three first-run houses of Los Angeles' Rialto last week. With J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, "Sex," at Gore Brothers & Lesser's Kinema, "Desert Gold," Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey picture, at the Garrick and "His Temporary Wife" as the attraction at the Victory, the Hodkinson organization set a new mark for a week's picture distribution in Los Angeles.

Backed by a strong campaign "Sex" smashed all opening day figures, a fact verified by the Gore-Lesser management's hurried action in arranging with F. A. Wagner, Hodkinson Los Angeles manager, for the following week's showing of the Louise Glaum production at the firm's other first-run house, the Alhambra.

Claud E. Halsell, the power behind the successful Garrick Theatre, won a fair share of the exploitation laurels during Hodkinson week with a "Desert Gold" campaign as effective and attractive as the production itself.

At the Victory, where "His Temporary Wife" held the boards during Hodkinson week, Chris Glinn, the proprietor of the house, stressed the leap year angle of the production, co-starring Rubye De Remer, Edmund Breese and Mary Boland in all his advertising, the feature of his lobby display being hand-painted cards with some catchy paragraphs on the advantage or evils resulting from girls taking the initiative at popping the question.

New Macauley Picture Is Tale of West Virginia Mountaineers

FOLLOWING his appearances in "When Bearcat Went Dry" and "The Gift Supreme," which are distributed by the Republic Distributing Corporation, Bernard Durning promises to reveal an unusual phase of his acting ability in "The Sowing of Alderson Cree," the third production to be made for Republic by MacCauley Photoplays, according to a recent announcement.

In the cast supporting Mr. Durning are Pauline Starke, who was featured in many Triangle plays; Gloria Hope, also a well-known screen player, and Eugene Besserer, whose first stage appearance was with McKee Rankin. Other players are Charles Edler, Jack Curtis, Evelyn Selbie, George Hernandez, Jack Levering, and two boys, Burwell Hamrick and George Stone.

The story is laid in the mountains of West Virginia. It is described as a powerful production, throwing to the foreground all the animalism and primitive instinct of the West Virginia mountains, shaded with the religious fervor for which the mountaineers are known.

"The Sowing of Alderson Cree" is from the novel of the same name by Margaret Prescott Montague. Sada Cowan adapted the story for the screen. Ollie O. Sellers is directing.

"Invisible Divorce" Third National Picture.

"The Invisible Divorce," the third production of National Picture Theatres, Inc., of which Lewis J. Selznick is president, now being produced at the Selznick West Coast studios under the direction of Thomas R. Mills, is announced as setting forth some stirring and ever present phases of the divorce question, which are thrown on the screen by the superb characterizations of an all-star cast.

In the cast are Walter McGrail, Leatrice Joy, Walter Miller, Grace Darmond, Tom Eaton, J. B. Ryder, Pidgie Ryder, John Barry, Claire Kane Barry and Peter Carr.

"The Invisible Divorce" was written by Lelia Burton Wells. Katherine Reed adapted the story for the screen.

"Marooned Hearts" Is Complete.

Final exterior scenes for the Selznick production, "Marooned Hearts," in which Lewis J. Selznick presents Zena Keefe, the 1920 star, have been taken in the Bahamas under the direction of George Archainbaud.

At the head of the cast are Miss Keefe, Conway Tearle, Eric Mayne, George Backus, and Joseph Flanagan.

Famous Players-Lasky Will Re-Issue Cecil De Mille's "Old Wives for New"

TO give exhibitors who have shown "Why Change Your Wife?", and other Cecil B. DeMille productions an opportunity to obtain greater revenue from the popularity of Mr. DeMille's pictures, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has announced that the Cecil B. DeMille success of a few years ago, "Old Wives for New," will be reissued on June 6.

Taken from the successful book of the same name by David Graham Phillips, "Old Wives for New," when it was first issued, set a new mark in motion picture production. This mark, it is declared, has been equalled only a few times since. Into "Old Wives for New" Mr. De Mille puts all the skill for the portrayal of characters, lavish settings and careful detail which has established him as a foremost director.

Since "Old Wives for New" Mr. DeMille has produced, among others, "For Better For Worse," "Don't Change Your Husband" and his latest picture, "Why Change Your Wife"—all treating of the problems which come up in modern marriage.

It is pointed out that "Old Wives for New" was released at a time when the motion picture public was considerably smaller than it is now, and that although the picture has great popularity, thousands of people who go to motion pictures regularly today were not film enthusiasts then.

A factor which is emphasized in the Famous Players announcement is the opportunity which exhibitors have to cash in on the prestige which the latest Cecil B. DeMille pictures have built up. "Why Change Your Wife?," present reports indicate, is a great money-maker. It has just opened at the Criterion Theatre, New York, for an indefinite run and in other leading theatres throughout the country is said to be proving equally successful. By booking "Old Wives for New" after the showing of "Why Change Your Wife?" exhibitors can capitalize the popularity of the most recent DeMille success, it is argued.

"Ruth of the Rockies" Title of Ruth Roland's Next Serial

RUTH OF THE ROCKIES" is the title selected for the fifteen-episode serial which Ruth Roland is now producing at the Astra studios for Pathe. The picture will be Miss Roland's seventh Pathe serial.

The scenario, by Gilson Willets, is a picturization of "Broadway Bab," written by Johnston McCulley and published in All Story Magazine. Production was begun in the middle of January and the company is now working on exterior scenes for the seventh episode.

In addition to starring in the picture, Miss Roland is taking an active part in the producing of it and consults with George Marshall regarding all details of direction. The supporting cast is headed by Herbert Heyes, and the heavy role is played by Tom Lingham. Other prominent parts are played by Jack Rollens, Fred Burns, William Gillis, Gilbert Holmes and Norma Nichols.

Gibson Visits Eastman Plant.

George Gibson, factory superintendent of the Rothacker Chicago laboratories, has left for Rochester, N. Y., where he will spend several days at the Eastman Kodak plant as the guest of Mr. Blair. Then he will visit the Norma and Constance Talmadge Studios and other New York studios.

Lane Finishers on Dalton Picture.

After three weeks on location at Charleston, S. C., Charles Lane has just returned to New York with Dorothy Dalton, director Harley Knoles and the remainder of the supporting cast for her forthcoming Famous Players production, "This Woman —This Man." The trip South was made largely to film the famous Magnolia Gardens in Charleston, a privilege that had never before been accorded.

Vitagraph to Release Harry Morey in "Sea Rider," a Story of Seafaring Folk VITAGRAPH is putting out a picture this month—Harry Morey in "The Sea Rider"—every inch of which was made within ten miles of Manhattan Island's Battery. The story opens at Scallop Haven, a little New England fishing village, and closes in New York.

New York Harbor supplied most of the background for the production and the other exteriors were taken at selected spots along the Long Island shore. The whole story riots with the salt spray of the bay, with shore ice, tar, rope, sails, nets, the tackle of sailing vessels and the looming masts and spars of shipping.

The star in "The Sea Rider" had sea and wind and ice to buffet instead of indoor tanks, Caribbean zephyrs and sunbeams. The director of "The Sea Rider," Edwin L. Hollywood, the assistant director, Frank Heath, the technical men and the cameramen made the wave-beaten wharves of New York their playground, and when other productions calling mostly for exteriors were being made down South. Harry L. Dittmar is the author of the story and Fred Schaefer is the adapter and scenario writer.

"The Sea Rider" deals altogether of seafaring folk. The story, with its first scenes in a fishing village, shows unusual native types and surroundings, the later scenes staying just as close to salt water, though in New York, but a New York of maritime scenes rich in composition and color, and to which the average New Yorker is a stranger. "The Sea Rider," played by Morey, is in love with a village belle, but his romance is shattered by the catastrophe of a human frailty. Forswearing his creed of home ties and a rooftree ashore, the Sea Rider becomes an embitter vagabond of the ocean as skipper of a disreputable schooner. In a most unexpected source, he finds proof of that genuine quality of love which he thought was only a fable.

Alice Calhoun and Louiszita Valentine share honors as leading women. Webster Campbell, Van Dyke Brooke and Robert Gaillard are prominent members of the supporting cast.

Cecil B. DeMille Coming East.

For the purpose of laying out future production plans, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, has wired Cecil B. DeMille, director-general, requesting Mr. DeMille to come on to New York for a conference. Mr. Lasky is sailing in the near future for England where he will put in operation the big production plans which the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., has for making pictures at the company's new London studio.

Mr. DeMille will arrive in New York May 5, it is expected, and will bring with him the first print of his big new special production, "Something to Think About," which he has just completed.

It's nice when the local paper calls you a "hustling manager," but it's nicer to put in the bank the money you make from press-worked pictures. Boom your pictures and they will boom you.

Hyea—Lee, Kako Zee Pussyfoot—That's Chinese—Then the Poor Fellow Faints After Trying to Answer Him.

Scenes 1 and 2 are from "Content," the second release of the Kaufman Weekly, while scene 3 is from "A Good Fellow," taken from the first production. These pictures are being released by Selznick.

"Return of Tarzan" To Be Distributed by Goldwyn as Much Exploited Special

THE RETURN OF TARZAN," a picturization of Edgar Rice Burroughs' book, produced by the Numa Pictures Corporation, will be handled as a big special by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. The picture is now undergoing a final editing preparatory to its release, backed by a heavy exploitation campaign. Harry Revier directed the production, which was supervised by George M. Merrick.

Those familiar with the exploits of the romantic ape-man will recall that the story opens on board a liner where Tarzan meets a beautiful countess and her brother Rokoff, who becomes Tarzan's bitter enemy. Later the ape-man finds his way to the jungle, where he reverts to the half-savage ways of his early training.

The picture was produced on lavish scale and introduces many incidents of jungle fighting said to be startlingly realistic, notably Tarzan's two encounters with lions and a struggle with a man-sized ape. More than 3,000 extra people were used in some of the spectacular scenes, it is said. Joe Martin, the well-known screen ape, is among the animals present, as are seven lions and lionesses.

Numbered in the cast are several well-known screen players, headed by Gene Pollar, who is seen in the role of Tarzan. Standing six feet two inches and weighing 215 pounds, Pollar is an athlete as well as an actor. George Romain is cast as the French count. Armond Cortoz plays Rokoff the bad man. Walter Miller is also cast as a villain. Others in the company are Estelle Taylor, Betty Turner and Donna Pepita Ramirez.

No expense was spared in securing a faithful interpretation of Mr. Burroughs' popular novel. The company was sent to whatever part of the country offered the best facilities for photographing the exteriors. Several months were spent in California, and later Director Revier and his players went to Florida for additional jungle scenes. Goldwyn has not announced a definite date for the distribution of this super-feature.

Pathe Reports Heavy Demand to Book Lloyd's Second Series

REAPING the benefit of the marked success of the first series of Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies, Pathe announces a rush by exhibitors to book the second series. The most prominent showmen in the country are bidding for first-run preference on the comedian's work. "An Eastern Westerner" completes the first series, and is released May 2.

Beginning with the first of the second series, Lloyd will make his bow at the Capitol Theatre, New York. He will also continue to entertain audiences of the Strand Theatre.

The Pantheon Theatre in Toledo is among the host of houses booking the new sereis. The Globe in McKeesport also signed for the second series.

To Release "Sherry" on May 30.

A tribute to the work of Edgar Lewis is the fact that hundreds of theatre owners and managers who have played his "Other Men's Shoes" have wired to the branches of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and contracted for his next release, "Sherry," without waiting to see it. On the announcement of Mr. Lewis that it was a picture of the same caliber as "Other Men's Shoes" these exhibitors have taken the latest Edgar Lewis production.

"Sherry" is from the pen of George Barr McCutcheon. Pat O'Malley is in the title role, supported by Lillian Hall, Harry Spingler, Richard Cummings, Gertrude Norman, Maggie Halloway Fisher, William Jeffries and Scott McKee.

Marshall Neilan Adds Voice to Those Predicting Return of Original Story

BECAUSE the demand for well-known novels and successful stage plays far exceeds the available supply is one reason," declares Marshall Neilan, "why the original photoplay will soon come back into its own."

Mr. Neilan, producer of "The River's End" and "Don't Ever Marry" knows whereof he speaks, and his opinion is of interest to everyone connected with the profession.

"A few years ago," he continued, "when a few prominent producers turned to the established stage successes and the works of famous authors for material for photoplay production, a new era dawned on the picture business. Immediately nearly all companies vied with one another in securing the stories which had already met with public approval as books or plays.

Demand Exhausting Supply.

"But so great has been the demand to obtain these stories that in a few years the supply of suitable material has become nearly exhausted, and soon we are to see a return of the original photoplay. The inevitable result of the keen competition was the boosting of prices to such an extent that today the market value of the few remaining available stories is far in excess of what the average independent producer can afford to pay.

"This does not mean, however, that we are due for pictures inferior to those we have had in the past three or four years. On the contrary, I look for better pictures everywhere because producers will have to select their material from thousands of original stories among which they are certain to find new ideas and new themes.

"And, again, the best efforts of our renowned authors and playwrights of the future will be accomplished with the eventual filming of their stories in mind, so that even though their works may first reach the public in book form or by the stage, they can rightfully be classed with the original photoplay."

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has announced the appointment of R. S. Shrader, manager of the Pathe Indianapolis branch, as central western manager. Not alone in sales records, but in service and satisfaction to exhibitors he has earned his promotion. He is succeeded in the management at Indianapolis by P. B. Elliott, who was a salesman out of the branch, and who contributed much to its success.

To fill the position of branch manager of the Pittsburgh exchange of Pathe, made vacant by the appointment of Miles F. Gibbons as short subject sales manager, Mr. Brunet has trained Frank C. Bonistall. The latter was formerly with Famous Players and National Pictures as branch manager.

By the time the production is completed the picture will have taken six months in the making and will be as nearly a perfect masterpiece of the screen as money, acting and good direction can produce.

The title of the picture has as yet been kept secret and will not be announced until just previous to the attraction's release. The script was prepared by Director John Stahl.

Director Stahl was brought to the Los Angeles studios from New York, as were Ramsey Wallace and Gareth Hughes. George Fisher, Winter Hall, Catherine Van Buren and Richard Headrick were engaged in Los Angeles to complete the cast.

Edith Roberts to Be Starred in South Sea Island Picture

A STRONG picture of the South Sea Islands, the heroine of which is a half-caste native gril, educated in an American seminary and who returns to her wild customs and native dress, has just been put into production at Universal City. Edith Roberts will star in the new picture, which is to be called "Marama."

"Marama" was bought for Priscilla Dean. All plans were laid for its early production by that star. Almost at the last minute, however, a story was found that suited Miss Dean far better. Miss Roberts was the logical successor of Miss Dean in the volatile leading role of the projected South Sea picture. Norman Dawn will supervise the making of the picture. The story was written by Ralph Stock.

Miss Roberts will be supported by Jack Perrin. Another in the cast will be Noble Johnson, the giant West Indian who is remembered as the player who rode the chariot over the rapet in "Intolerance."

"The Sagebrusher" Playing to Big Business Wherever Shown

WITH a record of nearly 400 approved contracts reported within the past ten days, thirty of them for full week engagements in some of the big first-run cities, "The Sagebrusher," Benjamin B. Hampton's screen version of Emerson Hough's story of love and faith, gives every promise of equalling the volume of business mark set by Mr. Hampton's two previous Hodkinson releases, Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" and "The Westerner," from the Stewart Edward White novel.

James Q. Clemmer was well rewarded for the excellent presentation he gave "The Sagebrusher" recently at his Seattle first-run house. M. L. Markowitz, who guides the destinies of the Strand, San Francisco, also was given cause to commend the Hampton standard of production, "The Sagebrusher" having just completed one of the most successful engagements at the Strand since Mr. Markowitz took hold.

Tucker Brothers, owners of the Royal Theatre, Tulsa, Okla., where the production was booked for a three-day run, communicated with J. C. De Walt, Hodkinson Oklahoma manager, for a two-day extension of the engagement, being the first time the house has ever played a picture more than four days.

Hodkinson Managers Report Big Bookings on "Harvest Moon"

THAT the country's exhibitors are fully cognizant of Doris Kenyon's vogue among stage and screen devotees was evidenced by the outpourings of picture showmen at trade showings of her newest Deitrich-Beck production, Augustus Thomas' "The Harvest Moon," held recently at all Hodkinson exchanges. Spot booking figures that far exceeded those obtained on Miss Kenyon's first Hodkinson release, "The Bandbox," proved convincingly that "The Harvest Moon" is all that its producers and the Hodkinson organization have claimed for it.

E. A. Crane, Hodkinson Detroit manager, who recently staged a midnight showing of Louise Glaum in "Sex," took advantage of Miss Kenyon's week engagement in Detroit and induced her to grace his exhibitor showing of "The Harvest Moon" at the Washington Theatre. The event attracted showmen from every part of Michigan.

Among the bookings reported this week on "The Harvest Moon" are the Garrick, St. Louis, Mo.; the Franklin, Philadelphia, Pa.; the Union Square, Pittsfield, Mass.; the Castle, South Bend, Ind.; the Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind., and the Columbia, Washington, D. C.

C., for additional Southern locations not available in the Savannah district. George Fawcett, a prominent member of the supporting cast, will go direct from Charleston to Florida when he finishes this picture, to start a South Sea story there with Famous Players.

George Fawcett, who has starred on the legitimate stage and appeared in D. W. Griffith pictures, will be seen as "Senator Melvin." Webster Campbell will appear as David Barrow, a young lawyer, in love with the senator's daughter, played by Miss Griffith. Charles Abbe, who played the character lead in Taylor Holmes' stage production of "Bunker Bean," also has a prominent character role. Others are Roy Applegate, Joseph Burke, William Holden, Blanche Davenport and Frances Miller Grant.

She is "The Emotional Miss Vaughn," and the charming character brings her back to the screen in a manner sure to win the approval of the millions who have followed her work in the past. This picture is the only one of the series in which Mrs. Drew will appear.

"Need a Good Nurse for the—the—Blues?" Asks Mary Miles Minter.
We don't know what the lady answered, but she must have landed the job, 'cause we've got a picture of her as a nurse. Scene from "Nurse Marjorie," made by Realart.

"Stop That Man" Provides Farce Comedy for Moore

AN exact reproduction of a Parisian cafe in Montmarte, used as a rendezvous by Apaches, and known as the "Cafe Asassain," is but one of the large sets used in "Stop That Man," a farce comedy written by George V. Hobart, in which Lewis J. Selznick presents Owen Moore in his fifth starring vehicle.

Final scenes for the production are announced as having been filmed by Director Frank C. Griffin, with the assistance of Bob Dillon. Other details of the Parisian cafe set are said to show an old cracked floor of inlaid flagstones, a quaint bar with time worn casks of liquor, a low ceiling with massive beams, cracked walls, and old pictures and scores of sketches.

The complete cast will be announced in the near future. Luther Reed contributed the scenario from the Louis Joseph Vance story.

Bennett Engages Marie Shotwell.

Marie Shotwell has been engaged by Whitman Bennett for an important role in Lionel Barrymore's first special production under Mr. Bennett's management. Mr. Barrymore is doing a screen version of the stage play, "The Master Mind," in which Edmund Breese starred. Miss Shotwell recently completed an important role opposite Thomas Meighan in "Civilian Clothes."

Broadway Laughs at New Lloyd Comedy.

Harold Lloyd again shook Broadway with laughter during the week of May 2, when "An Eastern Westerner," sixth of his first series of two-reel comedies for Pathe was featured at the Strand and Rialto theatres. "An Eastern Westerner" completes the first Lloyd series of multiple reelers, and at present he is engaged in the production of the initial release of the second series. Production of this feature is progressing rapidly in the new studio of the Rolin Film Company in Culver City.

In "An Eastern Westerner," Lloyd is supported by virtually the same cast which made "Haunted Spooks." It is a rich satire on the Western melodrama which was so popular in its day, and gives the star a more impressive surrounding than any of his prior subjects.

Newspaper Men See Kaufman Weekly.

The Herbert Kaufman Weekly, "Content," produced by Lewis J. Selznick from one of the Herbert Kaufman editorials, was presented at a special performance given for the members of the Newspaper Publishers' Association at the Rivoli Theatre recently. Universal Points to Recent Purchases as Proof It Keeps Pledges to Industry

BETTER and bigger stories is the slogan in Universal circles these days. Every possible effort is being made to obtain the most suitable stories for the various Universal stars. Although novel and original screen stories are particularly sought, the Universal scenario department is under instructions to overlook no magazine story, book or play that might make a proper vehicle for Universal players.

"Universal is keeping its word to exhibitors and photoplay patrons that Universal pictures will be based on stories of the highest class," said R. H. Cochrane, vice-president in a recent statment. "As an earnest of what the exhibitor and the picture loving public can expect from Universal, I only have to assert that in the last week alone, we have purchased half a dozen stories of the first magnitude. Universal will give them unusual direction and production.

New Vehicle for Priscilla Dean.

"Perhaps the most important is an original screen story called 'The Cat That Walked Alone' by John Colton, a young author of unusual ability who recently has turned from the magazine field to the film world. This is an ideal vehicle for Miss Priscilla Dean.

"We also have recently purchased two inimitable farcical stories by Edgar Franklin. One of these is 'Fixed by George,' a tangle of mirthful situations involving two young married couples, and which we think is the best story that could have been found for Lyons and Moran, our comedy stars. Mr. Franklin promises to go it one better, however, in a new story he is writing for us, to be called 'Once a Plumber.' It also will be used for Lyons and Moran. The first Lyons and Moran five reeler, just completed, also was a product of Franklin's pen. It is 'Everything But the Truth.'

Much Material for Harry Carey.

"We also have selected several plays for picturization—plays that peculiarly fit the abilities of various Universal stars. Among them is the musical comedy by Fred Jackson which enjoyed such a long run in New York last season, 'La! La! Lucille!' It has been rewritten in picture form and now is being produced by Lyons and Moran. We also have obtained the picture rights to another popular play, the name of which will be disclosed later.

"We are sparing no pains to supply Harry Carey with first-class stories for his human interpretations. Spurred by the success of 'Marked Men,' a recent Carey picture from the pen of Peter B. Kyne, and 'Overland Red,' a character study by H. H. Knibbs, we have lined up three stories of equal merit for the same star.

Holman Day Story for Frank Mayo.

"The first, 'Human Stuff,' is now in production. It was an original screen story. Another, soon to go into production, is 'Fightin' Job,' a screen story by H. H. Van Loan. A third, 'Sundown Slim,' from the novel by H. H. Knibbs, promises to duplicate the success of 'Overland Red.'

"Among other stories being made into Universal pictures are 'The Red Lane,' the novel by Holman Day, now being screened with Frank Mayo in the leading role; 'False Colors,' a serial story by Edwina Levin; and 'Hitchin' Posts,' an original story by H. M. Shumate."

Private View of "Humoresque" Is Attended by Large Gathering

ALMOST the entire Eastern "Who's Who" in motion pictures turned out on the evening of May 4 at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York to witness a private showing of Cosmopolitan Productions' latest offering, "Humoresque," directed by Frank Borzage and featuring Alma Rubens.

The showing was held in the grand ballroom. The crowd was so large that even standing room was at a premium. A twenty-piece orchestra under the direction of George Beynon furnished the incidental music, and the projection was in charge of Frank Jacobs, Cosmopolitan's projectionist. The picture was a hit, and long applause followed the showing. The direction of the affair was handled by Harry I. Day, director of advertising for Cosmopolitan.

Some of Those Invited.

Among those present were Daniel Frohman, Mr. and Mrs. Elek J. Ludvigh, Fannie Hurst, Jacques S. Danielson, Norma Talmadge, Robert G. Vignola, William LeBaron, William Sistrom, Montagu Love, George D. Baker, Albert Capellani, Norman Kerry and Lulu Warrenton.

Start Testimonial Drive.

As a testimonial to Sam E. Morris and Charles R. Rogers, Briton N. Busch and Lewis J. Selznick, in order to reward all the branch managers for splendid business results, have inaugurated a special drive for volume business during May and June, which will be known as "Sam E. Morris and Charles R. Rogers months."

The purpose of the drive, according to an announcement, has been started merely as an added impetus to the spirit and enthusiasm that was manifested by the Selznick and Republic branch managers at the recent Selznick exchangemen's convention in New York.

Newspaper Publicity Proves How Popular Is Carpentier

PROVING the increasing popularity of Georges Carpentier, newspapers last week gave more of their valuable space to the French hero than ever before. From coast to coast it was flashed that Carpentier had signed a contract by which he receives $2,000 a day for his appearance in person, and exhibitors immediately began to figure his value as a moving picture attraction.

Although they cannot contract for his personal appearances, they balance against the fact that in the society drama that is being produced by Robertson-Cole the French hero will be seen not only as a fighter but as an actor. The picture production, in other words, will be most intimate and will show the man's versaility. And there will be more than an hour of the "Idol of France" instead of a few moments.

Picture Nears Completion.

The picture is now practically completed. Exterior scenes were finished at Lakewood, N. J., the latter part of last week. These scenes with Carpentier were the last to be made of the star, who started his personal tour of the country on May 3. A few more scenes remained to be shot of the other members of the company and it is anticipated that the picture will be cut during the week of May 10. The pre-release date is Memorial Day, May 30.

Sam Rork and Eugene Roth in New York.

Sam Rork, general manager of the Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation, and Eugene Roth, of San Francisco, who are interested together in a new producing company, are in New York City planning future activities. It is possible they will sell the Charles Hoyt play, "The Texas Steer," and for their first work produce the James Oliver Curwood story, "Golden Snare."

Mr. Roth still is manager of the California, Portola and Imperial theatres in San Francisco, which recently passed into the control of Famous Players-Lasky.

"You're 'No. 99.' Come from Under That Table!" Scene 3—"Marry me. I'm Not 99; Only 18."

J. Warren Kerrigan shown here in "No. 99," his latest W. W. Hodkinson production. Just thought he'd pose in the center with the girl he gets in the last reel of the picture.

Consensus of Trade Press Reviews

N.—You may classify it as a fast moving, mirth provoking comedy.

T. R.—Clevery comedy replete with numerous farcical situations.

W.—"Don't Ever Marry" is a feature comedy in every sense of the word and may prove just as attractive and profitable from its standpoint as "The River's End" is from the dramatic angle.

Would You Forgive?

(Vivian Rich—Fox)

M. P. W.—It is satisfying in story, splendidly acted and rises to a really dramatic climax.

N.—Small appeal in conventional drama.

T. R.—An acceptable program attraction.

W.—Will draw and should appeal to the sensation seekers.

Neglected Wives

(Anne Luther and E. J. Radcliffe—Wistaria)

E. H.—The picture is well made and the story holds interest throughout.

W.—Conventional story dealing with unreal characters.

Just a Wife

(Roy Stewart and Leatrice Joy—Selznick)

E. H.—Promises much for the future product of this newly formed organization.

Dangerous to Men

(Viola Dana—Metro)

M. P. W.—Pleasing comedy-drama based on story by H. V. Desmond.

T. R.—Entertaining comedy.

The Devil's Pass Key

(Eric Von Stroheim—Universal)

M. P. W.—Will have wide appeal because of its plot novelty and brilliant presentation.

N.—Stroheim has another big photoplay here.

T. R.—Eric Von Stroheim has done with "The Devil's Pass Key" very much what he did with "Blind Husbands," using Paris for a background instead of the Alps.

W.—Remember "Blind Husbands," then go to it with this.

Two Weeks

(Constance Talmadge—First National)

M. P. W.—A bright comedy of woman's winning ways.

T. R.—Should prove a valuable box office asset.

N.—A pleasing picture which should interest.

T. R.—The picture as a whole deserves listing as a program attraction of undoubted merit.

W.—Moderately interesting drama with well drawn characters.

The Strange Boarder

(Will Rogers—Goldwyn)

M. P. W.—"The Strange Boarder" should be a big winner anywhere.

N.—It has heart interest, suspense and dramatic moments, together with little touches of comedy which should interest and amuse.

T. R.—One of the very best comedies on which this favorite has figured.

W.—Will do if you don't make promises.

Rio Grande

(Rosemary Theby and Allan Sears—Pathe)

M. P. W.—Is perhaps the strongest up to the present of the many screen stories dealing with the unquiet territory along the Mexican border.

N.—Should give satisfaction wherever shown.

T. R.—The acting is satisfactory—but it's more the atmosphere which makes the picture worth while.

W.—Actionful melodrama laid on American-Mexican border.

The Fighting Shepherdess

(Anita Stewart—First National)

M. P. W.—Anita Stewart again scores a heavy triumph and almost supplicates the success she attained in the role of Madge in "In Old Kentucky."

N.—Colorful melodrama with star as Western heroine.

W.—Above the average and will specially please star's admirers.

E. H.—Satisfies all demands as a "follow-up" for "In Old Kentucky."

A Fool and His Money

(Eugene O'Brien—Selznick)

M. P. W.—It is one of the most artistic pictures of the year.

T. R.—The action is fairly fast and the picture as a whole affords pleasing entertainment.

W.—May possibly get over with the special O'Brien admirers.

E. H.—It compares favorably with any of the star's previous productions and occupies a higher plane than most of them.

"By Jove, and the Cig'rette Holder Is Q-Quite Long, 'Ole Top—Beg Pardon—'ole Girl."

"Doug" Fairbanks is sure some stoker in "The Mollycoddle," his latest United Artists' production. The mus[illegible] the cause for conversation in scene 1. Gotta see the picture to find out if he shaves it off.

Sidelights and Reflections

A PICTURE is now running at a theatre on Broadway that offers an excellent example of the importance of correct subtitles. The locale is a foreign country, a condition that makes it all the more imperative that the information conveyed by the printed words should not be misunderstood by the spectator. The picture has much to recommend it, although it suffers considerably from having been directed by the man who plays the leading character. We have already had one shining illustration of the folly of a star becoming his own director. The old saw about the lawyer who pleads his own case may be too harsh a judgment of the matter, but star and director are put at a great disadvantage when the duties of both positions are combined in one person.

But to return to the subject of subtitles: The foreign made picture contains a number of beautiful views of the coast and stretch of ocean near a fishing village in northern Europe. The hero is a pilot. One night a number of his neighbors are shown gathered on the shore, intently watching a sailing craft in the distance. They seem greatly excited, and the way the waves break against the rocks would lead a landsman to think that a heavy storm is raging. And this is where the misleading subtitle comes in. It states that the boat in the distance is in distress, and does not make it clear that the craft is signaling for a pilot because the channel into the harbor is both narrow and crooked and there are shoals on every hand that make it dangerous. The first impression is that the storm has rendered the craft unmanageable, although even a land-lubber may wonder somewhat when the pilot puts out to sea in an open boat with a full spread of canvas and sails a straight course for the craft in distress. Scenes aboard her show her to be a yacht, well manned by a sturdy crew that seem to have lost their heads and all knowledge of seamanship.

The yacht, with all sails set and not a reef in one of them, has been thrown up into the wind, and the sailors make frantic but meaningless efforts to "do something," with the flapping canvas. True, there is only what is known as a wholesail sailing breeze blowing; the pilot's boat proves this by the ease with which it makes the passage from the shore to the yacht. Any pretense to good seamanship could have kept the yacht, under reduced canvas, riding the waves in deep water until the pilot came aboard. When that useful person does reach the yacht he gives a turn at the wheel, the sails fill and the boat runs rapidly but smoothly toward the shore.

A false note is struck when the landsman is led to believe that the yacht has been made helpless by the fury of the gale, and the bad seamanship of the crew hurts the picture for the nautical sharp. An explanation in the subtitles of the exact conditions would prevent the first misunderstanding, and a little judicious editing of the scenes on the yacht would restore that respect for the crew and the captain that all good sailors like to feel for each other, no matter the other fellow's nationality.

"Riders of the Dawn"

Hodkinson Melodrama Adapted from "The Desert of Wheat," by Zane Grey," Is Alive with Action.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is not only good material for melodrama in the original story by Zane Grey, but the producers of "Riders of the Dawn," Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner, have laid hold of the dominant mood of the novel and stuck consistently to it throughout. Only in preserving villains from destruction for no other purpose than keeping them alive to the very end have the producers offended plausibility. Aside from this fault they have allowed nothing to distract them from carrying out the theme of Zane Grey's novel with many strong notes and some touches of true pathos.

Especially fine is the introduction. It is one which immediately plants the leading character in sympathetic interest. The home-coming and kindly reception of the returned soldier is an affecting situation. The ensembles, the night gathering of hoboes and the spirited riding of the vigilantes, are handled with unusual skill. There is no false economy displayed in the number and quality of types required to get convincing effects.

Roy Stewart in the leading role radiates vigor and energy while up against such accomplished villains as Robert McKim, arch conspirator of the screen, and cave man Frederick Starr. Claire Adams has limited opportunity, but she plays her part with gentle grace. Settings and backgrounds are beyond criticism. Many of the subtitles are forceful, giving dignity and character to the entire product. "Riders of the Dawn" as shown at the Strand Theatre is a generally fine entertainment.

The Story.

The homecoming of Kurt Dorn from active service in France brings out the village band, many prominent citizens, and even veterans of the Civil War. His heart is in his eyes when he meets Leonore Anderson, and he is rejoiced to find a responsive warmth in her greeting. As soon as he can get rid of friends and pay his respects to his father, Dorn is at the Anderson home releasing the pent-up ardor of his soul. He is accepted by Leonore, by her father and even by her little sister, a high favorite with all. He soon gets down to work in the wheat fields —harvesting time is nigh—but he is summoned to a secret conference and appointed to lead vigilantes, known as "Riders of the Dawn," against a band of camping "radicals" intent on a campaign of destruction and labor demoralization.

Dorn is so bold in his methods that he becomes a marked man. Attempts are made to destroy the Dorn wheat fields by lumps of phosphorus which burst into flame under the heat of the sun. Then he has incurred the hatred of a secret leader of the radicals, a lawyer named Neuman, a disappointed suitor for the hand of Leonore. A tool of Neuman, a supposed French girl appears and claims she is Dorn's wife, discrediting him with all but his father. Dorn is now so embittered that he conducts a single-handed warfare against the radicals, determined to get at their leader.

When their murderous activities result in the death of Leonore's little sister, he goes into the camp with only an aid behind him to represent a concealed posse and kills the murderer in hand-to-hand conflict. He rescues Leonore from their clutches and battles against the entire band with Leonore at his side, until the "Riders of the Dawn" arrive in force and round up the "radicals." Then is Dorn's name cleared and his future happiness assured in the love of true-hearted Leonore.

"The Dead Line"

Five-Reel Fox Subject Features George Walsh in Exciting Mountain Feud Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SET in a wild and picturesque region of woods and mountains, with a pretty stream dashing through it, this five-reel Fox production, "The Dead Line," makes a strong vehicle for George Walsh. He appears as an athletic young mountaineer, who has inherited a family feud, and loves a girl on the other side of the big quarrel. The story gets a brisk start and contains some admirable dramatic moments. It also maintains a fine degree of suspense, making the spectator forget that he is watching a picture, a tribute to the quality of the tale and the smoothness of its direction.

The plot runs true to form for a mountain feud yarn. This is not a bad fault in folk stories, for, like the true Western story, there are but few real situations. Such productions, when brought up to an uncommon point of appeal, owe the fact not so much to an effort for originality as to a consistent handling of old and time tried incidents. The coming of prohibition has in a way served to brighten up the feud tale, as there are always some illicit stills in evidence, and there is more than one touch of humor in the quaint ways in which booze is dispensed. Judge Ramsey's difficulties in getting his "licker" in this subject should awaken much sympathetic interest.

This story is strengthened, among other things, by the fact that the hero meets with a moral crisis, affecting his personal courage.

The Story.

Clay Boone, in "The Dead Line," is a member of a family which has long been at war with the Harlans in the Kentucky mountains. Clay and his father have refused to join with other mountaineers in a so-called "moonshine" trust, to which the Harlans belong. The hero is in love with Mollie Powell, a sister-in-law of the Harlan men, and under the cruel treatment she receives at home Mollie does not love the Harlans any better than does young Boone. She has been forbidden to speak to Clay, but meets him clandestinely.

In the course of several shooting altercations, Clay's father is killed; also old Dan Harlan. Clay and the Harlan boys are arrested and placed in jail, but all make a sensational escape during the trial. They fight again and this time Clay's protege, a little girl named Babe, is shot and killed. So great is his grief that Clay swears never to touch a gun again. He even endures taunts of cowardice from his enemies, and bears with Mollie's criticism. Later, however, he responds to Mollie's appeal, when a girl is in danger at the hands of one of the gang. He makes a long and terrific struggle, which results in saving the girl and his own honor. This renews Mollie's faith in him.

Katherine MacDonald's Latest First National Release Demonstrates Her Acting Ability.

KATHERINE MACDONALD has avoided the mistakes of many rising young screen stars by showing that she can act and allowing her beauty and posing to be a second consideration. This is in "Passion's Playground," her latest picture released by First National. In this picture Miss MacDonald runs the gamut from laughter to intense emotion. As to the story, it was adapted from C. N. and A. M. Williamson's "Guests of Hercules." The scenes are at Monte Carlo. The picture is very dramatic and unusually interesting.

A fine supporting cast adds to the class of the production. Norman Kerry is the leading man. He looks the part of the hero and acts it admirably. Nell Craig and Edwin Stevens have prominent places in the cast. "Passion's Playground" is a very worthy and well-made production and should find favor everywhere.

The Story.

Mary Grant, a novice in a French convent, is the heroine of "Passion's Playground." She is the child of a gambler and a runaway mother, and wanted to run away to Monte Carlo. Despite the warning of her friend, Molly Maxwell, who pointed to the fate of Marie Grant, a third chum, who eloped with a married man, the novice carried out her plan when she came into her inheritance at the age of 24. At Monte Carlo she made big winnings and was the center of attraction. Prince Vanno Della Robbia fell in love with her. He introduced her to his brother, Prince Angelo, whose bride proves to be the runaway Marie Grant.

The brothers knew nothing of Marie's past, and Mary promised to keep it a secret. Idina Bland, enraged at Prince Angelo's marriage, tells the secret in the absence of Prince Vanno. Marie falsely asserts the story is not true of her, but of Mary Grant, who, by her silence, admits her guilt. Mary Grant leaves, but it is Molly Maxwell who comes to Monte Carlo with the true story that sends Prince Vanno in search of Mary. In the meantime Mary is the victim of adventurers who seek to steal her wealth. The Prince intervenes at the proper time and proves his mettle, winning Mary's love.

"The Thirtieth Piece of Silver"

Margarita Fisher and King Baggot Appear in the American's Pleasing Presentation of a Terhune Play.

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent.

SLIGHTLY amended to meet the exigencies of screen direction, Albert Payson Terhune's story, "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," is an even more amusing story in the film than it was in printed form.

It is a clean-cut legitimate story which affords Miss Fisher one of the best legitimate vehicles she has ever had and she gives good account of herself in her depiction of this modern victim of a still more modern Bluebeard. She costumes the part gorgeously and plays with a restraint her work has not always known. King Baggot acquits himself well in the thankless role of the jealous husband and does not yield to the temptations offered by the part for overplaying. Lillian Leighton as a fortune teller plays her part with an emphasis which gives the semblance of unreality to the character, though as a matter of fact she is well within the character as the insiders know it. Forrest Stanley gives an excellent account of himself as the rejected suitor and considerable of the comedy honors go to three uncast negro players, the colored servant of the fortune teller and a pair of bell hops, who play to the manner born.

The story has been done into a screen play with unusual care and moves smoothly to a surprise climax, which keeps the interest well sustained to the last few feet of film. There is only sufficient falling action to provide an effective ending scene.

It is a comedy above the average and should please everyone.

The Story.

Leila Cole has rejected Captain Lake in favor of Tyler Cole, an enthusiastic coin collector, whose pride is the fact that he is the owner of the last of the thirty shekels paid Iscariot for the betrayal of his Master. He guards this coin with jealous care and will not permit it to be handled. Leila is told she must never open the cabinet and is not told the treasure it contains. Such things are beyond the feminine powers of appreciation. Her jealousy thus aroused is fanned by a fortune teller, Mignon Brunner, who plays the husband against the wife with the aid of a maid in the Tyler home. Leila is encouraged to believe the worst of the skeleton in the closet and Cole is made to believe that Captain Lake is still to be feared as a rival. A mutual distrust is created which becomes profitable to the seeress.

Leila is finally driven to opening the cabinet and is surprised to discover that the mysterious case does not harbor a portrait of her rival, but contains only an old silver coin. She is holding the coin when Lake calls, back from service with the Flying Corps. In her enthusiastic welcome she forgets the coin, which drops into the cuff of Lake's trousers.

Cole's appearance on the scene just as Leila is rising from the floor from her search for the coin gives him the wrong impression of the tableau. He orders Lake out and his distress when Leila confesses that Lake came for the coin, a statement she invents to cover her own transgression, is so great that she visits Lake's hotel, where she is nearly caught by her husband, who comes close upon her heels. From this point the story moves swiftly to a surprise climax, which is followed by the establishment of a new sympathy between husband and wife.

"The Dancin' Fool"

Paramount Artcraft Presents Wallace Reid in Breezy Light Comedy.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AS "The Dancin' Fool" Wallace Reid enters a new field. It is a dangerous one, inasmuch as he is portraying the character of a "rube," so admirably done by an actor who specializes in that role. He carries on, however, by sheer force of exuberant personality. Nearly everything is thrown his way, in the style of those who write to please the star, but the star in this case sets out to please the audience with his frothy comedy and does it so amiably that he pleases in spite of the vehicle in which he rides to fame and fortune. That the vehicle creaks occasionally is not of great consequence. We know in advance that the rube is bound to be a world-beater—one of the characters says so—so we let it go at that and watch the amiable company centre attention on the super-amiable lead. As for the title, it might better be "Jugs and Jazz," for that is what the story is about.

Helpful to the general effect is an unusually fine cast, Bebe Daniels hitting some high points of interest by her grace and fine acting. As for Raymond Hatton, in the character of a crabbed old uncle, he wins the biggest laugh by work as consistent as it is clever. Then there is veteran Tully Marshall and a background of other fine types. There is nothing in "The Dancin' Fool" strong enough to enable it to stand by itself in an emergency, but it serves its purpose to present a good-natured and manly-looking star dancing along a path of roses to delightful results the rest of us have to struggle for and almost never get. As presented at the Rivoli, "The Dancin' Fool" pleases, and so it will probably do wherever shown.

The Story.

Fresh from the country, Sylvester Tibble obtains a six-dollar-a-week job of an uncle in the business of jug making and drifts from work into a gay cabaret. His restless feet draw the attention of pretty Junie Budd, a dancer, and the rube's brave defense of her in difficulties stirs a live interest in her heart. She takes him to her mother, arranges for him to live at her home and teaches him to dance with such purpose that he becomes her partner. Together they make a hit and are paid two hundred a week for their act. Because of the kind little girl's interest Tibble prospers unknown to his crabbed old uncle. Known only as "Ves" at the cabaret, he overhears a plot to purchase the plant of his uncle, who is a fine jug maker, but behind the time, his concern dying of dry rot.

In spite of the fact that he is regularly fired by his uncle, Tibbles comes back again and always with some suggestion so valuable that he gains in business influence and prestige. Before going on a trip to sell goods, he warns his uncle not to sell the plant. His departure is falsely interpreted by Junie, who believes he has tired of her and of being only a cabaret dancer. She returns the engagement ring he has given her and makes herself generally unhappy until his triumphant return.

"Humoresque"

Frank Borzage Injects Realistic Atmosphere Into Screen Version of Fannie Hurst Story of New York's Ghetto.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

HUMORESQUE" is one of the year's big productions. It was made for Cosmopolitan Productions by Frank Borage from a story of New York's Ghetto written by Fannie Hurst, and will be released by Famous Players-Lasky early in June. Alma Rubens is the featured member of the cast, but so interesting is the characterization, so carefully outlined is each individual character, so genuine is the background against which the story has been set, that the spectator is not conscious that the picture has a star. In other words, "Humoresque" is not built around any one personality; the characters are woven into the story.

There are some points in the picture which could be criticised. For instance, rather too much time is given to scenes portraying the unhappy circumstances surrounding the young soldier's departure for France. The near miracle of his sudden regaining of the use of his hands after being wounded in the war is not convincing, inasmuch as he is immediately able to play the violin. But the production as a whole will stand as one of the high marks of the art. The human interest element is particularly strong, and there is a wealth of natural comedy to relieve the pathos. It is rarely that a picture is seen in which so much time has been spent on preserving the flow of incident which goes to make up the daily life of the characters, where also dramatic situations are sharply outlined.

The characters are particularly well acted by an excellent cast. Vera Gordon, as Mamma Kantor, and Dore Davidson, as Abraham Kantor, are not easily forgotten in their portrayal of these roles. Bobby Connelly and Gaston Glass, impersonating Leon Kantor at different ages; Miriam Battista and Alma Rubens, as Minnie Ginsberg in childhood and girlhood; Sidney Carlyle, in the difficult and perhaps thankless role of the imbecile son of the Kantors, are all especially to be commended.

Length, 5,987 Feet.

Story.

The story of "Humoresque" involves the combined emotions represented in the streets of New York's Ghetto and the daily life of a few of its inhabitants, with the Jewish family Kantor occupying the center of the stage.

Abraham Kantor and his wife are characteristic of the parenthood of their race. Abraham has the traditionary love of money, while Mamma Kantor, who also has a due respect for the pennies, halts at the thought of sacrificing the genius of her favorite son, Leon, who has the gift of music, to the money god. With the help of his mother's faith in him, he finally succeeds in climbing the ladder of fame, and is about to sign a contract for a series of concerts at a high salary, when the war breaks out and, unable to resist his country's call, he enlists in the army.

Then comes the day of parting, when he must not only bid goodbye to his mother and father, but also to his sweetheart, Minnie Ginsberg. And after that, months later, there is the return of Leon on the hospital ship wounded almost to death. With both his arms injured, and apparently little hope left of his ever being able to play again, he loses interest in life, and, in spite of Minnie's repeated assurances of her love for him, he refuses to discuss the rendezvous which he had promised to keep with her in the spring. One day, when he has told her that he will not marry her on account of his crippled condition, she leaves the room and falls in a faint outside the door. The shock causes him to forget himself, and rushing out he lifts her in his arms and carries her back into the room, suddenly discovering that his imagination has held him in check and that his ailments are not as real as he has led himself to believe.

"The Dark Mirror"

Dorothy Dalton Has Dramatic Dual Role in Paramount-Artcraft Production.

MYSTERY, adventure, love, gunplay, murder, escapes, fire and romance follow each other with lightning like rapidity in "The Dark Mirror," the latest Paramount-Artcraft production. And through the whole thrilling and absorbing story Dorothy Dalton plays as effectively the part of beautiful and accomplished Priscilla Maine as she does the role of Nora the underworld girl. "The Dark Mirror" has a wider appeal than most screen melodramas in that the somewhat modern theory of psychic influence is introduced. It is by psychic analysis that Priscilla's sweetheart solves the dark mystery of her life. The Story.

Priscilla Maine is an accomplished and charming society girl who has been reared in the belief that she is the only child of her father. She is devoted to art, and Dr. Philip Fosdick, a specialist in psychic analysis, who falls in love with her, is asked by Priscilla to solve the mystery of a series of dreams which have been haunting her for years, in which she sees her counterpart and in which she undergoes many thrilling experiences. She sketches these dreams vividly and employs the names of the characters she has encountered therein.

Dr. Fosdick reads the account of a murder and recognizes the names of participants in the crime as being those mentioned by Priscilla. He begins an investigation. Meanwhile, Nora O'Moore, who is the counterpart of Priscilla, is living in the slums and known to the underworld as Red Carnahan's "girl." Mario Gonzales, a Spaniard, loves her, and, previous to the murder of which Dr. Fosdick has read, she had promised to be Gonzales' wife. Because of police activity following the commission of the crime, she is unable to keep her promise. But Mario rescues her and Priscilla escapes to the street, where she meets Mario and some policemen. Believing Priscilla to be Nora, his wife, Mario takes her to his home in Jersey. Carnahan makes his escape by jumping out of a window.

Priscilla tells Mario that she is not his wife, but he refuses to believe her. She asserts that Nora is dead. Dr. Fosdick arrives and is explaining matters to Mario when Priscilla looks out of a window, sees the lake and recognizes it as the water in which she had seen Carnahan drown Nora in her dream. Carnahan is drawn to the scene of his crime and makes his way to the spot where Nora's body lies. He draws it to the surface and is horrified to see Priscilla standing at the shore. He drops Nora's body and drowns himself in fear. Priscilla falls fainting in Dr. Fosdick's arms and becomes seriously ill.

It develops that her father had married a gypsy girl by whom he had twin girls. The mother ran away with Nora, while the father retained the custody of Priscilla. Mario returns to say farewell to Priscilla and she realizes that he has no power over her and she consents to wed Dr. Fosdick, whom she has loved from their first meeting.

IF the reception given Clara Kimball Young's latest picture, "For the Soul of Rafael," on its premier showing at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, is any criterion, the film is destined to enjoy a long and profitable popularity. The opening was not marked by anything special or ostentatious in the way of presentation stunts. There was no personal appearance by the star, no elaborate prologue, and, outside of an artistic stage setting and lobby decorations that carried out the atmosphere of the story and the time in which it was laid and an excellent and appropriate music program, nothing more than characterizes the usual high class premier was noticed.

"For the Soul of Rafael" is an adaptation of a novel by the same name by Mary Ellis Ryan. It is a story of California seventy years ago, with its old missions and its old convents. The scene of the romance is laid near San Juan Capistrano, and the photography, with the exception of the interiors, was taken in that locality.

The film, although depicting a phase of life of seventy years ago and of the habits and costumes of the people of that day, cannot be called a costume play. To one sitting in the audience the costumes of the players were not noticed except that they fulfilled the technical requirements. The continuity and movement of the story are almost perfect; the episodes blend into one another, with no breaks or illogical sequences; the photography is exceptional throughout and the atmosphere correct in all of the details.

All of the important people in the cast, with the exception of three, are Spanish. Clara Kimball Young, in the part of an aristocratic Spanish girl just out of a convent and facing life with the contending problems of love and duty tearing at her conscience, does some of her best, if not the very best, work of her career. J. Frank Glendon, as Keith Bryton, a young American with a tendency to adventure who has drifted into the country, played his part with a repression that was as natural as it was welcome. Bryton was a heroic character without heroics. Bertram Grassby, as Rafael Artcaga, the son of a Spanish family, had a part that might have been overdone in less capable hands.

The Story.

The story of "For the Soul of Rafael" begivs when Miss Young, as Marta Estavan, is ready to leave the convent where she has been rearer. Dona Louisa Arteaga, mother of Rafael and the young girl's guardian, arranges a marriage betwen the two, because she thinks that Maria's influence will rescue her son from the wild life he is leading and make a man of him. Marta rescues the American Bryton, when he is attacked by Indians, and falls in love with him. Rafael's mother sends Bryton away by telling him that the girl has entered a convent for life, and after telling Marta that Bryton had been killed on the trail she exacts a vow from the girl that she will marry her son.

Marta marries Rafael. Bryton comes back after the marriage and after Marta has found out the true character of her husband. The story moves on from this point to a happy ending, but with much action of tense and strenuous nature in between.

"The Deep Purple"

Realart Releases Mayflower Production Based on Well Known Melodramatic Play.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

NO mistake was made in choosing the popular stage melodrama called "The Deep Purple" for this photoplay of the same name. It reveals an interesting lot of underworld types, capably portrayed by a strong cast of players. Miriam Cooper plays the pretty country innocent, who is lured to the city by a couple of crooks. One of these "Pop" Clark, is delightfully interpreted by W. J. Ferguson, who makes him a silk-hatted, smirking, Bible-selling, checker-cheating personage. This character is one that makes you hate him sincerely and yet always gets a laugh at the same time. Vincent Serrano plays Pop's pal, Leland, in a clever way, and Stuart Sage is agreeable as the hero.

There is not much complication in the plot, and this really operates in favor of the character work. The story interest is quite sufficient and has a proper holding quality.

The scenes are laid in both country and city. One interesting feature of the production is the appearance of Bird Millman in a wire-walking stunt at a cabaret.

The subject is well produced and has much general appeal. A screen version of the same play was made about four years ago by the World Films.

Cast.

Doris Moore.....Miriam Cooper
Kate Fallon.....Helen Ware
Harry Leland.....Vincent Serrano
"Pop" Clark.....W. J. Ferguson
William Lake.....Stuart Sage
Gordon Laylock.....William B. Mack
Connelly .....Lincoln Plumer
Flossie .....Ethel Hallor

With cabaret feature by Bird Millman.
Play by Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner.
Directed by R. A. Walsh.
Length, Six Reels.

The Story.

Doris Moore, in "The Deep Purple," is a country girl, living in a quiet village with her father. She is pretty and ambitious and generally unhappy with her surroundings. Two men, known as "Pop" Clark and Harry Leland, come to board with them, claiming they are engaged in selling Bibles. They are really shrewd confidence men from the city.

Leland receives a wire from a pal notifying him to be on the lookout for a young engineer, William Lake, who is en route to the city with a lot of money from the West. He and Pop decide to go to New York at once and Leland, who has been making secret love to Doris, under promise of marriage induces the girl to follow. Doris finds the pair located in the boarding house of a reformed woman named Kate Fallon. The landlady, who has a big heart, suspects Leland's purpose and hides Doris from him. But Leland discovers the girl and they scheme to use her in luring William Lake into their clutches.

This pretty plan is upset by Kate Fallon, the hero himself, a detective and a man from Wyoming named Jim Laylock. The latter shoots and kills Leland during a quarrel. William Lake and Doris become engaged.

"The Garter Girl"

Vitagraph Presents Corinne Griffith in a Version of the O. Henry Story, "The Memento."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is some love interest in "The Garter Girl," some elaborate directing and settings, some good acting and the visualization at length of a short story by O. Henry. Without humor, without pathos, without drama, without a live theme, the material is scanty. All concerned in production, however, make a sincere effort to create a photoplay. Edward Griffith goes to great pains to introduce the story with an intimate view of the vaudeville girl and her audience, an attempt worthy of some live story of today. His quartette of players make the best they can of their limited opportunities.

Corinne Griffith, Sallie Crute and Rod La Rocque inject human personality of a pleasing character in all they do, Miss Griffith appearing in some very attractive costumes as the vaudeville girl and displaying skill in the simpler role. Sallie Crute gives piquancy to a minor part, and La Rocque is admirable as an up-to-date young minister. The human element, the purely personal one, contributes its full share to the visualization, but the sum of values is not high, because true elements of interest are confined to some love-making between the young minister and the dancer. As shown at the Circle Theatre, "The Garter Girl" is only a fair entertainment.

Cast.

Rosalie Ray.....Corinne Griffith
Lynette .....Sallie Crute
Brad. Mortimer.....Earl Metcalfe
Arthur Lyle.....Rod La Rocque

Story by O. Henry.
Directed by Edward Griffiths.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

Rosalie Ray is playing the part of "The Garter Girl," when she sickens of the attentions of her partner, Brad. Mortimer, and the stage door Johnnies. She suddenly decides to leave for some quiet place in the country. She finds an ideal home, and a charming companion in a live young minister. She rapidly falls in love with Lyle, and she is not jealous when he confesses to an ideal love in the past. He has preserved a souvenir of this ideal in a box. The landlady's curiosity leads her to open the box, and she regards its contents with disgust.

Now comes Mortimer with threats of exposure if Rosalie does not return to the old life with him. She persuades him not to be so contemptible. He congratulates the young minister instead and goes away. Now the curious old landlady shows Rosalie the contents of the box. Rosalie leaves at once and returns to her old chum, Lynette, expressing her disgust with all men. The souvenir preserved by Lyle was one of the garters she was accustomed to give away while dancing in the cabaret. He has fallen below her expectations. When Brad. Mortimer calls with promises of a professional engagement she does not discourage him. She finds ' is an engagement to marry him, and she accepts.

You can hook up with jewelry and department stores for garter and buckle displays. In a town you can stir things up with an announcement that some well known young woman will distribute garters to half a dozen selected men from the audience. "Jenny Be Good"

Mary Miles Minter Has Pleasing Role in Realart Adaptation of Wilbur Finley Fauley Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IF individual scenes from "Jenny Be Good," a Realart production, based on a story by Wilbur Fauley, were culled for criticism, there would be found many that would live up to an artist's idea of the beautiful. Unfortunately, however, the dramatic qualities of the picture are weak; and if the production had been made in four reels instead of six, the result would have been much better—condensing of the story interest would have added punch to the drama, and livened up the interest generally. The dope interest in the picture should be eliminated.

Mary Miles Minter continues to present a pretty picture, and it is not her fault that sickly sentimental sub-titles are allowed to mar the seriousness of the drama. Her director is still inclined to centralize the star to the general detriment of the picture.

The best piece of acting in the production is done by Sylvia Ashton, in the role of Sophia Shuttles, eager to enter society. Her work is of unusually good quality, and provides a fine vein of comedy. The cast is generally good. Margaret Shelby, Jay Belasco, Grace Pike and Catherine Wallace are outstanding figures.

Story by Wilbur Finle Fauley.
Scenario by Julia Crawford Ivers.
Direction by William Desmond Taylor.
Length—5,980 feet.

The Story.

Jenny Riano, the heroine of "Jenny Be Good," is an orphan who has been reared by an invalid grandmother to general housework, mat weaving, and other labors. She has learned to play on a violin which belonged to one of her parents, and with it tries to imitate the birds, and the sighing of the winds, and dreams of a fairy prince with golden boots who is some day to come through the woods to woo her.

The building of a summer hotel by Aaron Shuttles, a newly rich man, who, with his wife aspires to social heights, brings a lover to Jenny, in the shape of Royal Renshaw, a son of Mrs. Shuttles by her first marriage. A contract entered into between Mrs. Van Mater, one of the upper set, whereby Shuttles is to give her financial aid in return for an introduction into her set, stipulates also that the contracting parties will use their influence to bring about a marriage between Royal Renshaw and Jolanda Van Mater, the debutante daughter of Mrs. Van Mater.

A grudge held by Polly Primrose, a young woman who runs a tea room and gambling den, and incidentally is a distributor of dope, against Mrs. Van Mater, takes the form of an attack through Jolanda. The young girl, given dope by Polly, as a cure for a headache, becomes a drug fiend; and following a romance between Jenny Riano and Royal Renshaw, which is abruptly ended by the interference of Shuttles, she marries Royal, leads him a cat and dog life, and finally causes him to drive the car in which he is taking her to a sanitarium over a cliff. Jolanda is killed, but Royal, upon having Jenny brought to his side, recovers and marries her. This event closes the door on a concert career, which has opened for Jenny in the period during which she and Royal have been separated.

"The Devil's Claim"

Haworth Production Introducing Oriental Character, Features Sessue Hayakawa and Proves Fairly Entertaining.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN making the production of "The Devil's Claim," which features Sessue Hayakawa and is released by Robertson-Cole, the director has labored with an unwieldy and unconvincing play, which in reality is a story within a story. Much attention has been paid to what was intended for the secondary story, with the result that confusion occurs at certain points of the picture as to whether one is supposed to be thinking in the novel which composes the second story, or in the story of the man who wrote the novel. This is the poorest picture that Sessue Hayakawa has appeared in. In spite of the actor's usual standard of fine dramatic interpretation, which he never fails to uphold, the spectator is apt to grow out of patience with a picture which does not present a straightforward story and which fails to be convincing.

Colleen Moore as the heroine of the story and also of the novel written by the East Indian, is a remarkably attractive figure, and displays splendid ability in the part. The cast throughout is good, and there are evidences of much time and money having been spent on the production.

Cast.

Akbar Khan, Hassan ..... Sessue Hayakawa
Virginia Crosby ..... Rhea Mitchell
Indora ..... Colleen Moore
Spencer Wellington ..... William Buckley
Kemal ..... Sidney Payne
Salim ..... Joe Wray

Scenario by Grubb Alexander.
Direction by Charles Swickhard.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

Akbar Khan, the hero of "The Devil's Claim," is a Hindoo novelist, who has come to Greenwich Village for inspiration to write a novel. Here he finds a beautiful girl named Indora, whose heart he sacrifices on the altar of his ambition. One day a social worker, Virginia Crosby, happens by in her car, and notices Indora as she sit sat her window, singing a mournful melody to the accompaniment of her mandolin. Virginia succeeds in meeting Indora, and in getting her story, after which she decides to make the Hindoo love her, then to throw him over, and finally bring his back to Indora.

When Virginia meets Akbar, she tells him a story about a pendant which she wears, in which she represents it as having been stolen from the Devil Worshippers. The story which she weaves for him is converted into a serial which appears in a well-known magazine. Finally when it is about completed, Virginia disappears. Akbar, deprived of her help and inspiration, is in despair; the last instalment of the story is due, and must be produced for the publisher. At this point in her scheme, Virginia sends Indora to Akbar, when he realizes his love for the girl, and also his indebtednes sto her.

"An Adventuress"

Julian Eltinge's Skill as An Impersonator of Vampires Is Exploited In a Fanciful, Lightly Humorous Story Pictured by Republic.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

ONE more tribute to the optimism and ingenuity of Americans in rectifying foreign politics is paid in "An Adventuress." The story, or rather yarn, has for its setting one of those fictitious countries, Alpania, which is a house divided against itself, and which is much in need of order. Enter three Americans, and things are presently straightened out.

The plot is a freak of imagination and from beginning to end, truth is sacrificed for the sake of getting semi-comic, semi-sensational effects. It does not command serious attention, and leaves the spectator with no unity of impression. The most striking features are some attractive diving scenes, some amusing touches of burlesque and a precipitous auto chase that furnishes about five minutes of thrills.

Julian Eltinge alternates from masculine to feminine portrayal with ease. His make-up as the gay adventuress is an interesting achievement. A similar role is that taken by Fred Covert who depicts feminine wiles and mannerisms amusingly. The settings are not always consistently atmospheric. At times the locale seems foreign, and at other times it is quite familiar and "American."

Directed by Fred Balshofer.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

Alpania, a small country by the sea, has become the scene of much discord and intrigue due to an effort of the monarchists to depose the republicans who are in power. Three American adventurers, Jack Perry, Dick Sayre and Lyn Brook, learn of the trouble and decide to mix in. Jack is caught and is sentenced by the royalists to be shot at sunrise. From this fate he is rescued by Lyn who arrives in an aeroplane and by dropping a bomb, destroys all but Jack.

Jack then contrives to learn the secret plans of the enemy and thereafter forward them to the republicans. To do this, he adopts the costume of a lady and tries his wiles on the foreign princes and potentates. He is known as "Fedora" and becomes very popular. His pal, Lyn, also disguses himself as a lady and while Jack is carrying the news to the republicans, Lyn is left to divert the attention of the duke. He is amazingly successful, and in promenading on the beach receives the admiring glances of many men, to his keen enjoyment.

Jack is once more captured and is forced to pilot an enemy aeroplane in order to escape. He manages to keep the enemy at bay until he alights and dashes off in an automobile. He is hotly pursued in a perilous ride, but finally evades his foes and gets safely back to America and his sweetheart.

"Pathe Comedies"

Harold Lloyd Blossoms Out in Good Comic; Snub Pollard in Two Light Subjects.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A NEW two-reel comic, entitled "An Eastern Westerner," is released by Pathe. The subject is full of the light-running, touch-and-go humor for which Lloyd is justly famous. It is not so strong in plot as certain predecessors, but proves laughable owing to the many deft comedy situations strung along through the two reels.

Harold appears as a blasé Eastern lad, whose father packs him off to a Western ranch, in the proverbial manner. Harold opens up a new box of tricks on his arrival, having a lot of fun with the bad men of Piute Pass, a town which holds it poor form to shoot the same man twice in one day. He gets into a poker game, but is badly fleeced in spite of his cleverness. Later he has a thrilling mixup with a band of white caps. He wins the love of the golden-curled heroine, who is pleasantly portrayed by Mildred Davis.

"Snub" Pollard has two new one-reel subjects, "Drink Hearty" and "Trotting Through Turkey," in each of which he is assisted by the clever colored lad, Sambo.

In the first subject Snub conducts a blind pig in a barn, where the village cronies gather for their "licker." The place is raided by revenue officers and Snub and Sambo play hide and seek with them round a straw stack. In the second number they invade a harem in Turkey, where they teach the harem ladies how to dance the shimmy, with sad results. The action of both subjects is good.

The American Photo Player Company Has Brought Out a New and Attractive Model

THE American Photo Player Company has completed a new model instrument which is to be known as the "Photo Orchestra." The instrument is designed to combine certain features of the Foto-player and the Robert-Morton Orchestra and may be played with equal effect by hand or music roll.

The entire instrument may be installed in the pit of a theatre or divided and placed in different locations. When a pit installation is required, it is possble to have it finished in three days. This is due to several new improvements and the general simplicity of the electric system used in its construction. When the instrument is divided it is necessary only to increase the length of the cables and wind conductors. The console may be placed in the pit, the stops on the lower manual and some of the stops on the pedal may take one position, the stops on the upper manual and part of the pedal may take another position, while the piano and percussion instruments may occupy a third position either in the pit or as an echo.

Double Touch on Manuals and Pedals.

Both manuals and pedals are equipped with double touch. On the first division (pedal) there are one 32-foot resultant stop, six 16-foot stops, three 8-foot stops, one 4-foot stop, three trap stops, four couplers on first touch, chimes and six trap stops on second touch. The second division (lower manual) contains two 16-foot stops, ten 8-foot stops, three 4-foot stops, one 2⅔-foot stop, one 2-foot stop, six percussion stops, six trap stops, one tremolo and five couplers on first touch, one 16-foot stop, three 8-foot stops, two percussion stops, seven trap stops, one tremolo and four couplers on second touch. The third division (upper manual) contains a 16-foot stop, eight 8-foot stops, two 4-foot, one 2⅔-foot, one 2-foot seven percussion, five trap stops, one tremolo and four couplers on first touch, and two 16-foot, two 8-foot, two percussion, four traps, one tremolo and three couplers on second touch.

Twenty-four Combination Pistons.

In addition there are twenty-four combination pistons—eight for each manual and eight for the pedal; three piston couplers which couple the pedal pistons to the manual pistons, same number or couple all pistons of same number, two unison silent couplers and two second touch "on" and "off" couplers.

The pipes and percussion instrument are enclosed in their expression boxes three inches thick with individual shutter action arranged so that the last shutter must be wide open before the total amount of tone emanates from the boxes.

For the roll operator there is the double-tracker player with two different ways of bringing out solo effects from standard music rolls. This part of the instrument is operated by the usual roll controlling devices, twelve couplers and fourteen percussion finger keys. When the instrument is being played by hand the rolls are covered by the music rack.

Write the General Electric Company for These Booklets

WE ARE in receipt, from the General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y., of a handsomely printed booklet of eight pages and cover entitled "Compensarcs for Motion Picture Projection."

The booklet briefly tells, in an interesting way, the reason for compensarcs, and sketches the evolution of control devices up to the present G-E motor generator compensarcs, which are illustrated and described in detail. This booklet is of particular interest to the progressive exhibitor who will do well to write to the General Electric Company for a copy.

It may be news to some of our readers that the General Electric Company have published three valuable instruction books for projectionists. These are known as Nos. 82550B, 82554 and 85101.

The first deals with the practical installation, operation and care of A-C to D-C compensarcs for two arcs in series used alternately. The second covers the same ground for D-C to D-C motor generator sets for projection arc control for two arcs in series used alternately. The third treats in the same manner of A-C compensarcs for motion picture machine control.

Each of these instruction books contains illustrations of apparatus described, together with installation diagrams. They should be in every projection room and will be sent on request to those of our readers who will mention the Moving Picture World when writing for same to the Supply Department, General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

The Typhoon Fan Company Blows to Larger Offices

THE Typhoon Fan Company has moved its offices from 281 Lexington avenue, New York, to 343-347 West Thirty-ninth street. This brings both offices and factory under one roof and will facilitate the progress of orders through the plant. It will also allow Jim Milligan more stowage space for his blue prints and order files.

On moving day, Jim was seen wending his way to the new quarters with a drawing board under one arm, the office kitten under the other, while from his hip pocket protruded a sheaf of new contracts that President Glantzberg had accumulated while touring the southern states.

The few exhibitors who have not already ordered their Typhoon outfits are requested to mail said orders to the new address.

How the Mushroom and Overhead Fan System Heat and Ventilate

By HENRY P. GEMMEL, of the Buffalo Forge Company

THE modern picture theatre presents one of the most interesting problems that the heating and ventilating engineer has to solve. The immense open area and the large number of people who occupy it combine the extremes in both the heating and ventilating conditions.

For ordinary heating purposes the fan system may or may not be used, depending entirely upon circumstances and the requirements to be met, yet for the purpose of ventilation the fan system is practically without competition. The fan system may be used in conjunction with some type of direct radiation to care for the heat losses.

When used for ventilating purposes the fan will be required to supply whatever quantity of air is necessary to meet the ventilating requirements.

In a theatre, it is the most logical thing to utilize the large amount of air necessary for ventilating purposes as a carrier for the heat required to keep the interior at a livable temperature.

The How of the Fan System.

The fan system of heating and ventilating operates by taking air from outside the building, passing it through an air washer, where finely divided sprays of water remove all particles of dirt and dust, then passing this pure washed air over some form of indirect radiation to raise it to the necessary temperature and finally forcing it into the interior of the building through a series of ducts. The entire movement of air being accomplished by means of a mechanically driven fan.

There are two methods of applying the fan system to theatre buildings, known as the Mushroom and the Overhead Systems respectively.

In the first system the air is introduced under the floors of the building and passes to the interior through outlets placed in the floor under the seats. The peculiar shape of these outlets, which resemble the mushroom, gives the system its name. This system is fairly expensive to install and can rarely be adapted to existing structures without considerable remodeling and hence, to be used to advantage, should be specified when the building is erected.

The great advantage of this system lies in the continuous movement of the air from the floor to the ceiling from which it is exhausted outside of the building. This immediately removes all bodily heat

MARTIN JOHNSON

Sydney, N. S. W. Australia.

November 9th, 1919.

Universal Camera Company,
% Burke and James,
240 Onterio Street,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs:-

On account of the hasty letter I wrote you just before I left for the New Hebrides, seven months ago, I thought you would be glad to know that both Universals stood up great, we spent six months among the head hunters and cannibals of Malekula, and used only the two Universals.

I have just finished printing the positives, and without a doubt they are the finest films I have ever made--in fact there is not a foot of poor film among the twenty-five thousand feet.

The old camera that I used down here two years ago stood up as well as the new one, and outside of scars and scratches caused by long expeditions through the jungles and over mountains, it is as good as new--in fact, it's like an old shoe, it is like a part of me, and I will always use it in preference to any other.

Will send you some photographs on the next steamer.

Sincerely yours
Martin Johnson

You may use this letter or any part in advertising, my next feature that will be released in about six months will creat a sensation, it is the most wonderful film of exploration that has ever been made, and the photography is perfect--it was all made on the two Universals.

It will probably be called WILD MEN OF MALEKULA.

'Shooting' the wild men with a UNIVERSAL

IN a climate of intense heat, averaging 130 degrees, traveling in whale boats and through trackless forests, Martin Johnson, the noted explorer, carried the Universal Camera to which he refers in this letter.

With this camera he made 25,000 feet of perfect film, and it came through this endurance test as sound and perfect as the day it left our factory.

When you see Johnson's wonderful pictures of the savage South Sea Islanders, you will have demonstrated to you the kind of film the Universal makes. This is the camera used exclusively by explorers, travelers, the United States Army and educational film makers.

Write for illustrated booklet on the Universal. It tells why the Universal will one day be your camera.

and exhalations and the air in the breathing zone is always pure and fresh.

The second method is by far the more common and is readily adaptable to existing buildings. By this the air is introduced through ducts placed in the side walls usually built in to hollow pilasters and the outlets are placed about eight feet above the floor. These outlets are covered with grilles and can be made to harmonize with any existing schemes of interior decorations so as not to be unsightly.

The fan apparatus that is used to heat in the winter will also serve to cool in the summer, due to the fact that the washing of the air will lower its temperature to a noticeable degree. The accompanying illustration shows how the overhead system may be adopted to a typical theatre.

The air is drawn in through the fresh air intake which runs up the side of the building to the roof. The entire apparatus is placed in the basement out of the way, yet readily accessible.

The main risers are built into the side walls and the discharge openings can be seen in the side walls on the orchestra and balcony floors. It will also be noted that ducts are run up behind the front wall of the stage and discharge into each tier of boxes. The lobby, stair wells and stage are heated by wall radiation, as the ventilating problem in these portions of the theatre are not so important.

An Important Feature.

It is just as important to positively remove the foul air as it is to introduce the fresh air. This is taken care of in the theatre in question by a large natural draft ventilator in the roof over the stage, and another natural draft ventilator in the center of the ceiling over the main floor. The section underneath the gallery is taken care of by a ventilating fan in the roof. The small sketch in the upper left hand corner shows how the fresh air is introduced and the foul air removed from the dressing rooms adjacent to the stage proper.

I have not endeavored in this short article to go into the technical details, but merely endeavored to bring before the exhibitor owner a system for heating and ventilating which I believe is well adapted to his requirements.

How to Make National Carbons Do Their Best

tional Carbon Company recommend that the Columbia upper and Silvertip lower carbons be used. The Columbia upper is approximately twice the diameter of the Silvertip lower and contains the powerful chemical flaming material which runs through the center core of the carbon.

The lower carbon—the Silvertip—is smaller in diameter in order to avoid any shadow being thrown on the upper crater. This is accounted for by the fact that the small diameter actually presents a constant point at all times whereas were the lower carbon the same width as the upper carbon it would burn with a blunt point.

The Silvertip is also coated with metal in order to carry the current equally with the upper carbon.

Selection Made Easy.

According to the amperage requirement the sizes of these combinations vary. The following table shows this clearly.

Current	Size Carbons
For 25 to 50 Amps.	5/8x12" Columbia Cored Upper
D. C. use.....	5/16x 6" Silvertip Solid Lower
For 50 to 65 Amps.	3/4x12" Columbia Cored Upper
D. C. use.....	11/32x 6" Silvertip Solid Lower
For 65 to 70 Amps.	7/8x12" Columbia Cored Upper
D. C. use.....	11/32x 6" Silvertip Solid Lower
For 70 to 85 Amps.	7/8x12" Columbia Cored Upper
D. C. use.....	3/8x 6" Silvertip Solid Lower
For 85 to 100 Amps.	1x12" Columbia Cored Upper
D. C. use.....	7/16x 6" Silvertip Cored Lower

In order to be sure of getting the best result with direct current it is also recommended that Columbia and Silvertip carbons be set up according to the accompanying illustration. (See Figure 1.)

The manufacturers claim that on direct current practically all annoyances which have heretofore been common to that type of current projection have been eliminated by the use of White A. C. Special Carbons. These carbons, upper and lower, are of the same size but vary according to the current requirements as given in the following table.

Amperes	Carbon Diameter
40 or less than 60	5/8" Combination
60 or less than 75	3/4" Combination
75 or less than 100	7/8" Combination

The upper and lower carbons are both cored. However, the coring material in the upper varies from that in the lower and it is well to take pains to use the proper upper and lower White A. C. Special in its correct place.

The steady arc and absence of flickering on the screen, noiseless projection and well defined pictures, are characteristic of both the White A. C. Specials and Columbia Silvertip projection.

Dear Exhibitors and Everybody:

Eight weeks, a few thousand dollars, a heap of tin-horn stocks sets, redressed, a "Masked Mystery" a female lead — and the average "Serial" is wished on you!

I've already spent sixty thousand smacks and three months on the first six episodes of my serial, "The Hope Diamond Mystery."

Say! My sets alone will cost one hundred thousand dollars; my company is headed by Grace Darmond and George Chesebro and Stuart Paton is directing; May Gohe, formerly Lady Francis Hope, wrote the plot and Acts in it ——— Believe me, I am tickled to death — I've got an honest-to-goodness serial - chock-full of power and pull - coming along the home stretch!

I will be East with the reel goods as soon as I get good and ready.

So long

Advertising Value

ONE can't tell the time of day with a thermometer, it isn't made for that purpose. But it answers better for a time piece than a merely decorative lithograph answers for a poster. A good poster must have advertising value, and advertising value is the one predominating characteristic of the RITCHEY poster!

Advertising value is the sum of those qualities that attract the eye, pique the curiosity, stimulate the imagination and finally make a successful assault upon the pocketbook. The RITCHEY poster is as full of this quality as a sopping sponge is full of water. It is surcharged with it. It is this dynamic advertising power that makes it the one essentially necessary box-office adjunct.

The RITCHEY poster is the poster with a purpose. Its purpose is to sell tickets, the maximum number, the maximum number of times. Because it can and does do this the RITCHEY poster has the maximum of advertising value. In its design is shown a clear conception of mass psychology, so rendered as to be both appreciated and understood by all classes, all types and all ages, and so, like the photoplay itself, its appeal is universal.

FOREIGN TRADE AND SERVICE

Five years ago, the foreign film market, its scope and possibilities, were unknown to the American Producer. Today, it represents a vital adjunct to his business.

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, acting as the medium through which foreign buyers were enabled to obtain exclusive territorial rights to American productions, has played no small part in the development of foreign trade.

In the future it hopes to play an even greater role in the healthy continuation of trade in foreign film markets.

as you can possibly give it. We will say to you solemnly that you cannot give it too many. Its advance screening at the Realart Home Office was a revelation of splendid acting, direction and photography.

Miss Minter shows distinct progress in her art. Appealing charm and ripened power of wordless expression assure her position as America's best loved screen actress. Director William Desmond Taylor has registered his crowning achievement to date—one on which his reputation might alone rest secure. The story itself is admirably constructed, its consistent and cohesive incidents leading up to a smashing climax, intense, breath-taking. There is enough delicious comedy to bring Father and Little Sister and Sonny back a second time; while the gripping love interest and inevitable triumph over all opposition will cause Mother and Big Sister to tag along with them.

LOUIS

THE harbor of Rhodes was celebrated for a monstrous image which straddled both sides of the city. History ranks it as one of the seven wonders of the world, but Time toppled the Colossus and proved it a rank failure. The idea was too ambitious. It tried to cover too much ground.

I'll say it will be the eighth wonder of the world if the interests now planning to dominate both the production and exhibition of pictures succeed in straddling the field.

The Colossus principle isn't sound. Even Standard Oil is too wise to buck the distributor and if the men who buy features allow the concerns that make them to open theatres in direct competition then human experience is a liar and precedent must go back to college.

What could be softer than to have you spend your good money to build up popularity for my stars in your houses and then leisurely take over all the best paying locations while you obliging exhibitors continued to finance my business until I could take the pick of the country's properties?

If I thought you'd stand for it I could make the Colossus of Rhodes look like a scarf pin, but when I figure what would happen to my enterprises if I butted into yours I don't even want to try it in a dream.

Your good will is my best bet. If the exhibitor isn't a success, I'm a failure.

TIMELINESS—

ALICE JOYCE has the play of the hour in "Dollars and the Woman." With the high cost of living rampant and incomes unreasonably inflated, the theme of this extraordinary play, by Albert Payson Terhune, dealing with extravagance when money is plenty, not alone is a delight to lovers of good pictures, but is pertinent to the present-day mode of living.

As Madge Hillyer, Miss Joyce, through extravagance, so well learns the misery of poverty that when wealth comes again she is not capable of enjoying it. The story is new—up to the minute.

THIS inspiring, human photoplay is a segment of American life that might have been plucked from your own neighborhood. Madge and Dan Hillyer with all of their joys and sorrows, their faith and their follies, may be living right around the corner from you, in the next block, or just across the street.

For Madge and Dan were just of ordinary clay. But they were good clay. Two men loved Madge. She turned her back on the golden apples that one offered her and was content to munch a daily crust with the other. She gambled on the futures of Fate and she willingly changed herself from a gay peacock to a little drab wren to show her faith in Life and Love. And the gods gave her metal more than the acid test. Into a home where the bluebird of happiness held forth came the dragon of despair and jealousy. Invisible but torturing fires consumed the souls of Madge and Dan, but when they had burned down, the gold was there.

You will say to your people when you see this splendid photoplay; "Come and let us look at ourselves." And when they come and probe into the hearts of Madge and Dan they will be sure to find there many ringing echoes of their own.

HAS had a wonderful "press," as they say on the other side. Comments of the New York papers were unanimously favorable. This is the first time in many months that the New York papers were a unit in their praise of a picture. Neither the "World" nor the "American" offered any comment whatever on either the "Riders of the Dawn" or the program at the Strand. The other papers commented as follows:

"An exciting and vivid story."

SUN-HERALD

"This photo play deals with the North West grain region, vividly and thrillingly, without overstating its case."

The Cleveland Convention

THE coming exhibitor convention at Cleveland, called for June 8, 9 and 10, already is causing much interest among film men—among producers as well as exhibitors—in New York City, and it is fair to assume throughout the country as well. The past week two statements have been issued bearing on the gathering called originally by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. One of these was from the New York office of the latter organization and the other from the committee selected by the recent Chicago convention of picture men, described as the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America and also referred to as "a semi-temporary body to aid in formulating plans for the June assembly."

The announcement issued by the Theatre Owners, quoting Sam Bullock, who usually knows what he is talking about, sets forth that one of the vital questions to be taken up will be the control of all advertising that seeks the publicity of the screen and also states that the convention will nationalize the Cleveland-Pittsburgh plan for the display of slides or reels as an alternative to the payment of dues.

The statement sent out by the committee representing the Chicago independents, on the other hand, bears heavily, if not solely, on the producer-exhibitor issue. The declaration is made that the result of the convention will be to split the industry into two factions, with independent exhibitors on one side and producer-exhibitors on the other.

WHILE probably it is a fact the Theatre Owners members are in sympathy with the opposition to producer-exhibitors—one of the organization's officers has so stated—plainly there is an absence of unanimity on what constitutes the vital issue before the coming convention.

The time to remove any absence of unanimity on the part of exhibitors intending to go to Cleveland is now, in advance of the event, not after the sessions are called to order. There are ways in which this can be accomplished. Sam Bullock, temporary secretary of the Theatre Owners, lives in Cleveland. Frank J. Rembusch, chairman of the Chicago convention, lives in Shelbyville. The two towns are not far apart. Let the two get together and agree on a tentative basis of action at Cleveland. If the two do come to an understanding on what should be done in a major way there is more than reasonable ground that it will be ratified by the bulk of the convention. Preliminary, technical authorization is not vital in this instance. What is most essential is the exhibition of plain common sense.

THERE is a feeling in New York that all is not harmonious in exhibitor circles interested in the coming convention. The time to remove this feeling is now, we repeat. There is no reason, no solid reason, why the sessions beginning June 8 should not result in a real exhibitor organization.

There are veiled intimations of "politics." We hope there will be nothing smacking of this sort of stuff at the convention, whether pertaining to motion pictures or to the national variety. This, of course, is a presidential year, and the big bosses have their eyes on the screen. It is to the interest of the screen that it remain independent. There is bound to be outside pressure exerted to win the screen for one or the other of the parties. Let them both go hang.

The Moving Picture World has no axe to grind. It wants to see a strong exhibitor organization, one founded on principles to which all picture men may subscribe and for which they will go out and fight and bring in their neighbors. No other is worth while.

Prefers Showing to Making Pictures

COMPARED with picture production and distribution the exhibition of pictures pays the steadier dividends. That is the statement of a man who has turned over many million dollars in both divisions of motion picture activity. For quite a number of years he was a producer-distributor exhibitor, in the days when that term had less meaning than it is given at present and at a time when a man might be engaged in the simultaneous production, distribution and exhibition of pictures without being the subject of more than passing comment.

The speaker had just explained he was closing up most of his producing and distributing business, while at the same time he was extending his theatre holdings. The straight question was put to him: "You find the showing of pictures more to your liking than you do the making of them, don't you?" The old-time picture man looked the questioner full in the eye.

"I'll tell you," he said. "Recently I checked up on my investments in the two branches of the business and found that my theatres were the steadier dividend payers. A picture house may have a bad season, but the trouble can be spotted and remedied without running into too great a loss. In the case of a producing company it is different."

THE film man was asked if it was not his experience that more difficulties were encountered in the management of a small house than in a large one. "Yes," was the prompt response. "And one of the chief handicaps is the retention of the manager. If the man in charge of your small house really is good he is lured to a larger theatre. If you have a good man in charge of your larger house you can make his income as interesting as can any one else."

"Are you particularly concerned as to where you are going to get your supply of film in the coming months?"

"I can't say that I am especially. I deal with all the producers. In all my houses I plan to have a certain proportion of time open so that I can take care of anything unusual. This method involves more effort on the part of the management, but I think it pays."

The film man remarked on the building activity he had noted in New York despite the accompanying high cost.

Ordinance Would Stop Razing of Homes to Build Theatres

NEW YORK CITY theatre men are opposing the adoption of an ordinance introduced by Alderman William F. Quinn, providing that no theatre or motion picture theatre to provide for the erection of which dwellings, apartment houses or tenement houses have to be torn down, shall be granted a license within the next five years. The real fight against the proposed ordinance began at a hearing on May 7 before the General Welfare Committee of the Board of Aldermen.

Representing Sam H. Harris, J. A. Driscoll said that Mr. Harris plans the construction of a theatre in West Forty-fifth street.

"If you stop this project the land will lie idle," he said. "If you pass the ordinance you will create a monopoly in the theatrical business." You will also increase the price of theatre tickets, for which there is now a greater demand than there is a supply. If you refuse to issue licenses for new theatres the price of tickets are sure to go up."

Mr. Driscoll doubted the legality of the proposed ordinance. He said that Mr. Harris is only one of several theatre men contemplating the erection of new theatres in New York City. Others appearing were Edward Margolies and Ralph Douglas, representing A. L. Erlanger, Charles B. Dillingham, Florenz Ziegfeld. Mr. Margolies said he had contracts to build seven theatres.

Alderman Quinn was willing to have the ordinance amended so as not to apply to existing building contracts. The committee will have an executive session later.

Lesser Made First National's Special Coast Representative

IN order to promote closer relations between the First National producing units on the Pacific Coast and the theatre owners who comprise the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., Sol Lesser has been appointed special representative of the First National executive committee to handle all business affairs for organization in Los Angeles.

The appointment of Mr. Lesser, who, in association with Gore Brothers, is First National franchise holder for Southern California and Arizona, was announced by J. D. Williams, general manager of the organization. It was decided by the executive committee of the organization that it was necessary to have a special representative on the Coast in whom could be centralized the powers of that body to pass on matters which could not be handled by mail and telegraph.

The executive West Coast headquarters will be established at 634 Hellman Building at Fourth and Spring streets, Los Angeles.

Mr. Lesser will be empowered to pass on productions submitted for First National distribution, and will be in constant touch with the studios as the connecting link between producer and the distributing organization.

A general publicity bureau will be established under Mr. Lesser's supervision. J. E. McCormick, who toured the country with the Sennett bathing girls, will handle the Pacific Coast bureau.

Indianapolis Company Plans $2,000,000 Fort Wayne House

NEGOTIATIONS are under way at Fort Wayne, Ind., which, it is understood, will result in the erection of a new $2,000,000 motion picture theatre and hotel building there. The northeast corner of Wayne and Calhoun streets has been chosen as the site for the new structure, according to word received in Indianapolis.

The building, it is reported, is to be erected for the Bankers' and Merchants' Theatres Company, Inc., which has its headquarters in Indianapolis. F. H. Coonberg, president of the company, is out of the city, but others in his office said that negotiations for the erection of a theatre at Fort Wayne had been under way for some time.

The Bankers' and Merchants' Theatres Company has several theatres in Indiana, principally at Richmond, Ft. Wayne and Terre Haute, and is building photoplay houses at Evansville and Clinton. The majority of the stock in the concern is held by Chicago, Terre Haute, Ft. Wayne and Richmond people.

They Would Tax Theatres to Swell Police Pension Fund

CITY officials and politicians in Troy, N. Y., are still squabbling over an effort which is being made by one faction to compel the managers of motion picture theatres in that city to pay over a portion of their Sunday night receipts to the police pension fund. The matter came up two or three months ago and there have been frequent airings since, but without any decision being reached one way or the other.

The entire city, or at least as much of it as is interested in the movies, has apparently taken sides in the issue. The matter came before the common council last week but after a long debate it got no further than being referred back to one of the committee. A letter was read from Mayor Lunn, of Schenectady, to the effect that 5 per cent. of the Sunday night receipts in that city went to the child welfare fund.

Frederick Burlingham Is Now Exploring the Wilds of Borneo

WORD has just been received from Weltevreden, Java, that Frederick Burlingham, known all over the world for his descent inside Vesuvius and for his alpine pictures, has left for the far interior of Borneo to cinematograph the wild men there.

Borneo is the largest island of the Dutch East Indies, cut in two by the equator, and the third greatest island in the world, having an area of 210,000 square miles, the larger part of which is covered by primeval forests untrodden by the foot of man.

The Burlingham expedition landed at Bandjermasin on the south coast, using a stern wheel boat as far as practical, after which the advance into the interior was continued by native canoes.

Besides a guard, Mr. Burlingham took with him his assistant, H. Flindt, a Dane; some Javanese servants and a large number of Dayak coolies as porters.

It is the idea of Mr. Burlingham to photograph and cinematograph the Borneo native at home, whether his house is perched in the tree tops or on bamboo stilts out in the streams, where he is not easily surprised and killed by enemies.

Among those present were General Manager Everette M. Porter, Joseph Hornstein, general manager of the David P. Howells Company; E. L. Bragdon, technical editor, Motion Picture News; Jacob Lourie, Associated Press; Thomas Healey, L. F. Frappier, M. G. DeVries, T. L. Johnson, T. L. Lambert, Louis Schraeger, Leon L. Producers to Aid Americanism Week.

Letters asking for the aid of producers and distributors in helping exhibitors celebrate Americanization Week, which begins on May 28, have been mailed by the Americanism Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. It is suggested that trailers containing Americanisms slogans be worked to the utmost and that news weeklies show the pictures and utterances of famous Americans.

The committee seeks to complete its list of Americanism subjects. As examples of such subjects it suggests "The Man Without a Country," "The Copperhead," "Dangerous Hours," "Dangerous Days," "The Land of Opportunity," "The Martyrs of the Alamo" and "The Son of Democracy" series.

Frank E. Woods in New York.

Frank E. Woods, supervising director of the Lasky studios in Hollywood, has arrived in New York for a week of conferences with Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the corporation, in charge of production, and other officials of the production department. Mr. Woods plans to spend a week or so in the metropolis.

To Our Readers

EACH individual copy of Moving Picture World is being made more valuable than ever these days due to data formerly in Quarterly Index of Releases now being incorporated into the weekly List of Current Film Release Dates. This change, which went into effect following the Quarterly Index issued with the last number of December, 1919, gives intact files of Moving Picture World more reference value than ever.

Volume and page numbers are listed each week in the release pages opposite the name of the picture reviewed, giving the reader a weekly service instead of a quarterly.

An individual investigation of the newsprint paper situation by the Chalmers Publishing Company last fall brought the inevitable decision that paper must be conserved wherever possible without interfering in any way with service to exhibitor or producer. It was then decided to omit the quarterly index as such, but to continue the service weekly instead of every three months.

Massachusetts Censorship Bill Passes Third Reading After Stiff Battle

Although Denounced as Un-American and Un-Democratic, Measure Vesting Licensing Power in Department of Public Safety Wins in Roll Call Vote of 129 to 95—Amendments Double Original Fees for Reviews

May 11, 1920.

Although branded as "un-American, undemocratic and dangerous legislation, violating the fundamental right of personal liberty," the Massachusetts bill providing for the censorship of motion picture films by the Department of Public Safety passed successfully through all legislative stages in the House of Representatives. The bill is now in the hands of the Senate, after a final eleventh-hour attempt by Representative Patrick Moran, of East Boston, to have the measure referred to the next Legislature had been defeated by a roll call vote of 119 to 94.

The House, by a voice vote, passed the bill to be engrossed. The vote on engrossment also followed the efforts of the Rev. Roland D. Sawyer, a Congregational clergyman legislator, of Ware, to strike out that section which would allow the state censor to suppress any film, which, in his opinion, "tends to incite to crime." Representative Sawyer asked for the elimination of this provision on the ground that the clause might be interpreted with despotic power.

"Under this power a narrow-minded censor could stop anything," said the speaker. "The most useful propaganda undertaken by the government could be stopped."

Representative Kiniston, of Boston, in charge of the measure, said that some films have been shown to incite crime and that the provision was a proper one. The Sawyer amendment was then defeated, 74 to 41, and a roll call refused.

The short but sharp debate on the censorship bill this week followed the long and bitter struggle over the measure on the House floor late last week. Efforts to effect a compromise in the committee on bills evidently failed.

FOLLOWING one of the closest and hardest fought legislative battles in the history of Massachusetts, the House of Representatives of that state by a roll call vote of 129 to 95 ordered to a third reading a censorship bill which gives the Department of Public Safety full power to license all films shown in the state and prohibits the production of any film not licensed. The rising vote before the roll call was 103 yeas to 75 nays.

Because of severe criticism of the bill in the bitter all-afternoon debate, the measure was held in committe in third reading while efforts were made to reach a compromise on a new draft eliminating the more drastic and especially objectionable features, among them the requirement for pre-view censorship which was denounced as "un-American and un-democratic."

A motion to refer the censorship bill to the next legislature was defeated by a roll call vote of only 126 to 104. The rising vote was 88 yeas to 91 nays.

Amendments Double Fees.

Amendments to the bill were adopted by a voice vote. They were offered by the ways and means committee, which, with the mercantile affairs committee, favorably reported the bill. The amendments double the fees of review mentioned originally and do away with the exemption from charge for films for purely educational, charitable or religious purposes, at the discretion of the commissioner of public safety of Massachusetts.

An amendment suggested by Representative Reading, of Cambridge, to strike out the section giving the commissioner of public safety power of approval of films was defeated 22 to 64.

A substitute bill, offered by Representative Phinney, of Boston, was rejected by a voice vote. The substitute bill permitted injunctions for the prevention of the showing of films while an appeal is pending. Another provision was that no child under 16 years of age should be allowed to attend a moving picture show, the films of which have not the approval of the commissioner of public works.

Attacks Women Lobbyists.

Representative Silbert's amendment to the Phinney substitute bill was rejected by a voice vote. This amendment would provide that children could attend moving picture shows if accompanied by parent or guardian.

Newburyport Mayor Refuses Licenses for Sunday Shows

Sunday movies in Newburyport, Mass., are barred. Mayor Page of that city notified the managers of the theatres that he will not grant permits for Sunday motion picture shows. Petitions numbering several hundred names had been presented to the mayor by the theatremen in favor of the project.

Party lines were entirely obliterated in the debate and voting. A majority of the Democrats voted against the bill and the Republican vote was as closely divided. A number of women who have been active in behalf of the bill were in the galleries and heard themselves severely censured by several speakers.

Representative Fitzgerald, of Boston, charged them with being a "lot of women lobbyists who lost their jobs after the prohibition amendment passed and got around a soft old gentleman named Clark and separated him from his money in their efforts to get a job under cover of this bill." Fitzgerald charged that he had been "blackmailed personally by a prominent woman" through his district.

Of No Benefit to Children.

Representative Phinney, one of the dissenters from the ways and means committee's report, opened the debat. He declared the bill was "unnecessary and un-American" and was worked by a lot of women lobbyists who have been looking for a job. They are on record,, he continued, "in the office of the sergeant-at-arms with the salaries they get. These women," he went on, "were thick in the corridors last year lobbying for women suffrage. When they lost their jobs on that by the ratification of the amendment by Massachusetts, they worked up this business and got some wealthy and unsuspecting people to back them up."

Pointing to the claim that the bill is for the benefit of children, Phinney said that less than 7 per cent. of moving picture audiences are children. In Ohio, he said, they are so dissatisfied with censorship that the law has been referred to the people on a referendum. In Pennsylvania, Mr. Phinney said, a censorship bill was passed without a hearing and its chief advocate was appointed censor at a salary of $4,000 a year.

Censorship a Proven Failure.

"Nowhere," continued the speaker, "has the law done anything to improve conditions for children. Agitation for better films for boys and girls is just as active in Pennsylvania and Ohio as in other states."

Mr. Phinney said he had not been able to find any organization of college women, professional women and women of that class which is not 100 per cent. against the proposed system.

Representative Keniston, of Boston, in charge of the bill, said that the bill is supported by nearly all the churches and religious societies of the state, the federation of women's clubs and the like. He declared that it does not require pre-view, that it simply gives the commissioner on public safety power to pass on the degree of objection to a film and it permits an appeal to the courts.

More Legislation Injurious.

"It is idle to say there is no cause for complaint," said Representative Doyle, of New Bedford, "but you are sensible and grown men and you realize the grave danger of censorship which can and doubtless will become partisan. This bill indicates an entering wedge of an attempt to censor the press and the spoken word, and if we are going to be consistent we ought to go the full distance and censor them all."

Representative Doyle was one of the dissenters from the committe reports. He referred to the speech of Vice-President Marshall before the Interchurch audience, telling them that the thing the country needs most is a revival of religion, not legislation for regulation of morals.

Let the People Decide.

Representative Shattuck, of Boston, for the ways and means committee, spoke for the amendments proposed by the committee.

Then Representative Fitzgerald, another dissenter from the committee reports, took the floor and began his arraignment of the "women lobbyists" whom he charged with being the prime movers in the campaign for the bill.

"I appeal to the House," he shouted, "to rise and resent this dictation by women who do not represent the women of the state. Better let the question go on the ballot and have the people themselves decide it."

City Officials Have Necessary Power.

Next came Representative Ryder, of Middleboro, who read a quotation from Lady Astor scoring the sources of opposition to moral legislation. He declared that "good women were insulted at the committee hearings." He said the bill was in the interest of the people and was opposed only by the rich corporations and by the most skillful lobbyists who can be hired.

"Many films showing absolutely harmless events could be eliminated at the whim of the censor," said Representative Bowser, of Wakefield, another dissenter from the committee reports. "Selectmen and city councils now have absolute authority to suppress indecent or immoral performances. This is a case of personal liberty and ought to be so recognized."

That films are important as determining the direction of thought of the people and therefore ought to be under regulation was the contention of Representative Hull, of Leominster.

Representative Roland Sawyer, of Ware, a clergyman-legislator, said both the bill and the substitute are unworkable. The proposition of censorship, he declared, is un-American. That the bill simply provides for a large number of jobs for censors with no standard to go by was pointed out by the speaker.

Work of Professional Uplifters.

"Some censors," he said, "would cut out any representation of drinking, others of smoking and others of any hugging or kissing. This bill is the work of professional uplifters. Our local authorities can be trusted. The indorsements of this bill were secured by means which cannot be approved. A small portion of the public is marshalled to represent a very large number."

On the ground that the bill calls for a new state commission and violates the right of the local self-government, Representative Moran, of Boston, opposed the measure.

"As the house defeated the bill for school nurses because it interfered with town and city government," he said, "so this bill ought to be defeated because a censorship is against local self-government. I do not ask for license; I ask for personal liberty."

Wants Scenes of Violence Deleted.

Representative T. J. Driscoll, of Boston, a labor man, one of the majority of the committee on mercantile affairs, said the women on both sides of the question were honest in their opinions. But he could not see how labor has any reason to oppose the bill. He thought it important that scenes of robbery, violence and murder be taken out of films.

Moving his amendment to the substitute bill, Representative Silbert thought the members unanimous in holding that some things in moving pictures ought to be cut out. "But it is well to go slowly," he said.

Representative Scigliano, of Boston, fired a broadside against the whole legislation. He suggested a referendum. He declared that he was lobbied on the matter the very first day of the session. He pointed out that Mayor Peters, of Boston, proposes to put a head tax on every seat in a theatre in order to make up the loss of money from liquor licenses. He moved that the bills be referred to the next legislature.

Exhibitor Tells of Improvement.

Speaking as proprietor of three moving picture theatres in Hingham, Scituate and Marshfield, Representative Haynes, of Scituate, said that there has been a marked improvement in the character of films within three years. Never has there been any complaint against any film which he has shown. He said that he has repeatedly put on exhibition films for churches and schools and the people have said that if he came up to his ordinary standard they would be satisfied.

Mr. Haynes read several slide contents about the church world movement showing the high grade of appeals that may be put before the public. Then he read a letter from General John J. Sherburne, chairman of the state commission on necessaries of life, asking the moving picture showmen to throw on their screens something to promote the observance of a week of instruction in economy in the use of meats. Representative Haynes believed no legislation necessary but did not object to Representative Phinney's substitute bill.

Ridicules Movement as Hysteria.

"The entire movement is hysteria and is no more to be supported than elimination of books that mention crime," declared Representative Abbott, of Haverhill. "Charles Dickens," he said, "is not suppressed because he tells of the murder of Nancy Sykes." Mr. Abbott said that the censorship movement is "a fad of the faddists." "We have gone to a non-Puritanical Sabbath," he went on "but we propose to return to a Puritanical standard in this matter." He ridiculed the bill, saying that his local aldermen are conscientiously attending to their duties. "Legislation is as needless as two tails for a cat," he concluded.

"There are pictures," said Representative Young, the House leader, "which pander to the lower instints. Some correction is needed. I am frank to admit that in this censorship bill we depart from the ancient theory of the right of freedom of speech and the freedom of the press, which we cherish as an inherent right. But we can't ignore the need for some restriction. Let us give the bill a reading at this time and then work out the best bill we can."

Representative Brown, of Medford, declared he is a movie fan and has failed to come across an objectionable show in Massachusetts. The only objectionable show he ever saw, he said, was one that had been censored by the United States government.

Suggests National Legislation.

Representative Lyman, of Easthampton, for the ways and means committee said it was most difficult to decide upon the details of the bill but he believed it was right to double the proposed fees and to give managers until next January 1 in which to adjust their films to the law.

Representative Reading, of Cambridge, favoring the principle of censorship thought national legislation the only solution of the problem. In the absence of such national legislation he thought there might well be state legislation. However, he believed that the approval of the state commissioner of public safety ought not to be required and he moved to strike out that requirement.

After Representative Richardson, of Malden, spoke for the substitute bill, Representative Keniston, of Boston, closed the debate by summarizing expressions that in his belief conditions exist which demand legislation.

Following the long debate the voting by the House commenced.

A. H. Blank Prefers Increased Prices to Percentage, Says Melville Maxwell

DECLARING himself as strongly opposed to the percentage booking system, A. H. Blank, of Des Moines, one of the country's leading exhibitors, has taken a definite stand in favor of increased flat rentals whenever a raise is necessary to encourage producers to make bigger and better pictures.

Mr. Blank believes there is a present market slump of quality pictures due to the discussion which has recently raged about the so-called percentage plan. He believes that the uncertainty raised by this debate has forced producers to draw in their horns in regard to their progressive plans for better productions.

This important declaration from Mr. Blank was made in Washington, D. C., during a conversation with Melville E. Maxwell, special representative for Realart Pictures Corporation. As Mr. Blank is one of the most important exhibitors in the Middle West, his first published statement on the percentage question has a timely value.

Lillian Leighton.

Maxwell Discusses Statement.

The chain of houses controlled by Mr. Blank includes the Des Moines, Palace and Garden theatres in Des Moines; the Strand and Rialto theatres in Omaha; the Bijou Theatre in Mason City, Iowa; the Strand Theatre in Marshalltown, Iowa; the Garden Theatre in Davenport, Iowa; the Princess Theatre in Sioux City, Iowa, and the Swan in Columbus, Neb.

Discussing Mr. Blank's attitude, Mr. Maxwell said: "Mr. Blank is fully awake to the producer's problems as well as his own. He understands that with rising production costs the manufacturers must either get increased revenue or the quality of the production must suffer.

"As percentage was proposed to increase revenues from film rentals and discussion of the question has only served to bring a varied and divided opinion, Mr. Blank realizes that the producer has been placed considerably at sea in making his plans for next year. He hopes to see a speedy adjustment of the situation and the percentage system avoided for another year at least, to allow conditions to settle.

"In the meantime, Mr. Blank is anxious to avoid a continuance of the slump in the better picture market. But he understands that the problem is a complex and difficult one. The exhibitor must not bring upon himself the charge of being a profiteer. On the other hand, the producer must not be hampered in making better pictures.

"While, in most cases, he believes admission prices throughout the country will stand an increase, there must be a corresponding advance in the quality of pictures. The public, he declared, is sick of excuses based on economic conditions for advances in price, but they have been educated to expect better and bigger things in motion pictures and are willing to meet the additional cost if these expectations are realized.

Exhibitors Expect Cleveland Convention to Establish Their Entire Independence

SAM BULLOCK, of Cleveland, temporary secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, arrived in New York City on May 11 to consult with exhibitor friends on various matters relating to the coming Cleveland convention set for June 8, 9 and 10.

Mr. Bullock, who is one of the best known organization war horses in exhibitor ranks, was bustling with activity. He remarked that Cleveland would see a real exhibitors' convention.

"It will be big and real both," he told the interviewer. "One of the vital questions that we will take up at Cleveland will be the control of all advertising that seeks the publicity of our screens. Cleveland and other cities have demonstrated beyond all doubt that the revenue from legitimate screen advertising is more than ample to finance exhibitor organizations.

All Bona Fide Exhibitors Welcome.

"The convention at Cleveland will nationalize the plan which originated in Cleveland and Pittsburgh. We do not ask members to display slides or reels if they prefer to pay cash dues. By capitalizing the publicity value of our screens, either by means of slides or reels, we will build up a national organization which will do things.

"This Cleveland convention is being called on the biggest and most democratic basis conceivable. Every bona fide exhibitor in the country is welcome. We want to make it plain that exhibitors with open or secret producer affiliations will not be welcome. The convention will make it its business to exclude a producers' lobby no matter how it may disguise itself."

Mr. Bullock expected to stay in New York City for a few days.

Make Early Reservations.

According to Henry H. Lustig, president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, it will be the part of wisdom for every motion picture theatre owner who intends to come to the national convention to wire his request for reservations without delay.

Mr. Lustig, who is an ex-officio member of the committee intrusted with securing accommodations for the visiting delegates, says that they are doing all they can to get comfortable and reasonable quarters for every exhibitor. In view of the increasing number of applications, exhibitors will avoid much inconvenience and annoyance by getting in touch with the Cleveland committee by mail, or preferably by wire.

Said Mr. Lustig: "We want every delegate to enjoy the hospitality of Cleveland and take away the most pleasant recollections. Therefore, I say, let the boys hurry up and we will do our share."

The enthusiasm which pervades exhibiting ranks for the Cleveland convention broke out at a meeting of exhibitors held May 7 in Philadelphia. The meeting had been called by the officials of the Philadelphia organization, of which Albert J. Fisher is president, and C. H. Goodwin is secretary.

Cohen Talks in Philadelphia.

The meeting was held in the forenoon in the Chamber of Commerce rooms in the Widener Building. A special invitation had been issued to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of the State of New York, to address the gathering. There were close to 100 exhibitors there. These represented about 200 theatres in Southern New Jersey, Delaware and Eastern Pennsylvania. The exhibitors present gave Mr. Cohen a hearty reception.

Mr. Cohen said he could think of no better investment for any exhibitor at this time, than the spending of carfare to go to Cleveland for the convention.

"This is the psychological moment," he said, "for exhibitors to assert their power. There is no more delightful city than Cleveland in the early part of June. I hope that Pennsylvania will send a strong and substantial delegation because we need genuine exhibitor representation there from all parts of the country."

Tells Need of Legislation.

"I am glad," said Mr. Cohen, "that you have got out such a strong call. You have described this gathering as a 'call to arms meeting.' This is a fact. I fully indorse the language of your call when it says your existence as an independent exhibitor is threatened. You cannot be neutral. Are you with us or against us?"

After the meeting arrangements were made to get in touch with the exhibitors of Western Pennsylvania and if feasible to have the delegates of the entire state arrive in the convention city at the same time.

Kansas will be strongly represented at the convention. M. Van Praag is now in New York busy with convention matters. An enthusiastic letter has been received from the organized exhibitors of Michigan, who are preparing for a big display by their state at the convention.

May Split the Industry.

From the viewpoint of the representatives of the recent Chicago convention the Cleveland gathering is expected to split the motion picture industry into two factions. These, it is suggested, will be: A solidly organized body of several thousand independent exhibitors pledged to support only independent producers who are non-exhibitors; producer-exhibitors, who are now competing, and who plan further theatre competition against independent exhibitors, using the productions they control as the chief source of film supply for their own houses.

It is estimated by the Chicago committee that the total number of exhibitors who will subscribe in Cleveland to an open declaration of organized opposition to producer-exhibitor competition will be approximately 5,000 present in person or represented by proxy through their memberships in state and city leagues.

Membership Is Prime Objective.

One of the objectives of the convention, following the general trend and openly voiced exhibitor sentiment of the Chicago mass meeting, will be to take up, with national exhibitor strength, the enlargement of the present membership of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, organized in Chicago as a semi-temporary body to aid in formulating plans for the June assembly, and which shall have for its first official performance the creation and adoption of defensive measures against the patronage seeking opposition of theatres financed, controlled and booked by producers.

It is recalled that the Chicago meeting was particularly pronounced in its spoken demand for a national body of independent exhibitors which will function with complete freedom from personal and political ambitions by its sponsors. That the Cleveland gathering will adopt so-called "steam roller" tactics, if necessary, to keep its sessions free from intrusions of this character was apparent in the expressed determination of many important independent exhibitors who responded to W. C. Patterson's call.

"Politics in Cleveland," declares Frank J. Rembusch, chairman of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, "will be entirely out of order. Ohio's leading city will witness industrial fireworks of an entirely different character. It is the conviction of every enterprising independent exhibitor that a sericus menace confronts him, and not one of them with whom I have talked, or whom I heard address the Chicago meeting, has any intention of paying his personal expenses to Cleveland to aid in the political ambitions of any individual."

To Put Producers on Record.

The opening gun in the campaign of exhibitor defense indorsed in Chicago was sounded in New York late last week when definite and official declarations of intentions were obtained from seven out of eleven producing organizations questioned by a sub-committee from the Patterson meeting. This group, which was an advance guard for the Committee of Seventeen of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, was headed by Mr. Rembusch. The Committee of Seventeen will meet in New York on June 3 and June 4.

The Committee of Seventeen, during its two days' sessions in New York, expects to receive a statement from every producer in the business which will put each individual and organization engaged in the production of pictures formally on record for or against producer ownership and producer operation of theatres. The committee, it is expected, will make its headquarters at the Hotel Astor, where it will receive producers.

The report of this committee, with the originals of the signed declarations of intentions from all producers, is scheduled to provide the guiding facts for the action the independent exhibitors will take in Cleveland. Supplementing this will be a summarized account of the important information revealed by exhibitors in Chicago, substantiating the claims of Mr. Patterson and others that organized invasion of the independent exhibitor field is being fostered and financed by producing groups.

Word comes from Frank J. Rembusch, dated Cleveland, that the Hotel Cleveland will be the headquarters of the "Chicago convention" contingent for the sessions beginning June 8.

Selznick Heads Industry in Drive for War Sufferers' Campaign Fund

DESIGNATING the motion picture industry as the only backward industry in New York, and the only trade which has failed to co-operate in the Greater New York Non-Sectarian Campaign for War Sufferers abroad, which is endeavoring to raise $7,500,000 in this city for aid to 6,000,000 destitute men, women and children in Poland, Lithuania and other parts of Eastern Europe, Lewis J. Selznick, on May 12, called upon all members of the industry to come forward and contribute before the closing of the campaign. Mr. Selznick stated that he had just been informed by Felix M. Warburg, chairman of the Joint Distribution Committee, which is to administer the funds raised in this campaign, that only three contributions had been received from the motion picture industry since the opening of the campaign. He appealed to companies and officials, to actors and actresses, to men and women of every phase of the motion picture industry, to give their financial support and to assist in raising the fund as volunteer workers.

Have Reputation for Generosity to Uphold.

"The motion picture industry in other compaigns acquired an enviable reputation for generosity and co-operation," Mr. Selznick said. "They now seem content to rest on their laurels for past performances and to altogether neglect the present appeal, which is of tremendous importance. The motion picture industry has been the one blind spot in a campaign which has enlisted the full co-operation of men and women of every other industry. The campaign has been very successful, but the motion picture industry has failed absolutely to help in its success.

"Mr. Warburg has just in formed me," Mr. Selznick continued, "that only three contributions have been received from the motion picture industry. One was my own check for $10,000, the others $10,000 from William Fox and $1,440 from the Universal employes through Harry Berman, general manager. The motion picture industry has, in the main, been one of the most prosperous of all industries in New York. The public knows this, and it therefore expects more from this industry than $21,440—more than three contributions.

They Are Dying by Hundreds in Europe.

"The appeals of 6,000,000 men and women—and little children—who by hundreds are dying of disease, famine and cold in every country of Eastern Europe, who for six years have been tossed and torn by internal and external wars, and have known no happiness or comfort, cannot be ignored, and I am sure that the motion picture industry will be the last one to ignore these appeals. I blame myself for their negligence. I have heard stories of suffering and anguish that have come from aboard—stories so terrible that they seem incredible, and stories that are but half of the actual truth. I should have made it my duty to see that the other members of this industry heard them too—and gave of their plenty for the needs of their brethren abroad.

"But today Mr. Warburg told me that he would not take 'No' for the answer—that he was drafting me into service to organize my co-workers. I am not going to take 'No' for an answer from the motion picture industry. I want their best efforts to help in securing funds. They must give of themselves, as well as of their money. The motion picture industry must raise a sum that is truly representative of the men and women who compose it.

Only Black Mark Against Our Record.

"Our service record is an excellent one. This is the only black mark against it, but there is still time to eradicate it. The Greater New York Appeal for War Sufferers abroad is a non-sectarian campaign, and a campaign that calls for sacrifice. The motion picture industry can redeem its negligence only by giving now to the utmost—not giving merely generously, but making genuine sacrifices."

Paul Baerwald is treasurer of the fund, and campaign headquarters are at 389 Fifth avenue.

The Moving Picture World will each week record all contributions received from the industry.

Warwick Sues Famous Players Charging Breach of Contract

ROBERT WARWICK filed an action in the United States District Court on May 6 against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to recover damages aggregating $525,644 for alleged breach of contract and injury to his professional reputation.

Mr. Warwick entered into a contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in January, 1919, to appear in at least eight feature pictures and not more than nine productions annually for a period of three years commencing on April 1, 1919. Under the terms of the contract the film actor was to receive $138,000 for his services during the first year of the contract, $148,500 during the second year and $180,000 during the third year.

The contract also provided that the film company should pay the premiums on a health and accident insurance policy for $150,000 and the actor complains that the alleged failure of the film company to fulfill its contract with him will deprive him of the benefit of this provision.

Moreover, the action alleges that his professional reputation has been damaged by reason of what he terms his discharge by the film corporation on or about April 7 last, when he alleges the company refused to carry out its contract with him. Nothing short of $200,000 will compensate him for the injury inflicted upon his reputation, the actor asserts.

In addition to the damage which he claims for injury to his reputation the actor avers that he has been deprived of exactly $325,644 which he would have received under the terms of the contract had he been permitted to star in feature productions of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation until April, 1922.

Pearl White Returning from Europe.

Pearl White, Fox star, is returning from abroad after a rest which included a tour of Great Britain and the continent, according to a cablegram received at the Fox offices.

Charles Giblyn, her director, at present is at Pineville, Ky., with the supporting cast for the next White feature, and has already completed a goodly portion of those exteriors in which the star does not appear. The name of the picture has not been announced. Richard C. Travers is cast opposite Miss White.

Fourteen Chicago Houses Show Selznick Picture on Same Day

SAM E. MORRIS, vice-president and general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, has sponsored the statement that fourteen Chicago theatres booked and played on the same day "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," starring Elaine Hammerstein, a Selznick production.

"Our Chicago branch office has created an unusual precedent," said Mr. Morris. "To have fourteen theatres play the same picture on the same day is indeed worthy of the highest commendation possible to our salesmen. It also speaks of the value of the production as a box office attraction. Those who have already played the picture have been extremely satisfied.

"Ever since Elaine Hammerstein's first starring vehicle for Selznick, 'The Country Cousin,' she has developed a popularity to the extent that exhibitors have come to realize her value in dollars and cents. Her popularity is well merited. Backed by intelligent and forceful exploitation combined with a solid production that gives her full scope to display her beauty and histronic talent, the public has justly acclaimed, and accepted her with delight."

Lionel Barrymore in "Master Mind."

Lionel Barrymore has begun work as the star in "The Master Mind," a photodrama based upon Daniel G. Carter's stage play of the same name. It will be the first production under a contract recently signed and providing for the starring of the actor in four motion pictures to be released through First National and to be made by Whitman Bennett, formerly production manager for Famous Players-Lasky. Mr. Barrymore's second First National release will be "The Devil's Garden."

Majority of Films Shown in Australia Are American Made

HENRY GEE AND A. B. HELLMRICH, with Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson, of Sydney, Australia, who have been in this country since the middle of January, were at the Hotel Astor, New York, for several days the week of May 3, and have now joined friends in the city for a lengthy visit here. They are all in the moving picture business, although traveling on a combined business and pleasure trip. They said that 80 per cent. of the motion pictures shown in Australia are of American manufacture and Australians were eager to make more of their own pictures. That is the reason so many moving picture men of Australia are visiting this country. They are anxious to learn more of the American methods of production and the secrets of the great success American pictures have met with all over the world.

Kehrlein Praises Riesenfeld's Music; Pays Respects to Riviera and Majestic

Chief of Kinema Circuit Making Tour of Country in Search of Ideas for Two New Picture Houses

By GEORGE BLAISDELL

ANOTHER foremost American exhibitor of pictures declares New York City leads in the musical accompaniment of motion picture presentation. This time it is Emil Kehrlein, senior, head of the Kehrlein Kinema Circuit, of California, who adds his praise to that of others. Mr. Kehrlein is definite in his statement. He names the houses directed by Hugo Riesenfeld as being, in his opinion, the homes of the best musical presentation in the country. The western exhibitor comes of a family of musicians and he feels in a measure qualified to pass judgment on the music side of exhibitor activities. "No one with a knowledge of music can enter the Rivoli without feeling that its orchestra is under the guidance of a master mind," said Mr. Kehrlein. "It is my conviction, too, that the quality, fine as it is now, will continue to improve."

The Kinema Circuit at present is composed of one house in Fresno and two in Oakland, Cal. The owners are the subject of this sketch and his sons, Emil and Oliver. The Kinema of Los Angeles was formerly one of the chain. At present plans are being prepared for two more houses, one in Oakland and one in Fresno. Each will have a seating capacity of 3,000. In Oakland the new structure will be near the present Kinema. No name has as yet been decided upon for it. In Fresno the contemplated house will be on a plot 150 by 175 in J street, the main thoroughfare of the town. The five Kehrlein houses will have a total seating capacity of about 14,000.

Seeks Ideas for New Houses.

It was in search of ideas that Mr. Kehrlein left home a few weeks ago. Accompanied by Mrs. Kehrlein, he has visited Chicago and Detroit. When he left New York on May 13 he intended making stops at Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, St. Louis and Los Angeles.

Asked as to what he had so far seen that most impressed him, Mr. Kehrlein declared Balaban & Katz's Riviera in Chicago and Kunsky's Majestic in Detroit seemed to top other houses. One of the outstanding features of the Riviera was the courtesy extended by the employes. "Instinctively you feel the courtesy as you enter the Riviera," said Mr. Kehrlein. "You know the personal contact is there. The Majestic appealed to me as an ideal picture house. By the way, I like the term 'picture house' better than I do the word 'theatre' when referring to a structure in which screen entertainments are featured."

Since 1907, when Mr. Kehrlein began business, courtesy has been one of the fundamentals in his houses. He believes its importance cannot be overstressed. The Kinema Circuit is credited with building the first large straight picture house, that in Oakland, in 1910, and seating 1,500. Also it was a pioneer in introducing music with pictures and among the first to advance prices.

Adequate Lighting Not Yet Devised.

One of the objects of Mr. Kehrlein's trip is to seek an adequate lighting system, which in his opinion has not yet been devised. "I want to eliminate light spots in every part of the house," he said. "Also I want perfect ventilation. I want every patron when he leaves one of our houses to feel not tired but refreshed."

Asked as to any rules he might have for seating incoming patrons, the western exhibitor said it was a rule of his circuit to place men on one side of a house and women escorted and unescorted on another. "We do this as if it were not by design, but we find it to the advantage of the house and its patrons," he said.

"One thing I have been pleased to note in the East," declared Mr. Kehrlein, "is the getting away from the double feature. Too much of this sort of thing is going on in the West, and it is not at all beneficial to the business; it is not constructive.

Strong for Prologues.

"Another factor in picture presentation in which we feel we were pioneers and which has been much improved is the employment of prologues, the injection of atmosphere in the presentation of a picture. You have got to bring your patrons into the spirit of a picture if you want them to get the most out of it. What we are trying to do is to get away from anything that obtrudes or distracts. Even the music must be right." It was right here that the speaker paid his respects to Mr. Riesenfeld.

"It is a most difficult thing to apply music to pictures," the speaker went on. "I was interested this morning to read in one of your New York papers a story to the effect that Dr. Damrosch blamed moving picture houses for keeping people away from singing societies. If moving pictures have done anything at all they have elevated the public taste for music, for good music. A lot of people never heard the compositions of the masters until they attended picture houses.

Asked as to whether he had as yet personally encountered the competition of producer exhibitors, Mr. Kehrlein declared he had lost no sleep by reason of them. He said he believed the field was too big ever to be monopolized by any one.

One Way of Dodging Percentage.

On the percentage question, while Mr. Kehrlein had strong opinions, he preferred not to be quoted. He did, however, say he believed no hard and fast rule could be laid down, that the problems of one exhibitor were different from those confronting his neighbor. Then again there was the personal equation. He related an instance where an exchangeman, "one of the best men in the business, without exception," he declared, who, when the two had been unable to agree on the rental for a subject of more than usual importance, told him to put on the picture, run it for a week and pay him what he thought it was worth.

"That put me on my honor to do my best with the picture," said Mr. Kehrlein, "and also to see that the exchangeman got a square deal. The result was we paid him $800 for the week's run, which was more than before had been obtained in that part of the country. Of course, the arrangement was possible only between two men who had perfect confidence in each other."

Strong on Short Stuff.

"How are your houses on the short stuff?" Mr. Kehrlein was asked.

"Strong, and always have been," was the prompt answer. "We were among the first to support the weeklies. Also we find our patrons like scenics. We use them all. It has been my observation that many of our patrons more highly regard the combination of scenics, weeklies and comedy than they do the average feature."

"What about uniforms for employes?"

Wants Projection Room on Ground Floor.

"Why, I am against the loud or striking uniform. I prefer the subdued tone, making the employe less conspicuous and perhaps less self-conscious. Then again, in summertime we employ many college boys and girls. You can figure for yourself how these would look upon wearing bizarre garb."

"In your new houses—what are you going to do with your projection?"

"I think it will be as flat as a flounder, with the projection machine opposite the center of the screen and installed on the ground floor."

"Famous" Blows Self to Wind Machine.

To complete the equipment at the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation studio on Fifty-sixth street, New York City, a new wind machine has just been constructed. J. N. Naulty, general manager of the eastern studios, conceived the idea of constructing such a machine, and it was carried out by the studio staff.

The apparatus is mounted on a 30 horse power Locomobile chassis. It has an electric motor which is interconnected with a new 30 horse power Overland motor, which is complete with a self-starter, generator and magneto. The propellor of the wind machine is driven by a 220-volt 15 horse power electric motor, with an average speed of 1,500 revolutions a minute. The machine may be driven either by electricity or by gasoline, so that it may be used either in the studio, where electricity is available, or out on location, where gasoline may be substituted.

Malevinsky Made General Counsel and Secretary of Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

M. L. MALEVINSKY, of the law firm of O'Brien, Malevinsky & Driscoll, has been appointed general counsel for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., as well as having been elected secretary of the organization. H. H. Wellenbrink, who previously held the offices of secretary and treasurer, retains his office as treasurer. The election of Mr. Malevinsky was only one of the many internally important occurrences at the meeting of the board of directors of the Associated, which was held in the offices of the association, 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York.

Many matters pertinent to the progress of the Associated Exhibitors were disposed of during the course of the meeting, and it is expected that the Associated soon will make announcements of considerable interest. Much of the time of the two-day meeting was consumed in whipping into shape the Associated Exhibitors' sub-franchise proposition.

To Give Full Details of Plan.

The Associated's sub-franchise plan, it is said, has occupied the minds of some of the leading exhibtors of the country for nearly a year, and at last week's meeting final details were gone over and polished in such a thorough and satisfying manner as to justify the expectation that full details of the plan will be made known within less than a month.

Associated claims to have a sub-franchise under which every exhibitor participating is given a fully equitable deal. The organzation promises independent showmen an ideal arrangement, under which a theatre owner can be assured that the business he builds up remains his business—its success entirely dependent on his efforts and its profits accruing only for his benefit.

At the directors' meeting there were read several letters from prominent independent exhibitors complimenting the Associated Exhibitors on their stand in indorsing the aims and activities of the independents, who, at Chicago two weeks ago, formed the Independent Exhibitors of America.

Among those who attended the meeting were Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C.; H. H. Wellenbrink, of Newark; Samuel Harding, of Kansas City; Harold B. Franklin of Buffalo; Dr. Hugo C. Lambach, of Portland, Ore.; Harry M. Lubliner, of Chicago; Dennis Harris, of Pittsburgh; I. Libson, of Cincinnati; Paul Brunet and General Manager F. C. Quimby.

Big Circuits Book Lloyd Comedies.

Three of New York's biggest motion picture circuits have booked the new series of Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies, released by Pathe. The Loew, B. F. Kith and B. S. Moss houses will feature the new works of the young comedian, beginning with the release which follows "An Eastern Westerner," the last of his first two-reel series.

The Capitol and Strand theatres weeks ago signed up for the second series. The Capitol will play Lloyd for the first time, but Jack Eaton, managing director of the Strand, has featured the entire series of Lloyd two-reelers to date.

Sixteen Chicago First Run Houses Play Metro's "Shore Acres" Simultaneously

"SHORE ACRES," the Metro special production featuring Alice Lake, played at sixteen Chicago first run theatres in one day, a reproduction of the amusement page of the Chicago Daily Tribune of April 19 shows. This sheet, an exact duplication of the original page, was made up and issued by J. S. Grauman, branch manager of the Metro exchange in Chicago.

This showing of the popularity of Metro's find in the screen version of "Shore Acres," that one of America's best known classics of the theatre, by James A. Herne, is taken as evidence by the distributing organization that the Metro's new special productions are making good even beyond the expectations of their makers.

The theatres where "Shore Acres" played in Chicago on the date mentioned were the Knickerbocker, the Wilson and the Madison Square, of the Lubliner and Trinz chain; the Covent Garden, of the same circuit; four of the Ascher Brothers' string: the Calo, the Frolic, the Metropolitan, and the Crown; Balaban and Katz's Rivera, Ascher's Chateau, the Woodlawn, Schoenstadt's Atlantic, the People's, the Hamlin, the Marshall Square, and the Broadway Strand.

Not only was the half of the motion picture page devoted to advertising spotted with notices of Alice Lake's appearance in "Shore Acres," but on the same page was set Mae Tinee's review of the film, with the headline, "See This, Take the Children and Tell Your Friends," and later, in the body of the review the following:

"I tell you it is an achievement to make such a picture as 'Shore Acres.' It inspires you with both love and hate for the movies. You love them for giving you something so good, and you hate them for the horrible things they so needlessly inflict upon you."

On his reproduction of this page from the Chicago Tribune, Mr. Grauman had written in large black script: "A Record Rarely Equaled! Sixteen of Chicago's first run houses playing 'Shore Acres' simultaneously for extended runs."

"Shore Acres," with a notable cast including besides Miss Lake, Edward Connelly, Joseph Kilgour, Frank Brownlee and Margaret McWade, was adapted to the screen by Arthur J. Zellner, directed by Rex Ingram and photographed by Stephen Norton. John Holden designed the Special art interiors.

Only One Two-Reeler Brand to Be Released by Universal

BEGINNING early next fall, Universal will release only one brand of two-reel comedies, it was announced recently, upon Carl Laemmle's return from the Coast. With the projected concentration on one brand, Universal asserts it will strive to turn out a series of comedy releases second to none. They will all be called Century Comedies, and the Century bathing girls will figure largely and pleasingly in most of them.

Heretofore, Universal has released several brands of comedies, including some straight Universal comedies, and the Century and Rainbow brands, produced by the L-Ko company. The Rainbow Comedy now in production, called "An Awful Skate," featuring Zip Monberg and Edna Gregory, will be the last Rainbow to be made. Including this one, there still are four Rainbow comedies yet to be released.

Fred Fishback, the leading director for the L-Ko comedies recently, arrived in New York and sold the Universal on the idea of a new style of clever comedy. He brought one print with him to prove his point. It is called "A Movie Hero" and is a laughable satire on screen idols. It will be one of the first pictures released under the new one brand schedule.

This change in comedy policy is one of the many steps Universal is taking to assure a first-class and elaborate schedule of releases for next fall.

Edna Michaels Regains Health.

Edna Michaels, who handles fan publicity for Realart, returned this week from Atlantic City, where she spent several weeks on a leave of absence from the company. Miss Michaels suffered a nervous breakdown a month ago, due to overwork, but has returned to her desk much improved in health.

Goldwyn Is Averse to Buying Theatres Says Godsol Except Where Compelled To

THAT Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has no intention of invading the exhibitor's end of the motion picture business was clearly emphasized in a statement by F. J. Godsol, chairman of the executive committee of Goldwyn. It should set at rest any rumors that this producing and distributing organization is planning to become a factor in the exhibiting field. Mr. Godsol declared emphatically that the Goldwyn policy is opposed to acquiring theatres except where conditions force such purchases in order to assure a proper showing of Goldwyn pictures.

"I want to make our position clear in view of all this talk about the way exhibitors feel toward producing companies owning theatres," said Mr. Godsol in his statement. "Months ago Mr. Goldwyn told where we stood and later I issued a similar statement. Now I want to repeat it. The only place where we will buy or build is where we are shut out of a town. Goldwyn productions must be shown, and if any conditions exist where our pictures cannot be shown in important communities, then we will have to build.

Averse to Buying Theatres.

"Goldwyn is averse to buying theatres. We always have been and are today. Make that plain. We are interested in production and production only, and except when unusual conditions confront us we shall not buy theatres.

"By this I mean that situations arise that do not seem consistent with our general policy. There are exhibitors who feel that they must become allied with a strong producing organization to assure themselves of a proper program, and they approach us to purchase an interest in their houses with that end in view. They, on occasions, intimate and even insist that they will sell to our competitors unless we buy. We therefore at times feel compelled to do this in order to protect ourselves.

Assures Exhibitors of Pictures.

"Here is an example: In a certain western city an exhibitor came to me and said that he wanted us to buy an interest in his house. I asked him why. He said it was only a question of time before he would have to sell to one of the big companies to make sure of being able to show good pictures. I told him to go ahead and not worry; that we would assure him of having our pictures, and he was happy. The fear of opposition might have caused another type of exhibitor to sell out. But this exhibitor will remain in business with our product as one of his chief assets.

"That is all there is to it, and so far as we are concerned, that is all there will be. No exhibitor need worry about Goldwyn buying theatres. We will be the happiest of people if we never have to buy or build one. It is not our business. We are producers."

Famous Players Trade Paper Inserts Seen at Art Exhibit

WHEN the American Institute of Graphic Arts opened its annual exhibition of fine printing, engraving and allied arts at the National Arts Club, New York City, on May 5, the trade paper insert advertisements published by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were well represented.

Of the thousands of advertisements offered to the judges for exhibition at this showing of the most representative forms of printing art, three trade paper inserts issued by this organization for Paramount Artcraft Pictures advertising, were selected.

One of these is a four-page insert on the Paramount Artcraft, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," with John Barrymore. This shows "Dr. Jekyll's" features illuminated by the orange colored light from an open fireplace, while another ilustration is the forbidding figure of "Mr. Hyde" revealed under the light of a street lamp. This was designed by A. M. Botsford, manager of the department of advertising.

Another was designed by Patrick Kearney, in charge of trade paper advertising. It is a delicately tinted portrait of Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." With white lettering on a black background, and with the famous Pickford features and curls standing out in soft relief against the same background, the color effects are unusual and pleasing.

Vincent Trotta, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky art department, co-operated with the originators of these advertising designs and is entitled to much of the credit for their beauty.

Richard Stanton Completes the First Serial for Fox Company

RICHARD STANTON has finished directing the first Fox serial. Behind this bare announcement lies a record of individual achievement vouchsafed few men in the profession of motion picture production.

The completion of this elaborate and thrilling serial is but one of the high spots in Mr. Stanton's record. Before that came, what is possibly his greatest dramatic success, the picturization of the stage play "Checkers."

The Fox organization has been Mr. Stanton's stamping ground for the past three years. Prior to that he was affiliated with Thomas H. Ince, first as an actor, and later a director.

"I have done every type of story from a simple love romance to a melodramatic serial," said Mr. Stanton, "and during the three years that I have been with the Fox organization, I have learned certain rules essential to the financial success of any production.

"Therefore, unless I personally believe that all stories I direct in the future have certain features that will attract the general public the same will not bear the name of Richard Stanton as their director. The measure of a director's success in my opinion is in ratio to the amount of money his productions make for the exhibitor. I would prefer to be known as a director of money making features rather than an artistic success."

The serial which Mr. Stanton has compleetd for the Fox organization, after seven months' working time, will be first shown at the meeting of the world wide convention of Fox sales representatives, May 15.

Proctor Joins Associated Exhibitors As Assistant to the General Manager

RALPH O. PROCTOR, who resigned as assistant general manager of United Artists a few days ago, has become connected in an executive capacity with Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Mr. Proctor will act as general assistant to F. C. Quimby, general manager. His duties will keep him in intimate touch with exhibitors throughout the country, as well as give him opportunity to broaden the scope of his activities in the executive offices.

Mr. Proctor has been an executive in various capacities with various organizations for more than ten years. He has a broad and deep knowledge of the film rental end of the business, as well as a wide acquaintance with motion picture men in every section of the country, that adapts him to cope with problems peculiar to certain territories. His experience has brought him into close contact with conditions that are existent in individual sections, and his knowledge and experience along these lines is considered authoritative throughout the trade.

Film Career Began in 1910.

Mr. Proctor's connection with the industry dates back a little further than 1910, when he began his film career as film inspector in the Wabash (Chicago) branch of the General Film Company. From the position of inspector he advanced, having held every position in the branch. He was branch manager for one year, when P. L. Waters appointed him special representative, having charge of Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City and Oklahoma City. Later he was made manager of the General Film at Kansas City.

Mr. Proctor resigned from General Film Company to become branch manager for Metro at Chicago. After holding this important post for a year, Mr. Proctor organized the Standard Film Company of Chicago, an independent state rights proposition. This successful venture was operated by him for two years, when he severed his connection with Standard and became Pathe's branch manager at Chicago.

Western Division Manager for Pathe.

From the post of branch manager for Pathe, Mr. Proctor was advanced to the position of division manager, having under his supervision Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Kansas City, Detroit, Cleveland and Buffalo. Later he was appointed district manager of the western division, which included Los Angeles, Denver, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Spokane and Butte.

Leaving Pathe, Mr. Proctor was made assistant general manager of United Artists Corporation, joining the organization at its inception. With the United Artists, Mr. Proctor had charge of the entire organization of the field force. He was also in charge of distribution, covering every distributing territory in the United States.

Cecil De Mille Tells Origin of His "Old Wives for New"

WHILE he was in New York last week, when he signed a new contract to remain five years more with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the company, explained why he produced "Old Wives for New," his famous success which is to be reissued on June 6 by Paramount Artcraft.

"I produced 'Old Wives for New'," said Mr. DeMille, "because I felt it would do more good than any picture I have ever produced. It has a big human appeal, deals with intimate phases of marriage and divorce, every phase and humor of a woman is in it. It shows that a wife must compete with other women to the extent at least of retaining her delicacy if she wishes to keep her husband, and that by such competition she benefits physically, morally and mentally.

"This picture, I believe, furnishes a real object lesson for pathetic wives who have not been taught that merely being virtuous is not, as it may have been at one time, enough in these days. The human note is self-sacrifice and renunciation and the ending is satisfactory. I believe the moral of the picture is convincing, but I wish to emphasize that there is not a trace of preaching in the story."

Issue Effective Plan Book on "The Valley of Doubt"

WITH the release of the Willard Mack story for Selznick, exhibitors booking "The Valley of Doubt" may obtain what is said to be one of the most complete campaign books ever offered with a Selznick production. Printed on coated stock it presents the appearance of an expensive catalogue. Fully five pages of editorial matter are contained in the book. The publicity pages contain stories of human interest about the play and the players.

The complete biography of five of the most important players is one of the features of the book.

Several snappy catch lines, program runners, a reproduction of an effective lantern slide and an editorial on the value of dignified advertising are included. Another decidedly novel feature is the suggested mail campaign which can be made effective by many exhibitors who have a mail list.

"The Valley of Doubt" campaign books are now available at the Select exchanges, as are the cuts and mats. The attractive three, six, and twenty-four sheet posters which are reproduced on the book cover of the campaign books have been sent to the exchange, ready for distribution.

Georges Carpentier Is Signed to Three-Year Film Contract

ROBERTSON-COLE, which is releasing within a few days Georges Carpentier's first American society drama, "The Wonder Man," announces that it has signed the Frenchman to appear in pictures over a period of the next three years.

The contract, first of all, will not keep Carpentier from entering the prize ring as often as he wishes, to protect his right to the championship of Europe. Matches between himself and Americans or other aspirants to world honors may proceed under the contract with complete facility. Matters are so arranged that he may leave the studio at any time when it becomes necessary to train for a championship bout.

The total investment to be put into the pictures to be made by Carpentier will be in the neighborhood of $3,000,000, it is announced. An unusual clause of the contract is the provision that Carpentier's salary is to be doubled in case he defeats Jack Dempsey and wins the world's heavyweight boxing championship.

The contract proves conclusively that the distributing corporation does not consider Carpentier alone as a champion pugilist, war hero, social favorite, sportsman and gentleman, but as an actor.

Henry Ginsberg.
Representative of the Educational Films Corporation.

Ginsberg to Open Exchanges in Several Southern States

FOR the first time the southern states are to have film exchanges handling only short subjects. Henry Ginsberg, of the New York offices of Educational Films Corporation, is in Atlanta to open the first of these branches. The second will be established in either Dallas or New Orleans. Opening of these offices will complete Educational's own exchange system which will be devoted to short subjects exclusively.

Mr. Ginsberg has been authorized to offer acceptable motion picture men a percentage of interest in the southern exchanges, the control of each to remain in Educational, this being the policy that has been followed in the remainder of the country. Company officials believe that greater sales effort and additional benefit to the exhibitor will result from the officials being concerned in the profits, while the full guarantee of Educational and exhibitor purchase opportunity remains with the company retaining the majority of the stock in each office.

Educational officials pointed out that unusual opportunities are offered in the southern territory since there has not been the general distribution of short subjects as in the remainder of the country. New prints of the subjects that have not been booked in that section, together with all of the new pictures, will be in readiness with the opening of the two southern branches.

Withdraw Names as Lackaye Supporters.

Thirty-six prominent actors and actresses have withdrawn their names as supporters of Wilton Lackaye for presidency of the Actors Equity Association, and announced that they would vote for the regular ticket headed by John Emerson and Ethel Barrymore, according to a statement issued by Frank Bacon, chairman of the Emerson-Barrymore Committee.

The statement declared that those withdrawing their names were not informed, when asked to sign the Lackaye petition, that Mr. Emerson was in the field or would accept the nomination on the regular ticket. As soon as it was discovered that Mr. Emerson had accepted the nomination tendered him by the official nominating committee, these Equity members hastened to withdraw their names as Lackaye petitioners.

First National Invades Southwest in Opposition to Hulsey-Lynch Interests

MOVED by declarations of a special committee representing 300 independent exhibitors in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, officials of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., last week invaded the Southwest in force, established a new First National exchange in Dallas, and started the machinery which will ally the independent theatre owners of that territory in open opposition to the Hulsey-Lynch interests.

This action, it is said, was decided upon after the committee of exhibitors from Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas had appeared before First National members at their convention in Chicago two weeks ago and explained there the conditions alleged to exist, and which, they declared, made immediate action by Associated First National necessary if the independence of the tri-state exhibitors was to be preserved. The present status of affairs, it was pointed out, was particularly threatening to the theatre owners they represented as a committee, because of the Lynch ownership of the Hulsey theatres, the control he had of the Paramount-Artcraft program for that territory, and the fact that Mr. Hulsey, as the holder of the original First National franchise in that district, had not joined his fellow First National members in signing the agreements which would sub-franchise the entire territory to independent exhibitors through Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Mr. Hulsey's refusal to sign the new agreements wherein he would be obligated to extend the protective and defensive benefits of his First National interests through sub-franchises to the independent exhibitors in the Southwest, was made after he had sold his theatre properties to the S. A. Lynch Enterprises. It was this decision, the committee said, which convinced the independent exhibitors that radical measures were essential to avoid a costly and protracted war between themselves, as individuals and independents, and the marked interests which entirely controlled one source of film supply and directed, in part, the disposition of another.

First National members in Chicago requested the southwestern exhibitor committee to report back to their 300 associates that prompt steps would be taken to establish Associated First National Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas without any entangling alliances, and on a basis which would be devoid of any personal element seeking to use its advantages in production sources to establish competing theatres that could not be classed as independent.

Fulfillment of this promise began on last Monday, when Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National Pictures; H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer; J. D. Williams, manager; N. H. Gordon, of Boston, and Moe Mark, of New York, who, with Mr. Schwalbe, compose the executive committee, and Sol Lesser arrived in Dallas and established headquarters at the Hotel Adelphus, preliminary to establishing a local office for Associated First National.

This branch will be administered from the home office in New York and will function exactly as do the other First National exchanges throughout the country in awarding sub-franchises to the independent theatre owners of the three states. This will automatically guarantee to each sub-franchise holder the exhibition rights to all releases made by Associated First National, and make the proposition of negotiations between theatre owners in the territory and the circuit one of direct application instead of going through the local exhibitor owner of the original First National franchise.

Official notices mailed from New York to more than 300 independent exhibitors there, advising them of the proposed action of Associated First National executives, has made Dallas the focusing point, and it is expected that by Saturday the entire number of theatre owners represented by the special committee which attended the Chicago convention will be there in person to discuss the situation with the First National members and supply the information necessary to their applications for sub-franchises.

"While Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas constitute only a 4½ per cent. territory," declares the Associated First National executives, "the necessity for maintaining absolute independence among exhibitor holders of sub-franchises is just as important and necessary here as it would be in any other or larger territory.

"We are extremely sorry that this situation has developed, inasmuch as Mr. Hulsey, as the original First National franchise owner in this territory, was counted a valuable member of the organization. As a matter of optimism, the action we are takink here is evidence in abundance that Associated First National members are unalterably pledged to the preservation of exhibitor independence, and that the unprecedented sources they have established, through the force and latitude of collective buying direct from independent stars and producers, for production possessing record quality, are going to be held for the exclusive benefit of exhibitors who want independence, and who believe sufficiently in it to stick together and fight for it."

It was announced that the action now being taken will not disturb or alter the relationship which Tom Boland, of Oklahoma City, has had with First National as owner of the First National franchise for the Oklahoma City territory.

First National Announces Chain of Million-Dollar Houses for the Southwest

Dallas, Texas, May 13.

THE First National conference closed here yesterday. J. D. Williams, general manager First National, and the committee announced a chain of million-dollar theatres for the southwest. Independent exhibitors claim they have not been getting a square deal. The Independents allege the market in the southwest was controlled almost exclusively by Hulsey-Lynch. The committee at the conference included Sol Lesser, J. A. Hollon, of Port Arthur, Texas; Saul Harris, of Little Rock; Tom Boland, of Oklahoma City; Walter Faerman, of Bryan, Texas; E. T. Peter, of Dallas; Ben Lewis, of El Paso; H. S. Cole, of Ranger; C. J. Musselman, of Paris, Texas; Dye, Ford and Rogers, of Wichita Falls and Amarillo, and J. D. Williams.

When inquiry was made at the home office of First National as to whether there was any desire to comment on the foregoing, the belief was expressed that the theatres would be constructed by independent exhibitors, who would become First National franchise subscribers.

Von Stroheim Tells Advertising Men of Days of Adversity Before Success Came

NOT all the dramatic stories within the ken of picture directors reach the screen. There was one of these unfolded to the members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, that body of alert young New Yorkers who tell the world about the pictures produced by their respective employers, at their weekly luncheon May 6. It was a tale of life, of adversity and come-backs, related dispassionately and without attempt at dramatic effect. Yet withal it was of absorbing interest.

VonStroheim a Guest.

Eric Von Stroheim, a guest of the association, was the speaker. In opening he said he wanted to talk on "Faith." He assumed his hearers were human, in spite of the fact they were advertising men, and that a plain story of the vicissitudes encountered by one human being might have passing interest for them.

The man who through his writing and directing of and playing in "Blind Husbands" jumped into the front rank of motion picture men told how eight months ago he was walking the streets of Los Angeles without heels on his shoes, without a cent in his pocket and suffering for want of food. The fact that Vienna was his birthplace outweighed the fact that he had been eleven years in the United States and was trying to be an American; outweighed the further fact that he had served five years in the United States Army. He had spent days in the "cattle yards" of lots where formerly he had been an assistant or a technical director, but for him there was no employment.

Strengthened by Sermon.

Ostracised by former associates and refused work in roles where the "configuration of his cranium" indicated he was the ideal type, Von Stroheim figuratively and literally was at the end of his rope. He had about made up his mind to seek work in other lines. His "morale" was gone. It was in this frame of mind that at the invitation of his fiancee he attended church services. He emerged from the edifice strengthened in spirit. He turned to and in two nights and one day completed a rough synopsis of "Blind Husbands." Three days later Carl Laemmle had accepted the story.

Von Stroheim said it seemed difficult for the public to dissociate the individual from the character he played. He told of an incident in a French restaurant in one of the Forties in New York a few evenings previously. In company with a friend, both in evening dress, he had taken a table next to a man and woman, about half through their meal.

The woman turned a savage look upon Von Stroheim. "Did I come here to sit next to this beast?" she demanded of her companion. The latter called for his check and the two left the restaurant. "That is one of a hundred cases," said the director.

Will Not Direct Stars.

At the end of the talk President Gulick inquired if there were any members present who desired to ask questions of the speaker. Reference was made to stars. Von Stroheim declared he would direct no stars. "It is impossible to do the best work," he said. "It is difficult for the director and for the players and the result shows on the screen." He told of the making of a well-known subject which he said when the film went to the cutting room was a good picture. Following the insistence of the woman star that there be an elimination of all scenes in which she had not figured, the picture came back a mediocre production. The substitution of subtitles in place of action had killed the grip of the plot.

Public Wiser on Military Matters.

As to the class of pictures it was his intention to produce, the director said he would stick to European backgrounds. "Perhaps I can do these better than some," he replied, "whereas others can make American stuff ten times better than I can. Why should I not stick to the European?"

Mr. Von Stroheim is not one of those who believe the public is tired of war pictures. "Who is qualified to say what the public wants?" he asked. "I believe the public wants a story, a strong one, and if it happen there is a war background to it it will go just the same." He declared the picture public was a great deal wiser than formerly on matters of military technique. With two million returned soldiers here you can't show a close-up of a British soldier with a Springfield rifle in his hands and get away with it, he said.

On the general subject of technical direction there was still great room for improvement, said the director. There yet remained in places where they could do harm men who were totally unfitted for the work, while at the same time competent and accomplished men were walking the streets.

Mr. Von Stroheim said he expected to return to the Coast about May 15.

Winners in American's Sales Drive to Be Announced Soon

THE S. S. Hutchinson Tribute Month came to a close on April 30. The last few days, valuable as a final opportunity to make a good record man a winner in the contest, capped the climax of a month of victorious pep. "It will take at least two weeks," says C. A. Stimson, general sales manager, "to find out just how each salesman stands and decide who the winners are." Each week has superseded the one preceding it, with the result that the American has been booking the cumulative enthusiasm in big results.

"Exhibitors who were never on our books before," says S. S. Hutchinson, president of the "Flying A," "have been booking all of our Specials, beginning with 'Six Feet Four' and going right through the list to the last feature, 'The Thirtieth Piece of Silver.' We have been listing a great many new theatres, some of which I did not know were on the map, which all goes to show the universal appeal the movies are making in general and the 'Flying A's' in particular."

Jimmy Aubrey Under Contract With Vitagraph for Two Years

THE amusing antics of Jimmy Aubrey in Big V Comedies are now guaranteed exhibitors for some time to come, the veteran comedy star having signed a new contract with Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, for a term of two years.

Jimmy Aubrey has for years steadily produced a brand of slapstick comedy, clean and funny, that has won him a big following. Vitagraph announces that the bookings on "Pals and Pugs," the latest Aubrey release, were more numerous than on any Big V release in the past four months' schedule.

With Aubrey's new contract goes a new producing unit, organized with Director Jesse Robbins at the head. He has just finished his third picture with Jimmy Aubrey. Evelyn Nelson is the new blonde beauty to appear opposite Jimmy in his new series. "Babe" Hardy, who doesn't weigh an ounce over one-sixth of a ton, continues as his "heavy."

Between "Whispers" Elaine Hammerstein Encourages Puppy Love and Shouts to the Parlor Wrestlers to Stop.
The pup is undoubtedly thinking: "Can't fool me. You love that guy with the overcoat. I'm a once-in-a-while." "Whispers" gives the star an excellent opportunity in a likeable role. A Selznick release.

Bayard Veiller Takes Part in Metro Two and Half Million Shopping Tour

By EDWARD WEITZEL

THERE were six men and two women in the gathering at the Metro office, and the men did all the talking. That is, we of the sterner sex surrounded Bayard Veiller and fired questions at him whenever one of us got an opening. All of which questions the author of "Within the Law" answered with the utmost good nature and a degree of enlightenment that kept the pencils of the interviewers busy taking notes. The engagement of Winchell Smith and Bayard Veiller, two of the best known and most successful of American playwrights, by Metro was announced several weeks ago. Both gentlemen have started working at the West Coast studio of the picture company, and their activities are by no means confined to the writing of scenarios. Mr. Veiller, who is to assist general manager Joseph W. Engel of the western producing plant, is now in New York to complete arrangements with half a dozen of the leading fiction writers of this country for original screen stories.

"My reasons for seeking original material from famous short story writers," explained Mr. Veiller, "is that I am convinced stage plays do not make the best scenarios even when backed by a long run record. It is necessary to throw away too much of the original drama. Many of the most successful moving pictures have been made from short stories, and to insure Metro a supply of the best we have decided to contract for fifty of the works of the leading authors. The first author I signed up was Irving Cobb."

A Cobb Crook Drama.

Visions of a string of movie comedies could be read in the smiles and knowing looks of the impressive collection of interviewing talent. The talent was all wrong.

The playwright smiled back at us:

"No; we're not going to confine ourselves to Cobb's humorous stories," he said. "The Five Dollar Baby" and "The Lucky Piece" are on the list, but he has written a crook story that will make good serious drama and we are going to produce it."

"Will you use the Judge Priest tales?" one of his listeners asked.

"No," he replied; "the character drawing in the stories is splendid, of course, but they lack the necessary dramatic qualities."

Reminded that Judge Priest had been made the central figure in a stage play and a dramatic interest added by a regular playwright, the author of "The Thirteenth Chair" chuckled with great satisfaction before replying:

"I know it; I supplied the dramatic interest myself and that is what killed the play."

A Sizable Shopping Tour.

Going back to the list of leading story writers already under contract to Metro, Mr. Veiller mentioned Arthur Somers Roche, Hulbert Footner, George Kibbe Turner, Arthur Stringer and Lucia Chamberlain. Each of these authors will supply from four to six stories, the last named writer's "Blackmail" being among the number. Bayard Veiller himself also wrote four original stories. A continuation of "Within the Law" is among the contemplated productions.

"The writers we have engaged," explained Mr. Veiller, "will take a trip to the coast and assist in the making of his or her stories. Before long we shall have seven companies working at once at the western studios."

It was suggested that the arrangements for the productions of fifty pictures by such an array of eminent authors was big business in the real sense of the word.

Once more the playwright chuckled before replying.

"Yes; we have just indulged in a two and a half million shopping tour."

Winchell Smith's New Title.

"What will your duties at the studio consists of, aside from selecting stories and writing them?" Mr. Veiller was asked.

"Assisting in the casting and the preparation of the continuity," he replied. "Mr. Rowland and Mr. Loew are determined that Metro shall have the best stories obtainable. They are also convinced that the name of a famous writer will draw the public quite as readily as a star, all things being even."

The name of Winchell Smith started an interesting conversation. A chance remark that the most celebrated play doctor of Times Square is now in California directing one of his own stories so surprised one of the animated interrogation points present that he put the amiable Mr. Veilier through a vigorous third degree.

"Winchell Smith!" he exclaimed: "how can he direct a picture? Where did he learn how?

The question amused the dramatist.

"Drama is the same thing wherever you find it," he replied. "No man knows more about how to make drama than Winchell Smith."

"But the technic of moving picture making is so different from stage technic!" protested the seeker after information.

"Yes; but there are experts close at hand to see that he does not go wrong with his lights and angles, and the author of 'Turn to the Right' is learning all this very rapidly," explained Mr. Veiller.

"After all the main thing is to know how to sustain the interest of a scene, and Winchell Smith has this knowledge to an uncanny degree. That is why he is so often called in as a last resort when a play needs doctoring and why he has so many remarkable cures to his credit."

"But for an author to direct his own picture! . . . there is so much to learn . . ."

A Four Hundred Foot Scene.

"Or unlearn. Before I left Los Angeles he showed me a scene he had just finished that ran for four hundred feet without a break of any sort, and told me he had been informed that such a thing was contrary to screen technic and he must cut it up by the introduction of several short scenes. As I had not been able to detect anything in the nature of a drop in the interest during the running of that four hundred foot scene, I advised him to let it stand and defy tradition. The reason continuity writers and directors chop their pictures up into short scenes is because they haven't the skill to sustain the interest in any one scene for a longer period of time. The first rule of the dramatist is to hold the attention of the spectator. A scene that does this all through need not apologize for its length."

Picture Chief of Methodists Praises Simplex Projectors

DR. CHESTER C. MARSHALL, director of the division of stereopticons, motion pictures and lectures of the Centenary Conservation Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has just returned from the general conference scheduled at Des Moines from May 1 to 30 inclusive.

Recently referred to in the trade press as the "Militant pastor of St. James Methodist Episcopal Church, New York," Dr. Marshall is, with Dr. Christian F. Reisner, one of the most prominent of active Methodist officials who advocate the use of the motion picture with church and Sunday school activities.

Dr. Marshall has just consummated a deal with E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, whereby the Methodist Centenary Committee was selected out of the church groups to handle the Simplex Projector for the Methodist organization. Dr. Marshall praises the work being done by the two type "S" Simplexes installed in the auditorium, as well as the Simplex incandescent equipment installed in the Des Moines Y. M. C. A., both of these installations being the object of daily interest of thousands of delegates.

Morris Names Changes in Sales Staff of Select and Republic

SAM E. MORRIS, vice-president and general manager of Select Pictures and Selznick Enterprises, and general manager of the Republic Distributing Corporation, announces several changes in the staffs of both Select and Republic sales forces.

H. C. Cohen, formerly assistant manager of the Select branch at Los Angeles, has been appointed manager. Tom N. Parker, former manager of the Dallas Republic branch, has resigned and has been succeeded by H. L. Binford.

Republic and Select offices in Boston are now in charge of Benjamin P. Rogers. E. C. Fielder, former manager of the Boston offices, has been transferred to another branch, the name of which was not announced.

The Republic sales branch in Buffalo has moved to the Warner Building at 257-261 Franklin street, of that city.

Exhibitor Prosperity Is Countrywide, Says Rogers After Tour of Exchanges

THAT exhibitors are enjoying prosperity that has never been equalled and that the motion picture industry is at the threshold of a most progressive and prosperous era, is the declaration of Charles R. Rogers, director of sales of Select and Republic, folowing his return last week from a trip throughout the country. Mr. Rogers admitted that he expected to find things in excellent shape, but asserts that the exceptionally prosperous state of affairs surprised him a little.

Mr. Rogers made a complete tour of the exchanges of Select and Republic, and reports that the various branches have tackled their work with new vigor as a result of the successful convention held in New York recently.

Big productions are in popular demand in all sections, according to Mr. Rogers' observations. The public at the present time appears to be in a receptive mood for the biggest productions that can be secured from the producers, and, owing to this demand, it is reported that some exhibitors, to satisfy their public, are offering exceptionally large amounts for pictures that are really big and worth while.

These productions, of course, are not merely "played," but are presented following a proper exploitation campaign that impresses the subject thoroughly upon the minds of the people and intimates the quality of the production they will see.

"The underlying feeling against producers who conspire to exhibit," said Mr. Rogers, "is surging up to the surface at all points throughout the country. This wave of feeling against the producer-exhibitor is fast sweeping the land, and independent exhibitors are taking up the battle in earnest to protect their interests and the interests of the public. It is thoroughly realized that with the producers controlling the theatres, quality production will cease to be a factor in the making of pictures."

A united endorsement of independent exhibitors toward independent producers has been made, Mr. Rogers contends. He declares that Lewis J. Selznick, as an independent producer with no desire to encroach upon the exhibitor, receives a world of favorable comment.

"Human Stuff," Carey's Latest, Is Completed by Reeves Eason

REEVES EASON has just reported the completion of "Human Stuff," Harry Carey's latest Universal photodrama, which is being looked forward to with unusual interest. The story, by Tarkington Baker, differs in many ways from the accustomed Carey feature, as it first introduces the popular star as an eastern college man, in the conventional garb of the clubman and as a guest at a pink tea table.

Of course, before many thousand feet of film have been unrolled the locale of the story changes and Carey finds himself in the great west, doing things the audience always expects him to do.

Elaborate settings ranging from the multi-millionaire's mansion in New York to the vast sheep ranch in the west, many hundreds of people and the capable direction of Reeves Eason add to the strength of the story. Principals in Mr. Carey's support are Mary Charleston, Fontaine La-Rue, Ruth Fuller Golden, Charles LeMoyne, Rudolph Christians and Bobby Mack.

Violinist Strikes "Wolf Note" and Sounds Warning to Theatre Musicians Who Would Save Skin

AS his chin rested peacefully on the butt of his violin, Arthur Flurry, one of the musicians at the Star Theatre, North Tonawanda, N. Y., fiddled placidly along as a gripping photoplay sped across the screen in time to the fiddler's tune. It was May 3, in the evening, and no signs of anything unusual happening.

Flurry "sawed" away. Suddenly another sort of "flurry" followed the ejeculations and action of a theatre patron who attacked the musician with great physical force. Fiddler Flurry's person was slightly disfigured and the audience "sat up and took notice."

Next morning, in police court, the attacking party declared that Flurry had struck a "wolf note" while teasing the cat-gut. The "blue" tone had excited the ire of one of Tonawanda's most expressive "movie fans"; the same being said assailant of said Flurry.

The pugnacious theatre patron, at suggestion of "Hizzonor" was taken back to the State Hospital for the Insane, whence he had been but recently released. Of course, there's a moral:

"Play in tune"—or take the consequences.

Hodkinson Fixes May 30 as the National Release Date of "Riders of the Dawn"

W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION announces May 30 as the national release date of "Riders of the Dawn," Benjamin B. Hampton's picturization of Zane Grey's novel, "The Desert of Wheat." An attractive twenty-one page campaign book has just been completed on the production, which enjoyed a successful premiere at the Strand Theatre, New York, recently.

Heading the cast is Roy Stewart, who contributed much to the success of two of Mr. Hampton's previous successes, "The Westerners" and "The Sagebrusher." Claire Adams, heroine of many a worth-while production, lends finesse and charm to the role of Lenore Anderson. Robert McKim dispenses a new brand of villainy as Henry Neuman, prosperous lawyer by day but at night the master mind of a nefarious band of plunderers.

Joseph J. Dowling, celebrated as the portrayer of the title role in "The Miracle Man," has a part that exacts a performance equally as powerful. Frank Brownlee and Arthur Morrison, whose work in Zane Grey's "Desert Gold," was rewarded with roles commensurate with their ability in the novelists newest production, reveal unmistakably that Mr. Grey's confidence in them was not misplaced. Marc Robbins, cast as the father of the returning soldier hero, supplies much of the human pathos and humor that punctuates the big scenes of the production. Frederick Starr demonstrates his right to a place among the select five by his sterling performance.

Violet Schram, one of the screen's most popular ingenue stars, and Marie Messenger, a child actress, complete the roster.

"You're a Good Skate—Roll Along While I Introduce You to the Girls.

A scene from a forthcoming Century comedy to be released by Universal. This is a Paul Revere on roller skates while the woman on the steps acts as the lighthouse, gulding the wayward messenger.

Ohio Board May Locate in Cleveland.

Cleveland may become the location of the Ohio Board of Film Censors, providing action is taken by the state on the resolution of the convention of the Northern Ohio Association of Exhibitors, which held its meeting in Sandusky May 6. Exhibitors from Celeveland, Toledo, Lorain, Elyria, Norwalk, Fremont and other cities attended.

They asked the state to transfer the seat of operations of the board from Columbus to Cleveland, on the ground that Cleveland is the largest center of film distribution in Ohio. The convention also went on record as opposed to high-price movie stars, favoring better stories.

Prices to Picture Theatres Are too High, Says Hodkinson; Will Fight Them

NOT only the further artistic progress and material development, but the very existence of the motion picture depends as much as ever on its popular price," said W. W. Hodkinson, a pioneer in exhibiting, producing and distributing motion pictures.

"The present need of the hour is a downward revision of the scale of prices of admission to the motion picture theatres.

"When the motion picture became a commercial possibility more than a decade ago the nickel seemed to be a psychological demand. While in other countries the motion picture theatres charged ten cents or more from the very start, we, in this country, had to invent the odious name of nickelodeon because the nickel seemed to be the accepted price.

Admission Rise Brought Protest.

"At that time I was an uncompromising opponent of the nickel, believing that the motion picture could not attain its full growth and develop into something like an art and a high class entertainment on the basis of five cents. I realized what was necessary to produce a first class motion picture worthy of the patronage of the best classes of our population.

"I encountered a violent storm of protest when I announced my intention of raising the price of admission. I need say nothing further on the result of my movement for divorcing the motion picture from the nickel. The results speak for themselves. Even the enemies of the motion picture admit today its improvement both as to ethics and art and the five cent houses have practically gone out of existence.

"Now, however, conditions have gone to the other extreme and I do not hesitate to say that I will fight a departure from the popular prices just as hard as I fought against the nickel as the last word in admissions.

Prices Narrow Picture's Field.

"The craze for excessive prices started some time ago when we heard a good deal about the 'Two Dollar Movies!' I believe an attempt was made to get $2 for a motion picture entertainment, but even here in New York, where the people seem willing to pay the most absurd prices for amusements, the attempt proved abortive.

"Raising the prices of admission narrows the field of the motion picture and is absolutely destructive. The very nature of business demands a popular price. It is the possibility of popular prices combined with the possibility of a good picture which has made the motion picture industry an important civic factor and withal a commercial institution.

Fifty Cents High Enough.

"Without trying to lay down a definite scale of prices I would say that any price in excess of 50 cents is unwarranted. With sane methods of production, with a sound system of distribution and a careful avoidance of waste and recklessness an excellent picture can be made regularly at a price which will make it profitable for its producer, distributor and exhibitor on a scale of prices ranging from a half dollar down. The present exorbitant prices of admission are due to the greed and shortsightedness of certain producing interests which are unwilling to build for the future caring only for squeezing every possible dollar out of the present.

"It is perhaps natural for the motion picture theatre owner to try and pass the enormous increase in film rental charges on to the public. The theatre owner today is charged such high prices that in many cases he must impale himself on either horn of this dilemma—either sell out or raise the price of admission.

"The Hodkinson organization proposes to fight exorbitant admission prices in a definite, practical way about which we will have much to say in the near future."

Acquisition of Mermaid Comedies Adds More Variety to Educational Program

WITH the opening of the new Educational Films Corporation exchanges a new series of two-reel comedies will make their appearance. These will be known as the Mermaid Comedies and will be released monthly.

Mermaid Comedies will be divided between male and women stars, Lloyd Hamilton, of "Ham and Bud" fame and more recently appearing in Sunshine productions, will be starred in six of these, while in six others a noted woman player will be seen. In the initial release, "A Fresh Start," Marvel Rea, the beauty who was featured by Mack Sennett, will have the stellar part. Jack White, who won distinction for his directorial work with Mack Sennett and for the Fox Sunshine brand, will have charge of these comedies.

Addition of this series provide Educational with three series, each of which will appear once a month, the Chester and the Torchy Comedies having already been announced. One of each of the three series has been completed and the second of each brand is practically finished, so that exhibitors are assured that the various studios will be able to keep well ahead of the release schedule.

Variety is one of the principal things sought by Educational in its comedy releases. The Chester Comedies largely feature animals and child actors, but the appeal of the pictures is just as strong to the adults, as was evidenced by the reception given the first of the series, "Four Times Foiled," at the Rivoli, Rialto and the Loew metropolitan theatres. The first of the "Torchys" made an equal hit with the pre-release showing at the Strand. These pictures were made from the stories by Sewel Ford and belong more to the straight comedy or farce class.

To carry out the variety the Mermaid comedies will lean more to the slap-stick type, with the utmost in action. Pretty girls will be strongly featured in these pictures, "A Fresh Start" presenting a chorus of unusual beauty and offering Marvel Rea in the role of a young wife who makes ends meet by starring in a cabaret show. Jimmie Adams, Lige Cromley and Frank Coleman supply a large portion in this picture, while a group of real darkeys and some active lions add to the action.

Educational will shortly announce two series of comedies for monthly release to come from one of the established companies, and it is expected that this will be followed by still other contracts, as the company is holding itself open to acquire such of the fun film as meets the quality standard that the officials have set. One reel comedies will also be added to the Educational releases at a later date.

"Famous" Employes to Frolic.

The employes of the home offices, studios, laboratories and warehouse and printing departments of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, as well as those of the New York exchange, will make merry at a dancing party to be held at the warehouse, 141 West Twenty-fifth street, Saturday afternoon, May 15. This is the second of these affairs given through the courtesy of Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, this year, the previous pary held February 21 having proved highly enjoyable.

Refreshments will be served and a jazz band will provide the music, and further entertainment will be furnished between dances by both professional and amateur talent. William J. Moore, manager of the central warehouse, is chairman of the committee on arrangements.

Small-Town Showman Has "Heart to Heart" Talk with Producers Who Look Through False Glasses

By A. A. Elliott, General Manager the Playhouse, Hudson, N. Y. (Population 14,000).

I BELIEVE you will agree that the whole industry from producer down to exhibitor needs a heart to heart talk. We read of the big producer stealing in on the exhibitor, the exhibitor believing he is the main cog in the wheel, etc., but I wonder if we ever stop to think what an important cog in the wheel the dear public is.

Suppose they should all go on a strike? Of what avail would be the independent theatre or the trust owned theatre, and every day with the advancing of the product higher and higher, forcing the exhibitor to higher prices, or be relegated to the has beens, we are getting more to the point where the public will rebel.

The big producer is looking at the situation with magnifying glasses—large cities (New York City in particular) being the glasses. They overlook the exhibitor who has the same people day in and day out to cater to, who can not and will not pay higher and higher cost for amusement.

They live, as a rule, in surroundings that are pleasant, with friendly neighbors to call back and forth—against the city chap stuffed in a back flat, surrounded by strangers and elevated railroad.

City folk will pay most any price to get away from such conditions.

Pioneer Elects A. E. Lefcourt President; Volume of Business Has Doubled in Year

A. E. LEFCOURT was elected to the presidency of the Pioneer Film Corporation last week. He is known as one of the most successful figures in New York business and financial circles. M. H. Hoffman was elected vice-president and still remains active directing head as general manager. The other officers elected were Louis Hass, secretary and treasurer, and Morris Rose, vice-president.

At a meeting of the board of directors reports were received from the treasurer and controller which are said to justify the claim recently made that the Pioneer Film Corporation is the largest independent motion picture concern in the world.

During the past year a number of exchanges handling the Pioneer product has increased from two to twenty. They are to be found in every exchange center in the United States and Canada, as well as in London, through which business in Great Britain and the continent in transacted. The volume of business handled by the Pioneer organization for the month of April more than doubles the amount of any previous month in the history of the Pioneer.

Metro's "Clothes" Features Olive Tell and Fine Apparel

METRO announces the engagement of Olive Tell to play the leading role in "Clothes," an all-star picturization of the Avery Hopwood-Channing Pollock drama which is to be the next production made at Metro's New York studios under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

Miss Tell is preparing an elaborate wardrobe for the picture, which Metro expects to make a memorable fashion display. All of the latest costume designs are to be represented and for this reason Metro production officials are in consultation with a number of the most advanced artists in designing women's clothes and millinery.

Work on the continuity has been started by Arthur Zellner, of Metro's scenario staff. Olive Tell will play the role of Olivia Sherwood, the part created on the legitimate stage by Grace George. Production will be started soon.

Writes Scenario for Ethel Clayton.

For the first time in three years Mary O'Connor, scenario and film editor at Lasky Studio, has taken her pen in hand to write a scenario, and this will mark the first work of this character that she has done for the Famous Players-Lasky. The story which Miss O'Connor is now working on is Cynthia Stockley's "Rozanne-Czana."

Ethel Clayton, to whom has been assigned the stellar role, will find in this a vehicle admirably adapted to her talents.

The production work on this picture will not begin until Miss Clayton has completed her present vehicle, "The City Sparrow."

State Department Persuades Ontario to Lift Ban on Photographers Not Citizens

AMERICAN motion picture operators and photographers are not to be excluded from the Province of Ontario and will not have to be Canadian subjects, according to the information received by the Washington bureau of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from the State Department.

During last August the Canadian authorities promulgated certain regulations which required persons engaged as operators or photographers in Ontario to obtain a license. Applications to such licenses were to be issued only to British subjects.

Jack S. Connolly, the Washington represenative of the National Association, took the matter up with Secretary of State Lansing, with the result that a protest was sent to the treasurer of Ontario through the American consul at Ontario. The treasurer agreed to issue permits to American operators for the present year on the understanding that they must take out their naturalization papers of they wanted licenses. The treasurer further agreed that this new regulation would not go into effect until May 31, 1920.

Another communication was sent to the Canadian authorities which brought a reply to the effect that one of the reasons for this new order was that many of the states in this country had similar regulations. An investigation was made of all the state laws in this country, and it was found that the only state having such a law was West Virginia and this was a war measure only.

This information was communicated to the Canadian authorities through the American consul at Toronto with a strong protest alleging discrimination against United States interests

Mrs. Fanny Mastbaum Lays Cornerstone of Philadelphia's New Stanley Theatre

DESPIT a driving rain storm, many notables attended the ceremony of the laying of the corner-stone of the new Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia on Saturday, May 8. Thousands of devotees of the screen drama also were present to join in the well wishes for the city's new playhouse. Governor William C. Sproul spoke as representative of the people of Pennsylvania. Dorothy Dalton attended with Judge Horace E. Stern, and shared honors as the two speakers at the luncheon, which was given in the Bellevue Stratford preceding the laying of the corner-stone.

Mrs. Fanny E. Mastbaum, mother of Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, which is building the new theatre, was the official sponsor of the new structure. When completed in the fall the theatre will represent the most advanced ideas in regard to construction and luxurious and beautiful equipment. It will cost approximately $2,000,000 and seat 4,000.

Owing to the rainfall the ceremony at the theatre was restricted, but it lost none of its dignity. Mrs. Mastbaum with her son, the governor and Miss Dalton descended into the space around the corner-stone, which is at the west end of the Market street front and Nineteenth. She used a specially made silver trowl and under capable guidance performed her task.

A sealed copper box was set in the stone containing newspapers of yesterday and photographs of the officers of the company, a picture of Governor Sproul and a portrait of the late Stanley V. Mastbaum, as well as other objects bearing upon the occasion. Governor Sproul made the only address. It was brief, but it was impressive and not only a tribute to the projectors of the new theatre but to the motion picture industry in general.

Among the guests at the luncheon were George H. Earle, former State Senator Clarence Wolf, Mr. and Mrs. Louis J. Selznick, Sigmund Lubin, B. S. Moss, Harry D. Schwalbe, Samuel Katz, J. H. Von Herbert, Sol Lester, Nathan Gorden, Al Litchman, Fred G. Nixon Nirdlinger, George W. Metzel, Thomas M. Love, W. E. Smith, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; E. T. Stotesbury, Leo Fiest, J. D. Williams, Herman Robbins, Mrs. Fanny E. Mastbaum, Mr. and Mrs. Jules E. Mastbaum, Earl Hammons, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Moore, of Washington, and J. R. Grainger, Marshall Neilan's New York manager.

Many Congratulate Associated Producers As Executives Meet in Final Conference

THE official and long-awaited announcement of Associated Producers, Inc., has given the lie to many rumors regarding its future plans and have resulted in congratulatory messages being sent from all corners of the globe to the six principals, Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Allan Dwan, George Loane Tucker, Maurice Tourneur and Marshall Neilan.

With these principals pledged to produce together for the mutual interests of the public, the exhibitors and themselves, and substantially financed by inner capital in a combine that represents a gross investment of approximately $20,000,000, the patient and at all times receptive showmen have reasons to express their appreciation and continued support of the men who have planned a forward step in the artistic, as well as commercial, realms of the cinema.

Among Those Congratulating.

Following the formal bulletin stating that the middlemen distributors had been eliminated in favor of a new selling organization manned by its own employes and operating exchanges in the key cities of the United States, Canada and foreign lands, Messrs. Ince, Sennett, Tucker, Dwan, Neilan and Tourneur received and acknowledged scores of testimonials from leaders in the exhibition field.

Chief among these were telegrams from E. C. Jensen, of the Jensen & Von Herberg Circuit; Tom Moore and Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C.; Frank Newman, of Kansas City; Ross D. Rogers, of the Dye, Ford and Rogers chain of theatres, of Tex.; Sid Grauman; Finkelstein & Rubin; J. H. Saenger, of the Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans; E. O. Weinberg, of the Strand Theatre, Buffalo; Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome; F. W. Buhler, of the Sanley Company, Philadelphia; Jack Eaton, of New York's Mark Strand; Thomas Furniss, of the Brunswick Amusement Company, Duluth; E. H. Hulsey, of the Old Mill Theatres, Dallas; Barrett S. McCormick, Edward A. Zorn, H. C. Horater, Alfred E. Black, Theodore F. Hays, W. A. Patterson, of the Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, and many other exhibitors.

Conference on in Los Angeles.

Additional communications congratulating the "Big Six" members on the appointment of Oscar F. Price and Fred B. Warren as president and general manager, respectively, of the new alliance, are also in the possession of the six directors. They are now in Los Angeles in consultation with the directors. Concrete plans and policies for the marketing and exploitation of the Associated Producers' productions were unfolded to the collective group, although the announcement definitely outlining the mechanical details of the new system will not be described until the executive heads return to New York City.

Plan for Long Runs.

According to General Manager Warren, the advent of the new motion picture year on September 1 will see the Associated Producers in full sway, with its own independent exchanges established throughout the country. A special system of publicity, exploitation and direct-to-the-exhibitor service will precede, accompany and trail the "Big Six" releases. It is also reported that the Associated Producers will furnish exhibitors of their products with original accessories and advertising material designed especially to fulfill the individual requirements of the theatres presenting the superfeatures.

Thomas H. Ince also emphasized the intention of the Associated Producers to wage a campaign for the indefinite run of "Big Six" specials. The principals in the organization will "show cause to prove" why an absorbing photodrama, produced on a scale of magnitude and quality and enacted by all-star casts of film favorites, should "hold the boards" as long as a demand exists, as is the case with the popular successes behind the footlights.

To Have Their Own Studios.

Contrary to reports prevalent in Los Angeles and New York, the "Big Six" will not produce its specials under one roof, but will film the pictures in their individually owned and operated studios, to preserve and advance the complete individuality and distinctiveness of all releases. Each of the six producers will work independently, with separate producing units, as is the case now. This policy, it is emphasized by Thomas H. Ince, will avoid any duplication of ideas and efforts.

Several of the principals are now drawing plans for the erection of new studios on the West Coast. Thomas H. Ince will continue to make his productions at his big plant in Culver City, while Maurice Tourneur, George Lane Tucker and probably Allan Dwan will construct, own and maintain their own exclusive establishments in Los Angeles or adjacent suburbs.

Mack Sennett will continue all production in his studios in Hollywood, although officials of his organization announce alterations and additions that will materially increase facilities and equipment for the filming of super-comedies.

Each of the six producers are now producing specials for release under their present arrangements with other distributing concerns, but actual work on the new "Big Six" pictures for distribution through the Associated Producers own selling system will begin immediately following the termination of existing contracts.

Will Remain on West Coast.

At the Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City, Mr. Ince and his production staff are casting for several new specials, chief among which are "Beau Revel," the first of the Louis Joseph Vance series of specials, in which Lewis Stone and Lloyd Hughes will be featured, and another super-special to present young Rowland and a "surprise" feminine favorite as leads of an all-star cast.

The Associated Producers will continue to produce in California and no members will migrate to foreign fields, as was reported recently. It is probable, however, that one or several of the producers will head companies to England or France for the locale of specials. In this event they will return to America and California promptly upon the completion of the necessary scenes.

An interesting bit of current gossip is that C. Gardner Sullivan, who is now at the Ince studios prior to his return to New York en routes for foreign fields, has been assigned the creation of a spectacular drama which, according to the plans of Thomas H. Ince and Sullivan, will be available for one of the screen's most powerful dramatic possibilities. Sullivan's intimate friends admit that his trip is for business rather than for "health" and "pleasure," as reported on previous occasions.

Whitman Bennett Tells Literary Folk Young Writers Often Have Best Plots

WHITMAN BENNETT told a group of prominent authors all about writing for the films, and why it was that very often young and inexperienced writers sell their material for pictures, when more practised ones fail, at the home of Mrs. Julia R. Tutwiler, 471 Park avenue, New York City, the other afternoon.

"Young authors often have better plot sense than older writers," said Mr. Bennett. "By the time a writer has acquired a finished style he has very often lost some of his tendencies to found his stories on a great deal of action. It happens very frequently that a picture founded on the story of some obscure writer in one of the humble magazines is much more satisfactory than one based on a famous story by a famous writer."

Among those who listened to Mr. Bennett's talk were Mrs. Alice Duer Miller, Kate Douglas Wiggin, Caroline Duer, Thomas B. Wells, Ruth Comfort Mitchell, Roland Holt, Jeoffrey Parsons, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Bennett, Major and Mrs. Hamilton Gibbs, Grace Sartwell Mason, Helen Freeman, T. Gaillard Thomas, Virginia Roderick, Robert Hardy, Mrs. Fleschner, Lee Foster Hartman, Mrs. Edwin Levin, Gertrude Hall, Grace Hall, James Hopper, Margaret E. Sangster, Mr. and Mrs. James Dorrance, Mrs. Du Vernet Rabell and Mr. and Mrs. Edgeworth Smith.

Kate Douglas Wiggin said that the only fault she had to find in the filming of any of her works was in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," a New England story, which was photographed in California. Mr. Bennett recalled the fact that this particular story was made into a film four or five years ago.

"Then no company would have thought of sending the players to New England to make the picture," he said. "Now that is the very thing the company would do. There has been that much progress in the picture world. They are willing to spend more money to maintain atmosphere and arrive at accuracy."

Several writers said that they had submitted unpublished stories to film companies that were then returned. Later these same stories, the authors assert, were accepted after they had been published.

Julia Burnham Joins Metro Scenario Staff.

Julia Burnham, who in her two and a half years as a scenario writer has contributed no less than seventeen pictures to the screen, is the latest addition to the scenario staff at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street. Miss Burnham's first script for Metro is "The Marriages of Mayfair," which she adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh, and which is now being filmed.

Callaghan in New York to Buy Vehicles for Bessie Love; to Screen Dickens Novel

ANDREW J. CALLAGHAN has arrived in New York City for an indefinite period which he will devote to the purchase of additional vehicles for Bessie Love, star of the Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc. Mr. Callaghan announced that "The Old Curiosity Shop," the Charles Dickens classic, had been definitely decided upon for future screening by Miss Love, and that a director of nation wide prominence was being negotiated for to undertake supervision of the picture.

Mr. Callaghan came on to New York from Chicago where he conferred with the group of capitalists who are sponsoring the organization of which he is the head. So gratifying are the first results of Miss Love's initial production, "The Midlanders," which is being adapted from the novel by Charles Tenney Jackson under the direction of Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse, that Mr. Callaghan and his associates are reiterating their original announcement of backing the star to the limit in every detail of production.

With this end in view, Mr. Callaghan will remain in New York until he has accumulated a sufficient number of well-known novels and plays to satisfy the star's needs in the immediate future.

Mr. Callaghan has already established himself in the eastern headquarters of the Callaghan concern at 25 West Forty-third street where he will carry on the activities in the interests of which he made the trip across the continent.

Regarding the decision of Miss Love to undertake the adaptation of Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop" for the screen, Mr. Callaghan says that an adequate production of this literary masterpiece, such as his organization contemplates, will be the means of bringing to the wider attention of the American public, the rare talents of this charming young actress.

Officials of the Callaghan organization are standing solidly behind their original assertions regarding the new era of production into which Miss Love has entered. They are glad to report that their most extravagant hopes for Miss Love's first production, "The Midlanders" are coming true in the photoplay which Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse are completing in the West. The first offering of Miss Love is indicative of what the industry may expect in the forthcoming work of this star.

Fox Cameraman Slightly Hurt When Gasbag of Blimp Bursts

ALFRED D. BRICK, of Bayonne, N. J., is sporting a black eye and a bruised nose. These evidences of calamity do not indicate that Brick was the vanquished party in a battle, but are the result of his having gone up in a navy airship to take pictures for Fox News and having come down much more rapidly than is considered proper for airships and their crews.

The cameraman left Rockaway, L. I., in the blimp to get pictures of the Atlantic Fleet at anchor in the Hudson River, off New York City. The commanding officer of the airship urged the cameraman to tie a parachute to himself, but Brick insisted that the tackle would hamper him in his work.

All went well over the fleet, and then it was decided to take a trip to Coney Island. The airship battled for two hours against adverse winds, but finally reached the resort and then started for home. Suddenly came a r-r-r-rip! "The bag has busted!" shouted a gob with emphasis.

The navy aeronauts managed to make their way back to their hangar. As the airship approached the ground the bag collapsed on the cabin. Brick held on to his camera and a rail, but was thrown against the side and finally hurled out of the ship when a few feet above the crowd of sailors who were hanging on the ropes dangling from the blimp. The crew tried to hold him up without letting go of the tugging blimp, but he slipped through and fell to the ground, receiving severe bruises. He was sore for several days.

But he got the pictures he was after.

F. C. Quimby Goes to Coast.

F. C. Quimby, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has left New York for Los Angeles. It is understood that many conferences with important persons and factors in the producing field have been arranged, and it is expected that on his return to New York, Mr. Quimby will be in a position to make announcements of interest to the industry at large.

"Healthy Competition," Says De Mille of Famous Players "Legitimate" Activities

ON his arrival in New York last week from Los Angeles, Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was interviewed regarding the effect which the entrance of Famous Players into the field of legitimate production may have upon the future of the drama.

As Mr. DeMille is the younger son of a family which for two generations has been prominent in the American theatre, his comment has the authority of one who knows the legitimate stage as well as the screen. Before he became a producer of pictures he had, in association with David Belasco, produced and written a number of stage successes, including "The Royal Mounted" and "The Return of Peter Grimm."

Regarding the financing of plays on Broadway by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. DeMille said:

"The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation acquired nearly a year ago control of Charles Frohman, Inc. Since then, through the Frohman offices, as well as in association with other legitimate producers, this company has staged several plays on Broadway. These productions, without exception, have been received with marked favor by critics and public.

Creates Healthy Competition.

"Now, certain gentlemen connected with the theatre assert that the entrance of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation into legitimate production constitutes a peril to the future of the drama.

"I disagree with them. On the contrary, I believe that our entrance into the legitimate field constitutes a genuine, healthy, sincere competition which can only prove of greatest benefit to American dramatic literature.

"The assertions that we wish to produce meretricious or inartistic plays, merely as a feeder to motion pictures, is the most arrant nonsense. And those legitimate producers who have been loudest in their jeremiads know it. They know it because they know that, more than any other art expression, the success of a play depends wholly on the approval of the public. You cannot force on people entertainment that they do not like.

Differences of the Writing Art.

"Furthermore, our critics seem to be ignorant of the fact that the art of writing plays and the art of writing motion pictures are as distinctive as the playing of the violin and the playing of the piano. The stage and the motion picture are two different art expressions. It does not follow that because a man can write a stage play he also can write for the screen, any more than it follows that Rachmaninoff should be able to play a Stradivarius.

"Which leads to the observation that, although they are willing to accept large sums for the motion picture rights to their plays and novels, American authors are woefully ignorant of the special requirement of screen drama. Not only are most of them ignorant, but apparently they are not progressive enough to learn the craftmanship of the art which pays them so well.

Must Spend Long Time at Study.

"The man who writes for the stage knows the time and the labor and the constant study which were necessary before his first play was produced. And even after the play is accepted he goes to rehearsals, revises the script, stays up nights toiling to make his lines and situations give the maximum dramatic effect. But is this author, who is willing to accept enormous sums for the motion picture rights to his work, willing to pay the price of knowledge of the motion picture art in sweat and toil? Almost invariably he is not.

"I have had many well-known authors come to the Lasky studio in Hollywood. Some of them have spent a week there giving our activities a superficial examination. At the end of that time they declared they were amply qualified to write for the screen. Other authors have come there and spent months, at the end of which time they frankly confessed that if they were to write for the screen they must spend a long apprenticeship of study.

Screen Production More Difficult.

"Producing stories for the screen is infinitely more difficult than the production of stage plays. Making pictures is work, work, work and sweat, sweat, sweat! Will our Broadway authors buckle down to this regimen? They have not up to date.

"Even though the popularity of motion pictures has become axiomatic these authors, blinded by the glamor of Broadway, have failed to appreciate the world-wide audience which motion pictures give to the expression of their thoughts. It seems to me that if an author has a big thought, a good thought, which he wishes to express in dramatic form, he would want to tell it to the greatest number of people.

Averages 8,000 People a Week.

"The most successful stage play on Broadway will play to about 8,000 people a week on an average. My latest Paramount Artcraft picture, 'Why Change Your Wife?' which is now playing at the Criterion Theatre, is reaching an audience of 2,000,000 people every week throughout the world. Can authors ignore this vast public? Can they afford to forego the opportunities which knowledge of this wonderful new art would give them?

"No, I reiterate, the entrance of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation into legitimate production will help both the stage and the screen. We want better plays on the stage, and we purpose to get them. Bad stage plays not only will not succeed on the stage, but they cannot succeed on the screen. Therefore, why in the name of common sense should this company produce inartistic stage productions? I cannot help thinking that these loudly protesting gentlemen are alarmed, not for the future of the dramatic art, as they profess, but for the future of a business whose trend in recent years has been toward the production of red light thrillers and the public exhibition of the ethics of the underworld."

Says Our Pictures Are More Popular Than Foreign Makes

AMERICAN films have wrested supremacy from French and Italian films in Central America and the northern part of South America, said Monroe Isen on the eve of sailing for Panama several days ago to resume his duties as manager of Universal's branch office in the Republic of Panama.

Six months ago, he said, French and Italian films were all the rage and were shown almost to the exclusion of the standard American product. In comparison, there is only one theatre in Panama City today which sticks to foreign films.

This change in popularity has been brought about by "circusing" American films, says Isen. Early last fall, he started on advertising campaign for Universal pictures which quickly was followed by other American film agencies.

Beginning at least two months before the release of a picture, he plastered Central America and Columbia, Venezuela, Ecuador, the Guianas, Trinidad and Jamaica, with posters and teaser displays. He also advertised extensively in the newspapers continuously for two weeks.

American film sales immediately began to jump, and today our film stars are just as well known in the little Latin American countries as they are in the United States.

Fire Protection Association Hears of N. A. M. P. I. Work

DETAILED information as to what has been accomplished by the motion picture industry in the way of fire prevention was presented to the National Fire Protection Association at its twenty-fourth annual meeting held in Chicago on May 4, 5 and 6. This information was contained in a report of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, an associated member of the National Fire Protection Association, which re-affirmed its pledge made at the Ottawa convention a year ago to co-operate in every way to bring the strict enforcement of fire preventive regulations.

The National Association was represented by J. E. Brulatour, chairman of the committee on fire prevention regulations; Albert de Roode, a member of the committee, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary. The report was submitted by Mr. Elliott, and according to advices received from Chicago was favorably commented on by delegates representing all banches of trade and industry and many public officials and others identified with fire prevention work.

Frank Borzage, Director of "Humoresque," Speaks of Human Appeal in Hurst Novel

IT'S a great source of personal gratification to me that the critics have so kindly received 'Humoresque,' my first subject for Cosmopolitan Productions," said Frank Borzage, the man who directed what the critics assert is among the big productions; "but I feel that I was very fortunate in having the proper materials and conditions to work with and under, and I wish therefore to take this opportunity to give credit where credit is due and to explain a few things concerning "Humoresque" and its filming.

"It came to me when I first read Fannie Hurst's story in Cosmopolitan Magazine that here was the story I had been looking for ever since I became a director. To me it represented the most wonderful of all human expressions—the expression of mother love which is the most dramatic, the most inspiring, and the most beautiful of all emotional themes. I saw immediately that 'Humoresque' was a story of universal understanding and appreciation, and it gripped me as I had never been gripped by a story before.

"What appealed most to me in 'Humoresque' was its infinite humanness, its deep pathos, and its rare rich humor. The wonderful mother who prayed for a genius son and was finally rewarded with one rang to me as the truest and most vital character in all fiction, a character that would live forever. Only recently I read a short article in one of the evening papers on motherhood and it quoted that age-old line: 'God couldn't be everywhere and therefore he made mothers.' I felt that way about 'Humoresque' when I read it the first time.

"There was this about Fannie Hurst's story that was exalting, inspiring to me and I knew that I must do it. In filming it, I tried to retain all the wonderful human touches, the fine characterization, the deft high and low lights of the story. I believe that 'Humoresque' is a picture that will make a lot of money for the exhibitor. Its appeal is tremendous because it deals with a subject that knows neither creed, color, race, language, or climate. It is universal.

"While I am personally much gratified to have the direction of 'Humoresque' at the same time I feel that the result achieved could never have been accomplished without the splendid co-operation of the entire Cosmopolitan Productions organization, and the other elements that entered into it.

"I had a fine story to begin with. Then I had the wonderful facilities of Cosmopolitan Studios and the assistance and co-operation of every member of the studio and home office organization. This is my first production for Cosmopolitan Productions and the conditions under which I made it were more than delightful."

Helping the Legion Membership Drive.

The Americanism Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has pledged its aid to the drive of the American Legion for more members. The drive is from May 17 to May 22 and the committee will send out about 300 trailers urging the 1,000,000 ex-soldiers not yet members to join. The Legion has a membership now of 1,500,000. Those exhibitors who do not receive these trailers are asked to have slides made.

Robertson-Cole Plans Early Release of ZaSu Pitts in "The Heart of Twenty"

EXHIBITORS will be pleased with the Robertson-Cole announcement that another Brentwood production, "The Heart of Twenty," featuring ZaSu Pitts, the whimsically appealing little star, will be released soon.

The new picture in which Miss Pitts is featured will be welcomed by the trade because of the unique position in the film world which these productions have come to hold. Without reaching the unnatural effects made by some stories which overdo sentiment and what might be termed "sweetness," Brentwood productions for Robertson-Cole have come to represent a fine optimism which is decidedly agreeable to audiences in these days of economic stress, and a definite financial value to the exhibitor, who finds them eagerly awaited.

Second of Series.

"The Heart of Twenty," the second of a series of four in which Miss Pitts will be directed by Henry Kolker, although following somewhat the lines laid down by Miss Pitt's last success, "Bright Skies," deals with an entirely new theme.

In "Bright Skies" Miss Pitts is a waif with the natural longing to belong to some one and with a very clear sense of justice. In "The Heart of Twenty" Miss Pitts is seen at that fanciful age through which every woman passes, when she is a mixture of sentiment, romance, self-depreciation and big-heartedness.

Star Given Efficient Support.

Miss Pitts is given efficient support by a cast which includes as leading man Tom Gallery, the young Chicago newspaper man who leaped to prominence as a screen actor by his work opposite Miss Pitts in "Bright Skies." Others in the cast are Jack Pratt, Percy Challenger, Hugh Saxson, Ailleen Manning and Pearl Lindner.

Jane Novak in "Trail's End."

Jane Novak is to appear with House Peters and a notable cast in "The Trail's End," an Edwin Carewe-directed picture to be presented to the public by Louis B. Mayer.

This production is Carewe's own adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's novel, "Isobel," and should add as much to Miss Novak's fame as her role with Hobart Bosworth in "Behind the Door." She will enact the role of Isobel Deane.

Prominent Character Actors in Mary Pickford's "Suds"

MARY PICKFORD in her forthcoming production for United Artists, "Suds," has as usual surrounded herself with a talented cast and spared no time nor money in securing players exactly suited to the roles.

Prominent in her support is Mme. Ross Dione, for a long time one of the leading members of Sarah Bernhardt's company in Paris and who since the outbreak of the war has appeared in French dramas at the French Theatre in New York, and more recently came to California to appear in the silent art.

The principal lead is Albert Austin, an English comedian of note, who for the past four years has been prominent in all of Charlie Chaplin's productions and was loaned by the comedian to Miss Pickford for this production.

Nadyne Montgomery, the clever English character actress who has played in a number of eastern productions, but who more recently has appeared at the Little Theatre in Los Angeles, also has a splendid part.

Nicholas Power Signs $1,200,000 Lease on New York Home in "Swamp District"

ONE of the largest ever signed in the 'Old Swamp District,'" is the way a New York newspaper has commented on the new lease just signed by the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., for the building it now occupies. This lease, signed by President Edward Earl, involves the sum of $1,200,000.

The "Swamp District," one of the oldest and most important business sections in New York, is close to the City Hall, Brooklyn Bridge, Woolworth Building, Municipal Building and other well-known civic and commercial structures. Nearby are printed and published many daily, weekly and and monthly publications.

Most important, however, for the needs of the Nicholas Power Company, is the proximity of the district to the Maiden Lane manufacturing jewelers and to the hundreds of machine, tool and pattern-making shops which dot this locality. It is a veritable Mecca in New York for high grade toolmakers, machinists and other skilled metal workers of the kind required by the Power company to manufacture the complicated and delicate mechanism of the Power's projector.

The building just taken over by the Nicholas Power Company is one of the largest in the "Swamp District" and will be used for its executive offices and more important manufacturing departments. Two other buildings in the vicinity are also used by this company for storage and operations requiring ample space, but the building just leased will be the main part of the Power's plant.

The Nicholas Power Company had seriously considered erecting its own factory in one of the outlying portions of the city, but its present location is so excellent, the building situation is so bad, and the demand for the Power's product so great, that it was decided it would be unwise to risk the possibility of delay and inconvenience to exhibitors by making a change at this time. It was estimated that it would cost $75,000 to move the machinery of the Nicholas Power Company.

Began Twenty Years Ago.

The vast array of machinery in the Power's plant is the development of the little business started twenty years ago in a tiny shop on Nassau street—a shop started to manufacture a toy intended to "satisfy the passing whim and curiosity" of a small but easily pleased public. That "whim" has not yet passed and the "curiosity" grows greater from year to year.

The manufacturer of the "toy" finds it has become a fair rival of the printing press and that American projectors are in demand in every part of the civilized world. In the great capitals and in many of the most remote places on all continents, Power's projectors will be found helping to entertain and educate the peoples of those far lands. The export business of the Nicholas Power Company was an early development and it is claimed that over 50 per cent. of the cinemas in Great Britain are equipped with Power's.

The lease just signed is more than a private transaction of a firm, for it represents the progress of the film industry and expresses the great expansion of a company which has seen the full growth of that industry. It is also significant of the far-sightedness and firm confidence which President Earl has always shown regarding the future of motion pictures.

Pioneer to Handle American Cinema.

Under the terms of a contract made recently between Walter F. Niebuhr, president of the American Cinema Corporation, and M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer Film Corporation, the latter organization has acquired the sole distribution rights in the State of New York and northern New Jersey of the entire series of American Cinema productions in the next twelve months. This includes immediate delivery of "The Inner Voice," "Stolen Moments" and "His Brother's Keeper."

Famous Players Will Reissue "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which recently announced the early reissuing of "Old Wives for New," the first and one of the most successful of Cecil B. DeMille's series of dramas of the marriage relation, and Mary Pickford's Artcraft picture, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," will release them both in June, the former on the 6th and the Pickford on the 20th.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," originally released by Artcraft nearly three years ago, was very popular from the outset of its career. Yet, Famous Players-Lasky reasons, the picture public has increased so greatly since then that there are probably millions of present-day regular patrons who have never seen it.

Eugene O'Brien is Miss Pickford's leading man and the supporting cast includes Charles Ogle, Marjorie Daw, Helen Jerome Eddy, Maym Kelso, Jane Wolff, Josephine Crowell, Jack MacDonald, Violet Wilkey, Frank Turner, Kate Toncray and Emma Gerdes.

The prints now being issued are entirely new, the film first having been carefully re-edited and the subtitles brought up to date. "There is no reason," said Al Lichtman, Famous Players-Lasky's general manager of distribution, "why 'Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm' should not do big business for every exhibitor who shows it, regardless of whether or not he has shown it before."

"Everything progressing in the most gratifying manner," is the word received from the Character Pictures Corporation from Florida, by its executive sales manager, Ellis A. Wolff. "We are now working on the exteriors at Bradentown on 'The Isle of Destiny.' Next week we will go to Oriental City to complete the exterior scenes.

Eileen Percy to Star in Fox Features; Producer Purchases Two Stories for Her

EILEEN PERCY to star in Fox Films," read the heading on a short notice by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, during the past week, and folks began to speculate on the judgment displayed by the producer who has given many stars to the silent drama—many who will live for long in the hearts of fans the world over.

For nearly three years Miss Percy has been playing the leading female roles opposite some of the biggest male stars in pictures. She started in pictures as leading woman to Douglas Fairbanks, and did four features with that star, during which time she established herself as a welcome addition to the screen from the Broadway stage.

Say She's "Peaches and Cream."

Hers is a beauty of the sort sometimes referred to as "peaches and cream." Her eyes are large, round, gray-blue and wide apart. It was her youthful beauty which gained for her in New York City the opportunity to play one of the principal roles in the Maeterlinck fairy tale, "The Bluebird," which made its bow to theatregoers at the Century Theatre. Here and on the road, for a period of three years, the refreshing little Miss Percy played practically every child part in "The Bluebird," including Tyltil and Myltil, the two child principals about whom the story is woven.

From "The Bluebird" Miss Percy went into Elsie Janis' company, then playing "The Lady or the Slipper." Here she was a member of the pony ballet, and distinguished herself by her specialty dancing and singing.

She Played with Gaby Deslys.

With the late Gaby Deslys, Miss Percy made a distinct hit in musical numbers, and her dancing is still remembered by Broadwayites who keep pace with the season's successes. Later she played the dope fiend with Mary Nash and Henry Hull in "The Man Who Came Back"—this while she was engaged in the midnight show at the Follies.

Harrison Fisher selected Eileen Percy for one of his Fisher Girl Series and her beauty has adorned many magazines and periodicals. It was while she was appearing at the Century Roof that she was discovered by a well-known screen star and signed up for a series of film features.

Her First Picture Completed.

Eileen Percy has already completed her first starring vehicle for William Fox. It is a screen adaptation of Arline Van Ness Hines' stage success, "Her Honor the Mayor." This will be announced for release shortly. Already her next two plays have been secured. They are "Myra Meets His Family," a Saturday Evening Post story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, and "Beware of the Bride," a novel by Edgar Franklin which will soon appear in a popular magazine.

First National Reports Seven Features To Be Released for the Summer Season

WITH production sources for next season guaranteed to new sub-franchise owners in Associated First National Pictures, Inc., by contracts on which stars and directors are now working, announcement is made this week of the summer schedule of seven productions to be released as the prelude to the fall season.

The total of releases for the 1920-1921 period to be made under the sub-franchise plan will give exhibitor members productions from more than a dozen studios devoting their entire time and facilities to the making of First National attractions. This schedule is subject to increase by the acquisition of exhibition rights to other independent feature attractions.

Each studio organization controlled by the stars, directors and producers whose output will be available to circuit franchise owners, is arranging its activity to comply as nearly as possible with the releasing schedule formulated by the exhibitors. In no case will production units identified with Associated First National be obliged, by contract demands or release dates, to speed their work or stress the normal facilities of their staffs to meet screen requirements.

Anita Stewart in McGrath Story.

The first of the summer releases is "The Yellow Typhoon," an adaptation of the story by Harold McGrath, starring Anita Stewart. This was released the first week in May as the initial offering for the so-called summer season. Following this will be "The Splendid Hazard," an Allan Dwan production, with a strong cast headed by Henry B. Walthall and presented by Mayflower. This, according to present plans, will be given its first run presentations on May 31.

Constance Talmadge will have a summer production in the sixth of her series for First National. This will be a John Emerson-Anita Loos feature called "The Perfect Woman." It is intended to release this on June 28. To Norma Talmadge falls the distinction of starring in the only production the Circuit will offer during July. This will be "Yes or No?" and has been set for July 19.

August will bring three features into the market. The first of these will be "Curtain," starring Katherine MacDonald. It is an adaptation of the story of the same title, written by Rita Weiman and published in the Saturday Evening Post. It is listed for August 2.

Vidor and Ray in August.

On August 16, first run houses will present the second King Vidor production for First National entitled "The Jack Knife Man," from the story of the same name by Ellis Parker Butler. The initial First National attraction from Charles Ray will be available on August 30. This is the screen version of the stage classic. "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," which its author, George M. Cohan, declares has made the equivalent of five fortunes.

The schedules for September, October, November and December are expected to be completed as soon as stars and producers have had an opportunity to determine what will be a safe and reasonable production period for each of the stories obtained for fall and winter release.

Existing contracts pledge to the independent exhibitors who will hold sub-franchises in Associated First National next fall productions from the following independent sources: Norma and Constance Talmadge, Charles Chaplin, Marshall Neilan, Katherine MacDonald, Charles Ray, Mack Sennett, Whitman Bennett, who is producing a series of four pictures starring Lionel Barrymore; Allan Dwan, Raoul Walsh, Sydney Franklin, Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Anita Stewart, King Vidor and Henry Lehrman.

Sargent Directing Alice Joyce.

George L. Sargent is Alice Joyce's new director at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio. Mr. Sargent was engaged by Albert E. Smith to direct the production of "The Prey," to follow the Alice Joyce special production "Dollars and the Woman," which will be released this month.

"Dollars and the Woman," which Miss Joyce recently completed under the direction of George Terwilliger, is now being released. The play affords the star a splendid opportunity to display her versatility. The story was written by Albert Payson Terhune.

Await Ruling on Censor Tax on Red Cross Films

THE question as to whether the films which are sent into Maryland for exhibition by the American Red Cross shall be taxed by the Maryland State Board of Censorship is now before Attorney-General Alexander Armstrong. The charge which is now made by the censor board is $2 for the first print and $1 for each extra print.

The Red Cross makes no charge to those who use its films and it is understood that the censor board did not understand this thoroughly. The decision was made that these films should be censored. No charges are made in other states for the censoring of Red Cross films.

According to T. Edward Murtaugh, who represented the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the Red Cross at a hearing on the subject before the censor board on May 3, $1.50 is the only charge made for the films, which is to cover parcel postage, packing and shipping.

At the hearing before the censor board on May 3, Charles E. Harper, chairman, said: "We have no desire to compel the Red Cross to pay the censorship charge, but we have no discretion in the matter. We can do nothing further until we are in receipt of the Attorney-General's ruling."

Cosmopolitan Production of "Humoresque" Has the Tears and the Laughter of Life

By EDWARD WEITZEL

IT is worthy of note that the Bohemian, Antonin Dvorak, composer of that exceedingly popular piece of classic music, "Humoresque," was in this country for three years and must have visited New York's "Ghetto," where many of the scenes of Fanny Hurst's story of the little Jewish boy who becomes a great violinist are laid. The composition has the quick appeal of a thing that truthfully reflects human experience, and the Hurst story that Cosmopolitan Productions have produced in film form, under the same name as Dvorak's masterpiece, has the same authentic commingling of the tears and the laughter of life.

The moment in the picture when Leon Kantor stands up among his own people and, after playing for them the music that is the expression of their faith, hears them call for the Dvorak composition, will be recognized as among the most characteristic incidents of the screen drama. "Humoresque" is a fitting name for this tale whose counterpart may be pieced together from the neighborhood gossip one overhears at the door of the synagogues or along the crowded sidewalks of the Lower East Side.

Leon's First Violin.

Mother love is the dominant note of "Humoresque." There is a clear and beautiful chord of youthful romance sounded in the story, but it is only an interlude to the main theme. The dream that is the constant companion of the mother of Leon Kantor in her waking hours, that she shall one day see her son a great musician, and for the fulfilment of her desire is glad to make every sacrifice, puts the love of Leon and Minnie Ginsberg in the background. During the years of Leon's boyhood, while his parents struggle against poverty, the day when his mother discovers that of all the toys in the shop none would content him but the cheap fiddle which his father refused to buy because it entailed further expense for thirty cent lessons, is the day of days for her.

That very night Mamma Kantor steals over to the little shop and returns with the precious fiddle in her arms. To see Leon sit up in bed, eagerly tuck the instrument under his chin and reverently draw the bow across the strings is to share the joy that thrills both mother and son.

Then comes the time when the parents of Leon wait in an ante-room of the imperial palace at Rome, while the young violinist plays before the court and is decorated by the king. It is the mother's pride and happiness that dominates the situation. And it is her anguish and brave conquest of self when she learns that Leon has refused the offer of a triumphant concert tour to serve with our army in France that holds the chief interest.

The return of the soldier-musician with his paralyzed arm and the haunting fear that he will never be able to play his beloved violin again reacts most strongly upon the woman who bore him, and it is of Mamma Kantor one thinks when the dark shadow lifts and Leon is permitted once more to make the music that is the expression of his soul.

A Notable Screen Production.

Three names are linked in the development of "Humoresque," the owners of which are the unseen forces whose efforts have made the picture one of the screen's notable productions.

Fannie Hurst leads the trio. Her story has the insight born of long and sympathetic intimacy with the people depicted. Nothing is exaggerated nor set down in malice; neither is anything held back. The squalor of the crowded tenements of the East Side; the daily life of the Jew who has known the hand of oppression and has fled to this country that he may rear his family in freedom, if not in plenty; his small vices, deep religious feeling, strong racial instinct and love of kindred; his unconscious humor and his ready mirth, are presented with the skill to be expected of an author with Miss Hurst's unique reputation for tales of the "Ghetto."

Next comes Frank Borzage. As the director of "Humoresque" he has gone about his task with fine understanding of its needs, and the will to realize these needs. His selection of types and the care and accuracy in his choice of locations are matched by his attention to the development of the plot and the proper rounding out of the drama that is never absent from the situations.

Frances Marion completes the trio. Her scenario entitles her to high honors. Its construction, handling of subtitles and original matter are of the first rank.

Fine Acting by Entire Cast.

The finest acting of the cast is done by Vera Gordon and Gaston Glass. As Mamma Kantor and Leon they have the major share of opportunity, but give the best of accounts of themselves. Miss Gordon knows the woman she portrays and brings out all her unselfish devotion and love for her children. Mr. Glass indicates the deeply emotional nature of the violinist without losing the reserve and distinction belonging to the role. Alma Rubens' beauty is one of the high lights of the picture, and she does all that is required of her with much credit to herself. Dore Davidson, Sidney Carlyle, Bobby Connelly and Miriam Battista are other important members of the cast.

"Humoresque" has novelty and merit and should become as popular as the solo that Elman plays with such equisite effect.

Please as New "Hall Room" Team.

Many letters are being received by Jack and Harry Cohn from exhibitors who are pleased with the Hall Room Boys comedies and the addition of Hugh Fay to the team, which now consists of Neeley Edwards and Hugh Fay. Marion Mason plays the feminine lead.

In the latest release, "Tell Us, Ouija," there is said to be an unusually comic scene.

One Joy Comedy a Month.

It was recently announced by Nathan Hirsch, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, that he would release a series of fifteen two-reel Joy Comedies, starring Charlie Joy and a bunch of Miami Beauties. No sooner had the fact become known than inquiries began to come into the Aywon home office. It is further announced that the Joy Comedies will be released one a month.

Ince to Entertain Electrical Men.

When 3,000 delegates to the annual convention of the National Electric Association convene in Los Angeles, May 18-21, Thomas H. Ince will be one of many prominent citizens to actively participate in the entertainment provided by the reception and program committee, on which he has been invited to serve.

The National Electric convention will bring electrical experts, inventors, executive heads of big organizations and scores of technical men from all parts of the country.

Thomas H. Ince will show the visiting delegates exactly how motion pictures are made, and how electricity and its allied powers are utilized in film manufacturing organization.

Pathe Statistics Show Blanche Sweet A Favorite in More Than 6,000 Houses

STATISTICS compiled by Pathe Exchange, Inc., show that Blanche Sweet is a favorite actress in more than 6,000 theatres in the United States and that the patrons of that number of theatres look forward to each new release as it appears. The growth of her popularity has been marked with each new release and the outlook for the next picture, "Simple Souls," indicates that it will play in more theatres than any other play in which the star has ever appeared.

"A Woman of Pleasure" and "Fighting Cressy," the first two Blanche Sweet productions released by Pathe, are still booking in great strength in every territory. "The Deadlier Sex" is one of the fastest moving productions on the Pathe schedule, exhibitors who played the first two pictures having asked for the third one for as early a date as possible.

Results Show Wisdom of Policy.

In the preparation of the Blanche Sweet series it was determined to give the star unlimited time and unlimited scope in production in the making of each picture. It was strongly felt that the great popularity of Blanche Sweet would take her to a foremost place among women stars if she was given productions of the right type. To eliminate all chance of poor pictures injuring the star, it was decided to observe strictly the right of rejection and to keep from the market any picture which did not meet the rigid requirements of the standard set for her.

The wisdom of the policy adopted at that time is shown in the demand now manifest for the Blanche Sweet pictures. Her own work and the merit of the pictures have created a demand which insures the success of "Simple Souls" even before its release date. The Pathe reviewing committee has passed on the picture, and judging from the reports of the members "Simple Souls" does not require the prestige of the previous Blanche Sweet productions.

Even a Duke Doesn't Impress.

"Simple Souls" is from the novel by John Hastings Turner and was especially selected for Miss Sweet. She has the role of the English shop girl with a soul so simple that even marrying a Duke doesn't impress her. He is just another simple soul to her, and the Duke himself is a regular fellow who knows he is a simple soul. But his relatives are sure they have a monopoly on all the blue blood in the world and thereby hangs the tale.

The picture will be released on May 23.

Bumps Adams Starts Work.

Work on the first production of the series of comedies in which Bumps Adams will be featured by Screen Crafts, Inc., has been started. DeWitte Hagar is directing.

Naming a Theatre Allah Annoys the Home Folks

A CERTAIN police lieutenant in Springfield, Mass., is scratching his head by the hour and local folks are engaged in heated argument all because Miss M. Hennessey has gone and named her South End picture theatre the Allah. The trouble started when a good Christian complained to the police that the name is highly improper, and, as Detective Lieutenant George H. Norris censors theatrical billboards, the chief said: "George, you settle this question for us."

They say that Norris has consulted with State Inspector C. L. Blish, a bunch of newspaper men and Dan'l Webster's dictionary. The last authority helped Norris issue the following bulletin: "Allah is a combination of two Arabic words—'Al,' meaning the definite article 'the,' and 'Lah,' meaning God. Combined the words mean one true God. Allah is the term used by the Moslems and other worshippers of Mohammed, the supreme being. The term is used in Hebrew and Arabic with the same significance, consequently the sign on the movie house may be read 'The One True God,' 'The Supreme Being,' 'The True God,' etc."

Meanwhile Miss Hennessey, who has had the theatre since September 1, 1919, is considering stopping her paid advertising in the newspapers.

Educational Exchanges To Be Operating in Twenty-one Key Cities About June 1

THE Educational Films Corporation announces that it expects to be serving the motion picture theatres of the entire country through its own exchanges by June 1. These offices will afford the first national specialization in short subjects ever offered by a film organization. The entire effort of each office will be confined to Educational product and no picture longer than two reels will be handled.

Contracts have already been signed for the exchanges in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis, Omaha, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle. Announcements of contracts for St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver and Salt Lake City are expected any day. An official of the New York office has been sent to the southern territory to arrange for exchanges in Atlanta and either Dallas or New Orleans.

"We feel that we have completed an epoch in our organization," said E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager. "When Educational began its activities it was generally regarded as an experiment, though we were convinced that there was ample room for us before the company was organized. We have always looked forward to the day when we could have our own distributing organization, but we have had to wait until there was a volume of product that warranted the establishment of these offices.

Now Retain Control of Product.

"The vast number of offers we have had from various producing interests has been a marked appreciation of the standing of this company. These producers, of course, have had the same difficulties that we have experienced. We have in the past been distributing through independent exchanges, but this has been unsatisfactory because we have, in a large measure, lost control of our product after the rights were sold.

"We have appreciated, too, that it is not possible to properly handle both the short subject and the feature through the same exchange. It is natural that the exchange employes should feel a greater interest in the so-called feature because of the greater gross revenue from it, and therefore neglect the short subject.

"We have realized from the start that the only satisfactory method would be the establishment of our own exchanges and we have only waited until we acquired the bulk of product. That we have, and daily we are being offered pictures by producers of one and two reel subjects in every field. We are giving consideration to every one of these and we expect to still offer a distribution system for such short films as meet our quality standard.

"We have not hesitated to accept series that are seemingly in competition with pictures that we have distributed in the past for the simple reason that we determined some month. ago that this company, with its own exchanges in operation, should be accepted by exhibitors everywhere as the one organization from which to seek quality short subjects. This will ever be our rule of conduct.

Departed from Usual Policy.

"In establishing our own exchanges we have departed from the usual policy in offering exhibitor interests in various territories participation in the ownership of each exchange. We have not undertaken to put in our franchise of 'good-will' as a portion of the stock, but in each instance have supplied the cash. We believe that this local participation in the various exchange ownerships assures exhibitors that the men who are interested in the exchanges are going to demand from our company the utmost in quality pictures and the fullest amount of co-operation for the theatre. But we have avoided the danger of control of our pictures falling into the hands of any group of theatres and have assured a competitive exhibitor market by retaining the control of each exchange in the home company."

Educational will announce its releases next week. These include Bruce Scenics Beautiful, Outing-Chesters, Screenics, a series of forty foreign travel subjects, the Red Cross pictures and a half dozen other scenic and travel pictures, as well as a number of educational and novelty subjects. In the comedy field there will be two-reel Chester, Torchy and Mermaid comedies and two other two-reelers to be announced shortly. Contracts already signed assure five two-reel comedies each month and it is possible that this will be increased, while one-reel comedies will be added in a short time.

"The Thirtieth Piece of Silver" Can Be Made Into a Big Box Office Winner

By EPES W. SARGENT

SOMETIMES it happens that a production goes together so well that its charm places the play as a whole in a class well in advance of the average entertainment. In such a case it is well to disregard the usual methods of putting over a play by means of the star and work to a more general appeal with the aim of interesting all who delight in good entertainment. This does not mean, of course, that stars are to be ignored, but that managers should realize the greater value of their offering and broaden their appeal.

The screen version of Albert Payson Terhune's story, "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," originally presented as a novel and now offered with Marguerita Fisher and King Baggot in the leading roles, is a play of this type. The exhibitor who would realize to the full the possibilities of this play must cast aside the conventional booming and make an effort to get every one interested.

Production Has Charm.

The story as it shows upon the screen offers a delightful little farce of married life, dramatic in its moments of suspense and yet always a comedy. It has been produced with unusual care and the telling is fluent and wholly delightful. It lends itself to the screen even better than it did to the printed page and it will give pleasure to all classes of patrons from the lovers of crude melodrama to the more intellectual class who find small profit in the average motion picture.

Make it your effort to get everyone in. The "regulars" will probably come to see the stars. Devote a good part of your effort to drawing the attendance of those who seldom come and then only to the unusual features. Make this class of captious patrons realize that in "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver" you are offering something out of the usual run.

This can probably best be done through the appeal of Mr. Terhune's name, for he is a graceful and prolific writer and well known to all classes or readers, from those who make the daily newspapers their library to men and women of more careful tastes.

Press Book Stunts.

The plan book issued by American offers many good ideas. It is not the purpose to discuss these in detail, but they are worthy of careful study. The lobby display of rare coins is a good suggestion and will work best if both ideas are taken, with a real display of coins on one side and the burlesque group on the other side of the lobby.

In almost every town you can find at least one coin collector. If you have difficulty in locating the coins some coin dealer will rent you a few coins for a small sum plus a credit card. If your lobby is small, work the exhibition in some nearby window with stills and cutouts. A jewelry store would be the best, but any window will serve. You might offer free tickets for the loan of odd coins, and in this way get another advertising angle. Or you can work for a loan exhibition.

The fashion show can be worked if you have not used this stunt within three months, and this angle is always good for a hookup window, but should not be given too great a prominence.

Perhaps the most valuable aid offered by American is the sticker, which is printed in black on silver and when cut out looks remarkably like a real coin. Be careful to note that the counterfeiting laws prohibit the pasting of these on coins or any metal base. Several ingenious uses are suggested, all of which are good.

The use of the sticker on the local papers is feasible if you can arrange to use it on one of the sections of the Sunday paper, which is printed sufficiently far in advance to make the idea possible.

And cut out a shekel and paste it on the shelf on which the patron's change is placed. It may delay the line a little while people try to scoop it in with their change, but the laughs will atone for the brief wait. If you work this, get the editor to send a reporter down to write a humorous story on how the people tried to pick up the coin.

The "lost" shekel will also serve as the basis of many stunts. Only a single coin may be lost or a number made up and planted about town on the same line as the recent lost keys.

Use Cutouts.

The cutout suggestions are all good, notably that involving the use of a practical door. If you can charter a small boy, mount the six-sheet without the lettering, then letter the message on the door. Have the boy shut the door whenever any one stops to look at the display. You can rig pulleys and cord so that the door can be opened and closed from a distince which will heighten the effect, or you can rig a motor and make the motion automatic.

The peep show is not only a good lobby idea, but a little work will supply a set of these to be used in distant windows.

A Furniture Hookup.

Getting away from the press book schemes, work the local furniture stores with hookups for coin or other cabinets. Use the line "Everything in this house is yours, Leila, with one exception. Never open that cabinet." Back this up with the stills. Have another card reading: "Get a good cabinet. Tyler Cole did not buy his here and his wife opened it with a hairpin. She nearly lost 'The Thirtieth Piece of Silver' and her husband's love. Buy yours here, then see the play at ——."

Get after the book stores early for displays of Terhune's books. "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver" is the star, but you can use all his novels for a hookup and profit by connecting this story with the author's other works. He has written a wide range of books. Let them all work for you.

Boom the Author.

This angle is important to you. As suggested above, the play will please many who do not follow the picture stars. They will not come to see it because Miss Fisher is the star or because King Baggot is her leading man. They will come to see Terhune's story on the screen, and having come, they will go away with a better impression of pictures in general and will be more apt to come again. This angle is important to you, not only for this picture, but for later business.

If your local paper uses the Terhune syndicated stuff, try and get the editor to run an announcement of the play immediately below the story. Don't use a display ad, but three or four lines in full

"You Have Wings," Remarks King Baggot. "Fly Away!"

That was the start of the trouble in "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver." Margarita Fisher did not have the sense to give a jealous fiance his conge.

face, reading: "'The Thirtieth Piece of Silver,' the story of a modern Bluebeard, by Albert Payson Terhune, will be run at the Blank Theatre, Thursday, Friday and Saturday." You will probably have to pay double rates for this reader, but the cost will be small as compared with the results.

Get After Ministers.

Get after some local minister and get him to preach a sermon on jealousy. Show him the full synopsis to prove that the story does not touch upon religion, and if possible let him see the film. If necessary send or take him to some nearby town where the picture is being played, defraying the expense. In most places there is always some minister who will be glad to get suggestions for striking topics.

And use care in getting the idea of the story before your prospects. The title suggests a biblical story, or at least a "modern" treatment of the theme of Judas' betrayal. Do not let the idea prevail. Tell what the thirtieth piece is. Tell that the coin is supposed to be one of the thirty pieces of silver paid for the betrayal of Christ. The others were all lost or melted up, and this piece was almost worshiped by its proud possessor.

If you stand well with the editor you can get the legend of the coin printed as a pure reader a few days in advance of your first advertisement. Use this reader or amplify it.

The Thirtieth Piece of Silver.

According to coin collectors there still remains in existence one of the thirty pieces of silver paid by the Jewish authorities to Judas Iscariot for the betrayal of his Master.

If the legends of the coin collectors are to be believed, the thirty pieces were originally claimed as curios and passed from generation to generation by the owners. In the course of time all trace of twenty-nine of these was lost, but there still remains in existence one of the thirty shekels, properly authenticated by bulky records and certificates.

The illustration from the plan book can be copied to illustrate the story, and an imaginative writer can enlarge upon the idea by telling how each of the pieces was supposed to be lost. There should be nothing in the story to connect this with the play. Later the story can be reprinted in the advertisement and used as though it had first appeared through a happy chance.

Can Be Illustrated.

Building up on this, you can get some local merchant to make a show window display of the coin cut out from one of the stickers. Do this before you have made any use of the stickers and it will look like a bit of private enterprise. Later the more general use of the stickers will be connected with the showing, but the effect will not be materially hurt.

You can make this preparation without interfering with your advertising for other features and can time it to have it ready to work for you when you start your own campaign.

Tell It Is a Farce.

Once you have started your campaign, bear down on the fact that this is a comedy and not a serious play. Tell what the thirtieth piece of silver is, then play up the situation it evolved.

Work on curiosity. Try something like this:

Suppose that your husband owned the most valuable coin in the world.

Suppose that your old sweetheart walked out of the house with it.

Suppose that to hide your own curiosity you told your husband he stole it.

Suppose that you went to his hotel at midnight to beg him to return the coin.

Suppose that your husband came while you were there.

What do you suppose would happen?

You can't guess in a thousand years unless you have read the Albert Payson Terhune story in its novel form, and even then you don't know just how it ended. Come and see it at the Blank, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. If you don't like it you can have your money back.

But That's Not All.

Working from the other angle, you can hook up with books on dreams, card reading, crystal gazing and all the rest of the apparatus of the credulous, and there are three stills which might have been made to order for such use. If you can get the loan of a coin-operated fortune-telling machine, have special "fortunes" printed up reading: "You are about to enjoy a great happiness. Come and see 'The Thirtieth Piece of Silver' Wednesday or Thursday and you will know what this good luck is." Get a supply of slugs and use a card: "Your fortune told FREE. Get a slug from the cashier. Not for children under sixteen."

This last will keep the children away. If your cashier is busy, give the slugs to the doorman or put someone in the lobby during the rush hours.

If you cannot rent a machine, set up a crystal gazer in your lobby and let her tell fortunes, making this a feature in your advertising. Get a clever girl who knows something of the stock phrases and she can fake fortunes, winding up with a solemn warning to be sure and see "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver."

Savings Banks.

Get the savings bank to come in on a hookup, offering to supply the thirtieth piece of silver to anyone who will deposit 29 silver dimes or 29 quarters or halves on a new account. Most banks will be glad to pay as high as a dollar for new accounts. They will be willing to do a little advertising to get the idea over, and will hook up their windows and give space in the banking room for posters.

A good display window would be a row of 29 newly painted coins of each denomination with the thirtieth piece slightly separated and a card reading: "We will supply you with the thirtieth piece of silver on a new account to run at least three months. Three dollars for 29 dimes, $7.50 for 29 quarters or $15 for 29 halves." With stills of the play and a border of stickers a neat display can be made.

Both savings and deposit banks might be induced to use coin facsimile stickers on local letters, or even on printed cards to be slipped into deposit books. Copy for such a card could read: "Tyler Cole lost his thirtieth piece of silver. The First National has never lost its depositors a penny. See the play at the Star Theatre (date here) and bank with the First National."

Spend Some Money.

Even if you have to count closely the pennies you put into your advertising appropriation, be a little generous with this play on the proposition that the money will come back to you increased if you can get people to come and see this production.

Every house has among its possible patrons some few who feel that the pictures are childish. There are apt to be at least a few others who are temporarily tired of pictures. Get them in to see a production good from all angles and they will come again. The money you spend now will work beyond the run of the play in the appeal you make to these two classes, for this story should please practically everyone.

It is not a big production in the sense that it uses large crowds or massive sets. The cast is small and the settings are not over elaborate, but the story is of a type to please above the average and the production will give greater satisfaction to most persons than one in which scenery is made to take the place of plot. Between these suggestions and the press book you should have no difficulty in putting this over.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Matrimonial Barques That Weather Mid-Channel Are Safe, Finds Miss Young

By GIEBLER

I DID quite a bit of stepping around this week—had a number of interesting conversations with a number of interesting people, including a charming lady star; saw Sidney Franklin direct a scene in the play he is making from Robert W. Chambers' "Athalie" for the Mayflower Corporation; watched Bert Lytell working in "The Temple of Dawn" with six fuzzy camels, a half-dozen elephants and three hundred Hindoos who didn't like the idea of showing up on the set at six a. m. the next morning.

It seemed as though almost everybody that favored me with anything like an extended conversation this week, with the exception of Clara Kimball Young, wanted to talk about books. Miss Young told me about the new film she is making from Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's stage play, "Mid-Channel."

Matrimony Likened to Rough Water.

"It was a very fine play and very poular on the regular stage," said Miss Young, "and it is one of the kind of plays that are bettered by being transferred to the screen. The story is full of clever comedy situations, keen satire, and a big lesson is taught—and it all winds up with a delightfully unexpected surprise.

"Pinero makes a simile of the English Channel by likening that body of water to the sea of matrimony. The Channel is pretty rough all the way over, you know, but the roughest part is right in the middle. Boats that pass this rough water in safety are sure of making port.

"The story shows that matrimonial barks which weather the rough waters of Mid-Channel in the sea of marriage are pretty sure to sail on to the harbor of happiness and contentment."

Work Agrees with Miss Young.

Miss Young is said to be one of the busiest women in the film colony. She is credited with being her own director, her own technical expert, and of supervising the adaptations of her stories as well as playing the leading part in them. I accused her of all this.

"It's true," she said. "I'm a sort of general utility."

"Aren't you afraid you will work too hard?" I asked. "Get a nervous breakdown or something? Most of our stars take a long rest between each picture."

"Nonsense," she replied. "Work never hurts anyone. People that keep busy never have any nerves to break down. Do you remember what Mark Twain said about dying? He said that more people die lying down than in any other position. Therefore, never give up, never lie down."

Sees Return of Original Story.

Allan Dwan was up to his neck in work on the details of the next, and last, production he will make for the Mayflower Corporation, when I invaded his study out on the Brunton lot, but he stopped long enough to make a few remarks on stories for the screen that should bring tears of happiness to the eyes and throbs of joy to the bosoms of scenario writers through the length, breadth and thickness of the land.

According to Mr. Dwan, the original story, that has been crowded out of the running for the screen by the craze for published stories, is about to be invited to come in and eat at the first table again.

"Producers and directors are coming to see that the original story by a writer who understands the technique of the screen and knows how to tell a story in action, is the best possible material for the screen," said Mr. Dwan. "The further we go with books, the more we realize this.

Characters Sometimes Disappoint.

"The written story is designed to make its appeal with words. The writer builds up situations with words, syllables, paragraphs, that can not be reproduced in action on the screen. Many books are made into films because of the reputation of the author and the circulation of the book under the assumption that all of those who read the book will want to see it in pictures.

"This assumption is true, but there is another angle; many of the people who go to the theatre and look at a screened version of a book are disappointed. No two people visualize the action and characters of a book alike; each reader has his own mental picture of the hero, the heroine and the other characters; each sees them walking through the story according to his own ideas.

The Director's Viewpoint.

"The director may be just as much of a master at story telling in action as the author of the book was a master of words, but he cannot think as all of the people who read the book think, and he cannot please them all. With all of this taken into consideration, it is plain that the original story is not only the best but the safest to use. The original story is coming into its own—the demand is growing all the time."

I also had a very interesting conversation with Colin Campbell about books. We talked about "The Spoilers," "The Crisis" and "The Corsican Brothers," recently completed with Dustin Farnum, and other notable printed stories that Mr. Campbell has transferred to the screen.

"Some books are very fine screen material," said Mr. Campbell, in the course of the conversation, "and some are very poor. The craze for big names is responsible for poor books finding their way to the films. Some producers look no further than the frontispiece of a book; the name of the writer and the number of copies sold is the only thing that seems to interest them.

Reminds of Barn-Storming Troupe.

"The book that makes a big sensation with its readers may depend on language alone. Its big situations may fall to pieces when the upholstering of phraseology is taken away; there may be nothing anywhere in the book that can be translated into action, yet directors are expected to make films from them that will duplicate the popularity of the printed story.

"The way some of these stories look when they reach the screen reminds me of a barn-storming troupe that played a town in Montana many years ago when 'Trilby' was all the rage in the East. Several people in the town wanted to see 'Trilby.' The play was not in the troupe's repertory, but they put it on just the same, by playing 'East Lynne' with Lady Isobel barefooted, black whiskers on the heavy, and Little Willie, the child, as Little Billy. Some screen adaptations of books that are bought solely for the writer's name resemble the books they are supposed to interpret about as much as 'East Lynne' resembles 'Trilby.'"

Jasper Praises Butler's Film.

The next day I met John Jasper, of the Hollywood studios.

"What's new?" asked Jack.

"Nothing," I said. "What's new with you?"

"Nothing," said Jack. Then he took it back. "Yes, there is something new. I just looked at one of the best pictures I've seen in a long time—Dave Butler's new film, 'Sitting on the World.' It's a pippin, a regular pippin, full of sympathetic home town atmosphere, regular salt of the earth stuff. Made from a magazine story called 'Sitting on the World.' If Dave makes a few more films like that he'll be sitting on the world."

"What do you think about the original story versus book or magazine story controversy that seems to be agitating the bosoms of the colony?" I asked.

"The story itself is everything," said Jasper, "no matter who writes it. People don't go to the theatre to look at the writer's name on the main title, they want a story. Give them a story of heart interest and humanity, and they don't care whether the most celebrated writer in the world or just plain John Smith was its author.

They Want the Heart Punch.

"I can tell you this, however, the people want more stories about regular folks and average human beings than they are getting. The story that pleases the people is the tender simple stuff that arouses their sympathies.

"I was talking to a chap that is in the song record business not long ago. He was telling me how much it cost to put a song over. 'I suppose you make a lot of money out of the highly advertised stuff,' I said. 'We do and we don't,' he said. 'We bring out a song and spend a small fortune on it, advertise it, plug it until we make it go, and by the time it's on its feet we are plugging on another and the first one is almost forgotten. Few of them live long. Here's the kind of stuff that advertises itself, pays the rent and keeps the wolf from the door.' He took a record out of the case and showed it to me. It was 'Silver Threads Among the Gold.'

"The heart punch is the strongest punch a picture can have, and the easiest and simplest to put over. People remember the scene in a film that brought tears to their eyes long after the big fight is forgotten. 'Silver Threads Among the Gold,' 'Home Sweet Home'—that's the kind of stuff the people want. If producers would put a little more of the punch of humanity and simplicity into their films they would please more people and have films in their vaults that would pay rent and keep the roof patched after some of the big smashes are scrapped."

Hodkinson Denies Statement.

W. W. Hodkinson makes emphatic denial of a statement printed in a recent issue of one of the trade papers. The statement was to the effect that the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, two forthcoming Glaum and Bosworth productions. Mr. Hodkinson said the statement was utterly without any foundation. "I cannot make it too emphatic," said Mr. Hodkinson, "that no such state of affairs exists. The two forthcoming Glaum and Bosworth releases will be handled by this organization."

Clara Kimball Young Is Now Making "Mid-Channel," Pinero Stage Success

IN selecting the players to support Clara Kimball Young in "Mid-Channel," Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's play, Director General Harry Garson has chosen what is virtually an all star cast. This action was deemed advisable in view of the difficult characterizations in the Pinero play and the necessity for their accurate and artistic portrayal.

Besides Clara Kimball Young, the star cast includes J. Frank Glendon, Edward M. Kimball, Bertram Grassby, Katherine Griffith, Eileen Robinson and Helene Sullivan.

J. Frank Glendon will appear in the role of Theodore Blundell, the "choleric husband" of the Pinero play. Mr. Glendon was born in Choteau, Mont., and was educated at the Montana Wesleyan University. Starting his career in pictures in the Vitagraph Company, his rise was rapid. He has co-starred with Hedda Nova, Gladys Leslie and others. His well known screen successes are "Wooing of Princess Pat," "Woman in the Web," "The Changing Woman," "By the World Forgot," "The Dawn of Understanding," "The Wishing Ring Man" and many others.

Father Plays with Star.

In the part of the Honorable Peter Mottram will be seen that veteran actor and artist of the screen, Edward M. Kimball, father of Clara Kimball Young. Mr. Kimball began his stage career many years ago, appearing in "The Stranger," "A Girl from Rector's" and "What Happened to Mary," and also played for many years in stock. He commenced his screen career with Vitagraph, then with Paragon, and in later years appeared in "The Common Law," "Magda," "The Mad Lover," Eyes of Youth" and "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives."

Mr. Kimball will be seen in a prominent role in "For the Soul of Rafael," Equity's third Clara Kimball Young production, which will be released in the East within a short period, now in its second week of its world's premiere at Grauman's Theatre, Los Angeles.

Bertram Grassby, now appearing in support of Miss Young in "For the Soul of Rafael," has been given the role of Leonard Ferris, the "tame robin" of Pinero fame. Mr. Grassby is an actor of note and should be seen to excellent advantage in the Pinero character.

Miss Young Has Barrymore Part.

In the role of Zoe Blundell, the part which Ethel Barrymore characterized in the stage production, Clara Kimball Young should present one of the greatest characters of her many successes. "Mid-Channel" is said to be peculiarly built for just such a figure as Miss Young, and has been declared by critics as unsurpassed for splendor, pathos and complexity of construction, the many ramifying points of dramatic interest and for general poignancy of plot and theme.

A sumptuous production will characterize the staging of "Mid-Channel," and work is now well under way at the Garson studios, Los Angeles. According to present arrangements being made by Harry Garson, who is personally directing the production, many of the beautiful scenes of "Mid-Channel" will be taken at Santa Barbara.

"Mid-Channel" will constitute the final of the first series of four of Equity's Clara Kimball Young specials, of which "For the Soul of Rafael" is to be the third, and "The Forbidden Woman" and "Eyes of Youth" were first and second.

May 24 Will See Formal Opening of Fox's New Studio; Freedom of Plant to Visitors

THE date for the official opening of the William Fox studio and administration building on West Fifty-fifth street is at last announced. Arrangements are now under way for throwing wide the doors on May 24—an occasion which will be attended by an impressive ceremony with many notable guests present.

The building, which fronts on Tenth avenue, extending from Fifty-fifth street to Fifty-sixth street, has been completed to all outward appearance, since February 1, when the entire Fox Film Corporation, with the exception of the New York Exchange offices, moved from its old quarters in West Forty-sixth street to the big building. Since that date all eastern business of the corporation has been transacted under its roof.

During this time, however, workmen have been steadily employed in completing those sections of the building which are devoted to the dark rooms, developing rooms, printing rooms and raw-stock vaults. The restaurant, also, has been delayed owing to the inability of the manufacturers to furnish suitable equipment. These departments are now nearing completion and will be running on schedule for the official opening of the building.

Achieves His Aim.

In this building, William Fox has achieved his greatest aim in linking up every department of his organization in proper relation to its neghbors and thus establishing the smoothest possible order of production. From the accessible receiving and shipping department on the ground floor, opening directly upon the street, the arrangements have been so studied as to leave nothing to be desired.

With the perfection of equipment, including every latest modern improvement in the photographic branch of the business, Fox Film Corporation will be enabled to execute each phase of motion picture production within the walls of the building.

For the opening of the building William Fox has planned an invitation affair at which many notables will be present. A novel program of entertainment is being arranged, and the entire place, from the subbasement to the studio or top floor, will be thrown wide open to the visitors.

A Complete Program.

A notworthy feature of this new Fox building is the fact that there is not one elevator within its walls.

As the building stands today, complete in practically every detail, there is 150,000 square feet of floor space.

The program arranged by the committee calls for the opening ceremonies at one o'clock. There will be addresses by a trio of prominent men of affairs, music by a full band, and the place will be decorated colorfully to suit the occasion.

In the evening of the same day the piece de resistance will be served on the big stage—the grand ball. For this purpose the full stage will be cleared between the time the last afternoon guests leave and the opening of the building for the ball. The entire stage will be redecorated to represent a big ballroom, where the evening's guests will dance to the music of a fifty-two-piece orchestra which will supplant the band of the afternoon.

Change Title of Goldwyn Picture.

The Irvin S. Cobb story and play, "Boys Will Be Boys," will be called "Peep O'Day" in the screen version, soon to be placed in production at the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's studios in Culver City. The change of title was decided upon by Vice-President Abraham Lehr.

Polly Moran Film Ready.

The second of the Marion H. Kohn series of two-reel Polly Moran comedies is now ready for release. It is entitled "A Scrambled Romance," and the star appears as a country girl in love with a city chap. This is said to provide Polly Moran with excellent chances to display her slap-stick type of comedy. The first, "The Ragged Road to Romance," has just been released, and the third, "The Society Bugs," is well under way.

Great Success Reported by Aywon Company with Series of Rex Ray Five-Reel Westerns

THE report coming from Nathan Hirsch, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, relative to the success he is having with the series of five-reel western dramas starring Rex Ray, and which were specially made for the Aywon company, seems to indicate that there was a big market for such pictures.

The features are meeting with great success, says Mr. Hirsch, and already a great deal of territory has been sold, the series of Rex Ray western photodramas being released on the state rights plan, while bids for the remaining territory are being considered, with every prospect that the entire country will be sold in a very short time.

Lesser Buys Rights.

Sol Lesser, the well-known exhibitor and state rights man, has purchased the California, Nevada and Arizona territory. Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia have been sold to the Empire Film Distributing Company. The Lyric Film and Supply Company, of Terre Haute, has purchased the rights for Indiana, Utah and Colorado, and the New Mexico territory was sold to the Arrow Film Company, of Denver. Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia are controlled by the Penn Film Service. The Dooley Film Exchange, of Syracuse, has bought the rights for upper New York State, while Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory will be controlled by Aywon.

First Three Ready.

The first three of the series of Rex Ray western photodramas have already been completed. These are "The Unknown Ranger," "Dangerous Trails" and "The Border Raiders." State rights men and exhibitors who have seen these pictures declare them to be unusually good western dramas that are sure to interest theatregoers wherever they are shown.

Screen Crafts President Coming East on Important Business for Company

PRESIDENT and General Manager H. M. Lawson, of the newly formed Screen Crafts Inc., located at Culver City, Cal., expects to visit New York soon to negotiate release contracts and discuss plans with the New York headquarters of his company regarding the launching of a big exploitation campaign. He will also confer with well-known screen artists, whom he plans to bring back to the California studios.

Mr. Lawson states it is the plan of his organization to make its studios one of the leading producing centres on the West Coast, and will soon have four or possibly five companies engaged in production there. At present there are two companies working; one headed by Robert McKim and Rhea Mitchell is making a seven-reel metaphysical story, "The Great Physician," under the direction of Chadwick Ayres, while the other, headed by Bumps Adams, is making two-reel athletic comedies.

Several new stages are in the process of erection at the studio and will be ready soon. It is expected that "The Great Physician" will be ready in about ninety days and will be the first of three productions of the same general character to be made within a year.

Each of Two Indiana Theatres to Run Entire "Lost City" Serial in One Week

FLATTERING reports regarding the business done and excellent bookings secured by the various exchanges handling "The Lost City" serial, made by W. N. Selig and featuring Juanita Hansen, continue to be received at the headquarters in New York of Warner Brothers, who are distributing this serial.

For example, J. L. Friedman, of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, reports unusual bookings of the entire fifteen episodes for the Victory Theatre, Kokomo, Ind., for the week of June 5, and the same for the Starland Theatre, Anderson, Ind., for the week of June 26. Five episodes are used the first three days, five the next two and five the last two days.

Radin Pictures Announces Completion of Johnny Dooley Five-Reel Comedy

JOHNNY DOOLEY'S newest creation, "Skinning Skinners," a five-act farce comedy, has been completed and is ready for immediate release to state right buyers of the country through Radin Pictures, which controls the world's distribution rights of the Dooley Comedies.

Dooley made his bow to screen fans some little time ago in a series of two-reel comedies, and the instant success of these laugh producers, due to the personal efforts of the Ziegfeld star and the insistent demand for a feature of longer length, prompted his managers to make the five-part feature just completed.

"Skinning Skinners" was written especially for Johnny Dooley and suits his particular style of humor to a nicety. It gives him a chance to bring into play that individuality which has become identified with the Dooley type of comedy so well-known to followers of the speaking stage, and which recently scored with the patrons of the motion picture.

William Nigh, whose production of James W. Gerard's story, "My Four Years in Germany," was proclaimed a most successful picture, and whose name is prominently identified with many other film triumphs, directed the filming of "Skinning Skinners" under the personal supervision of Jack Schulze.

Dooley is ably assisted in the enactment of "Skinning Skinners" by a competent cast of artists headed by Maurine Powers, Lillian Hall and Dan Mason. A bevy of beautiful girls, selected for their charm and ability to intelligently portray the work assigned to them, adds materially to the finished product.

C. B. Price Sells Canadian Rights for Darkfeather and Billie Rhodes Films

C. B. PRICE has just returned from a several weeks' trip to important cities of Canada, during which he disposed of the Canadian rights to the series of Mona Darkfeather Indian Dramas, distributed by his company, C. B. Price Company, Inc., to Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd. This company also purchased the Canadian rights from Mr. Price to "His Pajama Girl," starring Billie Rhodes.

Rights on the series of Mona Darkfeather films have also been sold to Fontanelle Feature Film Company for Iowa and Nebraska, and to S. T. Stephens Distributing Corporation, of New Orleans, for Louisiana and Mississippi.

Mr. Price reports that he found a very receptive market for American films in Canada.

A. Samuels, of Atlanta, Pays Visit to New York

Adolph Samuels, president of the Southeastern Pictures Corporation, is at present in New York securing picture rights for his territory. He has already purchased from Canyon Pictures Corporation the "Vanishing Trails" serial, for North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi and the series of two-reel Franklyn Farnum westerns for Louisiana and Mississippi.

Mr. Samuels is not only prominent as a distributor, but as an exhibitor as well, as the companies with which he is connected operate a chain of Alamo theatres in Atlanta, Newman, Griffiin and Valdosta, Ga., as well as several houses in Macon, Ga., including the Grand, the leading house for the presentation of stage plays. He is also president of the Empire Investment Company of Macon.

Completion of Second Jans Film Announced

The second Jans Pictures production, "Woman's Business," starring Olive Tell, and directed by B. A. Rolfe, is now complete and will be released June 1. The picture is an adaptation of Chas. Belmont Davis' novel, "Nothing a Year."

The first Jans picture, "Love Without Question," in which Miss Tell is also starred, has been booked by the Hatch Photoplay Service in both the Modern and Beacon theatres in Boston, two houses which are said not to have shown a state right picture for some time. This picture was backed by an unusual exploitation campaign, which resulted in packed houses.

Radin Reports Sale.

The K. & R. Film Exchange of Atlanta, Georgia, have contracted with Radin Pictures for "The Weakly Indigestion," the single part burlesque news reel. A. Lincoln Miller, the California humorist, is producing "The Weakly Indigestion" on a weekly basis, with a cast of prominent comedians, making a complete series of fifty-two releases.

Among Busy Film Exchangemen

Warner Building, Buffalo's New Film Center, Is Open

HENRY W. KAHN and his Metro staff are now installed in their new offices in the Warner Building, Franklin street, just above Chippewa. This building, which has just been completed, is one of the finest exchanges in the country.

In addition to Metro it will house Universal, United, Vitagraph and Republic. Universal will have half of the second and third floors. Metro has half of the second floor. World and Vitagraph split the ground floor.

Mr. Kahn personally planned the layout of his office and the result is excellent. Booker, bookkeeper, cashier, manager's office and clerks occupy the front part of the office, and a completely stocked service department, including a big vault, takes up the back part of the office. A section of the exchange has been set aside for the use of exhibitors. Features of this room is a desk, where managers may fix up their bookings and a window leading into the service department.

Building Conveniently Equipped.

An attendant attached to the service department has a desk at this window. He is ready to do anything needed by the exhibitor.

Attractive indirect lighting is used, although sunlight floods the entire exchange during the day. It is expected that the other exchanges will be equally well equipped.

The exchange building fills a long-felt want in Buffalo film circles. Across the street from the Warner building the new exchange structure to be occupied by Famous Players-Lasky and Realart is fast nearing completion, and it is hoped to open this building close to June 1.

Zimmerman Out for Himself.

Fred W. Zimmerman has resigned as sales manager of Gardiner Pictures, Inc., and is continuing in the film game on his own hook. He will have office space at the Realart office. Mr. Zimmerman will handle the Clara Kimball Young productions, Olive Tell in "Love Without Question," and Ann Luther and Claire Whitney in "Why Women Sin." He will add to this program from time to time.

G. H. Quigley With Pioneer.

"Buck" Taylor, sometimes known as C. A., New York State manager for Pioneer, has engaged Gilbert H. Quigley, formerly with Pathe as city sales man. "Buck" reports closing contracts for first run in downtown houses for "The Lost City," in Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse. "Buck" is enthusiastic over the outlook for the Pioneer product. Bob Murphy is remaining as Buffalo manager at the local office.

Dan Savage Opens Offices.

Dan Savage, veteran filmist, has opened offices in the old Metro exchange in the Palace Theatre building, where he is directing the policies of the Empire States Film Company in this territory. Dan is well known throughout the State. He is a former manager of the old General Film office here, William L .Sherry Feature Film Exchange, Famous Players-Lasky and First National.

A. W. Young to Leave Gardiner.

A. W. Young, booker at Gardiner Pictures, Inc., will resign his position with this independent distributor on May 22. It is reported that will go with another local independent office soon after this date.

Clayton Sheehan Home Again.

Clayton Sheehan, district manager for the Fox Film corporation, with headquarters in Buffalo, has returned home for the present. He reports that the local office made a very creditable showing in the recent national sales drive and that the picture industry is enjoying a real boom all through the country. Mr. Sheehan announces that Fox is contemplating opening a branch office in Albany to serve that rapidly growing territory.

Seattle

Romance in Realart.

Paul Rodney Aust, assitant manager of the Seattle Realart office, married, on May 4, Georgina Utsch, who had been in the employ of Realart for some months.

Convention Delegates Coming.

Albert W. Eden, manager of Realart, left on May 8 for New York to attend the managers' convention.

Carl Stearn, Seattle Metro manager, is also leaving for New York on May 20 to attend a convention.

Salesmen Shifting Around.

Marshall Taylor, formerly manager of the Clemmer Theatre and later of the Rivoli Theatre in Portland, has been employed as a salesman for National out of Seattle.

W. M. Hughart has left Republic to join the sales force of Greater Features.

Herbert S. Meyer, Northwest manager for Republic, has returned to Seattle from Portland, where he spent several days last week.

Kansas City

Pierson Visits Pathe Exchange.

E. R. Pierson visited the Pathe Exchange here the first of the week, and renewed old acquaintances in the other exchanges. Mr. Pierson reports that conditions in Kansas City and surrounding territory, as far as the Pathe is concerned, were never so good, and the features the Pathe will put out in July will go far toward sustaining their name among the foremost film exchanges.

Concerning "Live Wire" Field Man.

Robertson-Cole boast of having the best salesman in the Middle West. That is not his only distinction, they say he looks as if he might be Lew Cody's brother, and in order to carry out the reputation of the family he goes out into small, "dead" towns and sells more than any other man in the territory. This salesman's name is J. M. Fieldman.

Some Personal Mention.

Select and Republic have a new salesman for the territory of Missouri and Kansas—J. A. Morrison by name.

P. A. Block is moving to Cleveland and William Truoy, formerly with World and Republic, has assumed Mr. Block's responsibilities with Goldwyn.

Worn out by his "fillum" duties, W. H. Bell, of Equitable, had a nervous breakdown a month ago and is just now returning to work.

Shifting K. C.'s Exchange Hub.

There is a general upheaval in the moving picture exchanges in Kansas City. The new Film Exchange Building at Seventeenth and Main is housing perhaps ten exchanges and under difficulties. Fresh paint, cement, bare walls and stepping blocks complete the atmosphere of "newness."

Most of the exchanges have just moved within the past week, but Universal have the record of being the first to move to the new building. They have been moved since February 1, and W. L. Rubert, assistant manager, reports that office business has increased enormously since they have been in the new building.

Many Firms in New Home.

First National gave up their offices in the Ozark Building May 1 for more pleasant quarters in the Film Exchange. Vitagraph moved from the Boley Building and are having a hard time trying to convince the telephone companies that the order ought to be rushed. Crescent moved from the Gloyd Building. Select and Republic could not allow the other exchanges to get ahead of them, so they may be found, working under great difficulties, at the Film Exchange.

Ready Now for Business.

Robertson-Cole moved from the Gloyd Building to the first floor of the Ozark Building—the place formerly occupied by Metro; while Metro have gone to the eleventh floor of the new Film Exchanges. Standard have moved into the old Vitagraph offices in the Boley Building. After this grand upheaval of "movie" exchanges, outlooks for business look especially bright.

Pittsburgh

Exploitationist Changes Firms.

Elmer E. Butler, for the past ten months exploitationist for the Pittsburgh Goldwyn Exchange, has resigned and accepted a similar berth with the Famous Players-Lasky. Mr. Rutter formerly occupied a similar position with the Paramount, after which he served the First National exchange for a few months, and then went with Goldwyn last July.

Taking on First National.

The First National Exhibitors Exchange is now selling franchises to exhibitors, under the new plan that has been in preparation for the past year. Paul Jones, of the Rowland Theatre, Wilkinsburg, secured the first sub-franchise, the second going to Claude Robinson, of the Robinson-Grand, Clarksburg, W. Va., and the third to Melvin Bros., of Bradford, Pa.

Film Man Back in Harness.

Homer Burress, well known among film folks, having formerly been connected with the Cross Exchange, Pittsburgh, Pa., is back in town again, after having spent two years in the oil fields of Texas and other Southern States. Homer expects to get back into the film game here again.

Apex Exchange Doing Well.

Sam Shaw, of the Apex Exchange, is as busy as ever these days, and is getting a large number of contracts every day. He says the Franklyn Farnum two-reel Westerns especially are going over big, and that they are also popular among the exhibitors.

Hodkinson Film Going Big.

Joe Bloom, of the Pittsburgh Hodkinson Exchange, is breaking all records in booking "Sex," the big feature starring Louise Glaum, many one- and two-week runs having been contracted for.

Projection Room a Theatre.

Advertising and Exploitation

If You Work a Stunt at All, Plan to Get the Most You Can Out of the Idea

HALFWAY measures never get full-sized results. If you plan to work a stunt keep on planning until you get the most you can from the idea. Don't stop with the initial thought. Keep on thinking until you have raised the crude scheme to the level of an accomplishment.

Look at the two pictures from the Alhambra, Milwaukee, shown on this page. Probably very few managers can afford to redecorate the lobby to give an Egyption interior effect. It costs money and it requires the services of a trained staff of decorators and painters. On the other hand, even the small town man can do as well with the window shown, and at small cost.

Figured It Out.

The Alhambra management did not merely make a cut-out of Miss Dean and ask permission to stick it in a window. It used thought. In the first place, the cut-out was made so that it stood high enough to permit cushions to be placed at the base without obscuring Miss Dean's feet. This permitted the use of cushions to build up the idea and to blend the display into the rugs, which were borrowed and placed on the floor of the window to carry out the design. Then a veil was added, not the yashmak, for Sari was the unveiled virgin, but enough chiffon to make a headdress and attract attention.

Then the store was encouraged to get up a special candy called the "Egyptian Dip," which was announced as a Priscilla Dean special. The total value of the window was more than ten times the value of a cut-out stuck in precisely the same place with no further attention.

It Pays to Care.

It pays to take pains with displays. It pays to work on an idea until nothing more can be gotten from it. It pays to stick on the job until it is done.

If you cannot do better than to get a cut-out into a window, then use the cut-out alone, but it is seldom that you cannot persuade the owner of the window that he can get more out of it by working in with you. That is where the window angle comes in. The merchant lets the cut-out into the window in the first place because he thinks it will attract attention to his wares. Help him to make his window so attractive that not only you, but he, will get added value from the display. It will help you to get windows.

What Have You Done?

With the print paper shortage growing worse, a condition has been reached exceeding even the war-time stringency. Managers who have depended upon throwaways are no longer able to get these out, and even the newspaper advertiser is apt to find that he cannot command the space for which he is willing to pay.

If you have found some way to get exploitation without the use of white paper, shoot along your idea. If you have anything new in banners, perambulators, window dressing, lobby displays or any similar exploitation, give it for the benefit of the craft.

As an Example.

Suppose that you wanted to get this cut-out into the window of the electric light company. If you merely put it in, they will stick it in the back part of the window, where some people will see it, but not all. But suppose you punched a hole in the cut-out so that Sari appeared to be holding a saucepan on an electric cooker? You would have people lined up two deep. It does not take deep thought to get such an idea, yet it will mean real money to you in tickets bought, which otherwise would not be sold.

In the same way a jeweler could cover Sari with gems, an optician fit her with glasses or a lorgnette, a shoemaker provide her with slippers, a book store with literature, a grocer with a can of some special brand, or a furnishing store could drape her with men's neck scarves. Any one of those stunts would make talk.

Make It Stick.

Get out of the rut and try to do something in a new fashion. It does not always require a radical departure from the usual to get the idea over. You need only get enough out of the ordinary to be different to attract, but the more radical your departure, the more power your stunt is apt to possess.

There are few new stunts, but you can work the old ideas over. Thirty years ago John R. Rogers used to pull a fake fight on some conspicuous roof, dropping a banner when the interest of the crowd in the street below was at its height. He advertised Minnie Palmer, who was the original "My Sweetheart." The same idea was used lately for "Down on the Farm," with the motion picture camera instead of a fight for an attractor. The idea was the same, and it works as well today as it did thirty odd years ago.

Try and think up something.

Don't just run a house. Do something. The "Prodigal Son" never would have won the fatted calf by just sticking around. He went out and did something even if he did come back on his uppers. It's better to be a prodigal son than a mummy at any rate.

In the days of Herod there were 357,841 dancers between the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf. We remember Salome because she got her name in the papers. It pays to advertise.

Arabic Architecture and Turkish Delight Blend Well. Stamboul Virgins Like Both.

How the Alhambra, Milwaukee, dressed its lobby to get a Turkish interior for the Universal-Jewel production. At the right is shown an unusually good window hook-up with a candy store with a dressed up cutout. The larger sign advertises "The Virgin of Stamboul" and the smaller a special sale of Egyptian Dips, making the window one hundred per cent. Oriental and even more effective.

Hook-up with Rugs for An Artistic Display

Armenians, Excited About Terrible Turk, Helped Put Over "Virgin of Stamboul"

BECAUSE there is an Armenian population in Bloomington, Ill., the first gun in the exploitation of "The Virgin of Stamboul" was in the form of a mysterious warning against the "Terrible Turk" about to invade Bloomington. This was an eight or ten line reader on the editorial page of the local paper, repeated in varying form.

It worked so well that before the New Chatterton management was ready to go on to the next stage of announcement, it was necessary to assure the alarmed Armenians that the Terrible Turk was a film character and not an emissary of the Sulton making a final clean-up. It started the drive a little ahead of the time planned, but it did not hurt the campaign.

Plenty of Space.

A seven-day advance campaign was launched with from quarter to three-quarter pages, and the Friday before the opening the announcement was made that all school children who reported at the theatre Saturday afternoon would be given a free ride over the street car system.

Some two hundred children turned up and as the chartered car could contain only 150, two sections were formed. The youngsters were each given some noisemaker and told to go to it. They did. For three hours the bannered car run over the various routes and the kids were not still a single moment. Between cowbells, rattlers, horns and other noisemakers, no one was left in ignorance as to the nature of next week's attraction at the New Chatterton.

Two Terrible Turks.

And on that same Friday came not one, but two, Terrible Turks; natives who had been hired to put over a prologue. Their contract stipulated that they were to wear native dress at all times, so they arrived in fez and burnous, and when they were not working in the theatre they were out on the streets helping to advertise the production.

These two men were used in the prologue planned by Hall and Griffin, the managers. A cyclorama drop showed a desert scene with a sunrise effect and a caravan in silhouette across the background, while one of the natives recited the fathah or confession of faith, in the Arabic.

This prayer, by the way, can be worked into a prologue very nicely. In the English it runs:

In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful!

Praise be to God, Lord of the Worlds! The compassionate, the merciful! King on the day of reckoning! Thee only do we worship, and to Thee do we cry for help! Guide Thou us on the straight path. The path of those to whom Thou hast been gracious, with whom Thou art not angry, and who go not astray. Amen.

Cleaned Up a Record.

As a result of the drive the attraction played to 9,700 people on the week. This may not sound large to owners of thousand seat houses, but it was something of an accomplishment in Bloomington, and it reopened the newly decorated house with a smash. It was just one advertising slam after another and it kept the people stirred up.

Cross Eyes No Hoodo for Dayton's "Down on the Farm"

JUST because Ben Turpin can see a pretty girl's ankles and face simultaneously, Paul Gray, of the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, figured out that cross-eyed men ought to make a good attractor for "Down on the Farm," in which the dual-glanced Mr. Turpin has a more or less prominent part. The local occulist gave him some addresses and he got four of the crossest eyed men in Dayton and used them on the street the week before the showing, bringing them into the house for the overture at each performance, while he flashed a stage banner for the coming attraction. Paul says they did more than anything else to get the attention of the crowd, and he says they attracted unusual attention on the street. It might be worth while trying, even if your feature does not have a cross-eyed hero.

As Snug as a Bug in a Rug Is This Still for "The Virgin of Stamboul."
One of the most tasteful window displays we have ever shown, arranged for the Universal-Jewel by the Colonial, Seattle.

How About a Revival of the Old Wall Paper Throwaway

SOME years ago there was a run on throwaways printed on wall paper, generally with the statement that the paper had been scraped from the walls of the theatre to make more room for the crowds. With print paper at fifteen cents or more, it might be a good scheme to revive the idea and certainly it will do for one attempt. You can probably get your stock from the discarded sample books of the decorators. If not you can get roll paper more cheaply than you can newsprint at the moment, and have it cut to size. The sample books are better because these hold the paper flat and are more easily cut.

"Sex-a-gram" Prize Contest Contemplated by Hodkinson

ALTHOUGH the craze for the "Sex-a-gram" originated by Sig. Schlager for the Louise Glaum production of "Sex" has not put the missing line limerick out of business, the country-wide response has been such that the Hodkinson publicity department is figuring out a prize contest for the best "Sex Equation."

The original "Sex-a-gram" reads:

S—stands for sorrow and suffering, the heritage of all women.

E—stands for experience which refines the soul of all women.

X—is the great unknown in the fascinating game of life.

Many theatres have offered small prizes for the best adaptation of the idea and it has worked from Chicago, where it was used by the Rose and Alcazar, down to the small towns. Now the proud authors are sending in their effusions to Miss Glaum, and if Sig had not switched jobs in the meantime he probably would have had his salary raised.

Rugs and Colored Picture Made Unusual Window Show

BEAUTY in a window display is one of the chief requirements, and it will not be easy to beat this display arranged by the Colonial Theatre, Seattle, for "The Virgin of Stamboul." The window of a furniture store was hung with Oriental rugs, one of which was draped over the corner of an oil painting for the feature, the Arabic coloring blending nicely with the soft colors of the tapestries. A lamp of hammered brass broke the space on the right hand and gave balance to the display, and two framed announcement cards, one for the theatre and one for the store, were the only other objects in the window. It would be difficult to imagine a more effective layout.

The entire front of the Columbia was made over to suggest Arabic architecture and the ushers and box office girls were in Turkish dress, as was the ticket taker.

The Man Who Gives U p Never Gets Anywhere

If Helping the Navy Will Help You, Too, Why Not Jump in and Boost for the Navy?

DETROIT has been pretty close to bedrock in advertising of late on account of the shortage in print paper. The papers are dropping from thirty to sixty columns of advertising a day because they cannot find space for it, and when any one goes in and asks for a couple of pages the advertising manager calles the office boy to put ice on the visitor's head and sends for the doctor.

And just on that account the billboards are holding an overflow meeting and a cute little three sheet board not more than five or six miles from the busines district only costs ten dollars a week plus posting charges. The landlords of apartment houses are not alone in their class. The bill posters are buying gold lined paste cans for their help just to keep down their excess profits taxes.

That's the stage setting for the story of how they put over "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" in the home of the fordcar and other troubles.

Eli Got There.

It was up to Eli M. Orowitz, exploitation man for Famous Players, to do something, for the Barrymore play was booked for a week at the Broadway-Strand. There seemed to be one hope. In the heart of the city the big Hotel Ponchartrain was being pulled down and a fence had been built to keep the passers-by from being beaned with bricks. It was a nice two-block fence, with nothing on it but "Post No Bills," and Mr. Orowitz spoke persuasively to the officials of the wrecking company.

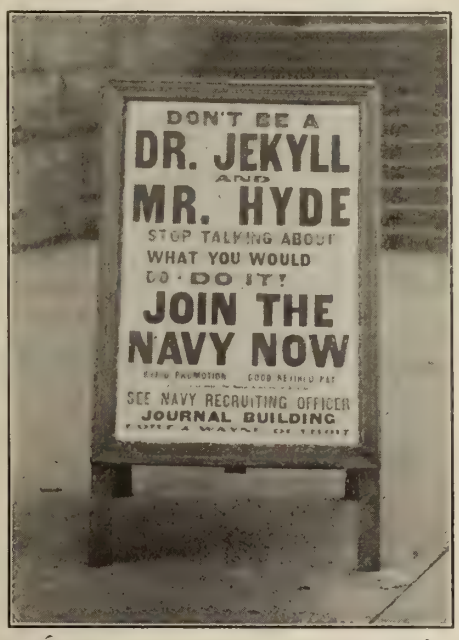
He told them it would improve the looks of the bare boards to put up a couple of artistic six sheets for about $250 per six sheet.

That was a big advance over current rates, but the fence was at a switching and transfer point for the trolleys and most people were bound to see the posters if they could be put up.

The wrecking company did not care about art or Art, five hundred dollars or anything. They made it a rule never to permit posting on their boardings, and they were not going to begin now.

They were sorry for Mr. Orowitz, but would he please close the door softly as he went out and not weep on the front steps, because that looked bad.

Orowitz did not weep. Instead he gave a gurgle of joy as he stood on the steps and let his eyes behold a poster urging the automobile makers to join the navy. There was a board right in front of the City Hall and a lot more in extra special preferred positions.



This Board Stood for a Week in Front of City Hall.

Orowitz hopped a taxi and sought Lieut. Commander Winzell, in charge of recruiting in that district. Would the Commander like some new posters for the boards. The Commander thought he would. Orowitz suggested the copy shown in the illustration, but with the preface "John Barrymore says!"

The Commander didn't know about Barrymore. He realized the value to the navy of the play hook-up, for he knew that the timely appeal beat any regulation poster all hollow. He was willing, but he was afraid that some of the owners of the positions might object, so fifty posters were printed without the Barrymore name and seventy-five were done name and all.

As soon as the posters were done they were carried out and pasted by the men of the recruiting service, and some of them went up on that Ponchartrain hoarding space alongside the "Post No Bills" stencil and there was no one to slip five hundred dollars to the wrecking company this time, either.

And Everywhere.

And a couple of bills went up right in front of the City Hall, and more went in places where they would have jailed an ordinary bill poster for even being discovered in the vicinity. And, better still, there was no competing advertising to crowd in and partly spoil the effect. It was fifty per cent. for the navy, twenty-five per cent. for Jekyll and the rest for Hyde.

Then Orowitz went on to carry out his share of the contract. He had 18,000 throwaways printed with the same copy and distributed wherever men were to be found, including barber shops, pool rooms, certain other places which no longer exist and the mills and factories at the noon hour.

And there was the additional offer to present a pass to the wife, mother or sweetheart of every man who enlisted.

The copy was also repeated in the newspapers for two days, and the net result was an improvement in the number of enlistments and the putting over of the story; so both Commander Winzell and Orowitz were pleased.

There were 125 posters distributed at a cost of $25. The posting charges alone would have amounted to a hundred times that sum, provided that the bill posting companies could have found locations as good. The navy did not care what the theatre got out of it, so long as they got what they wanted.

This is just one sample of the way the navy works. They are on the alert for opportunities, and if you are within reaching distance of a recruiting station you will find they will help you if you will help them. Try it.

"Post No Bills," Says the Sign. "Rot," Said the Marines.

This big fence is in the business heart of Detroit. When the exploitation man offered to pay $250 apiece for two six-sheets, the contractor just laughed, but the Famous Players' exploitation man joined the Navy recruiting drive and got plenty of display.

"Luck of the Irish" Went to Local Jeweler on His Pearls

HOOKING up with the pearl necklace in "The Luck of the Irish," Leo Kraus, an Indianapolis jeweler, made business for himself and the Ohio theatre on the week. The chief show window was filled with pearl necklaces at various prices and ornamented with stills mounted on cards and lettered in white. There was also the offer of a free ticket to every purchaser. In his advertising he hooked in with: "Last night I saw a moving picture at the Ohio Theatre called 'The Luck of the Irish.' It held my interest more than most of them. A young fellow, Bill Grogan, fell in love with a beautiful girl. There was romance, love, a villain, excitement and a string of pearls—and speaking of pearls—" Then the advertising ran on to tell of the Kraus pearls and their many attractions. Many plays offer similar chances for a hook-up. Why not try to see what you can do?

The Old Stunts Still Work When Worked Well

Good Old Essay Contest Stands Repeat This Time for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

USING the time-tried essay contest for "Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde" put over the Paramount production to big business in Waco, Texas. The stunt was worked by Leslie F. Wheelan, of the Paramount Dallas office, for the Liberty Theatre, in conjunction with the Times-Herald.

The point was made that this story called for unusual acting on the part of Mr. Barrymore, and the essay was to deal with the acting and not the story angle, enlarging upon the opportunities the dual role afforded.

Three judges were appointed, a representative of the local University, one from the High School and a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

Got Plenty of Space.

The stunt was nominally the idea of the newspaper and not the theatre, and this, of course, necessitated the running of a daily story in the news columns. With an apparent hook-up, the house took a page at a special price, with a cross page fours, a three column ad from the press book, a scene cut and the remainder ostensibly readers about the play, used with the intention of aiding the contestants.

Because the newspaper had taken up the production the merchants were glad to come in line with window displays, and the book stores used the booming to get up a general run on Stevenson's works.

All of this helped to direct attention to the play, and long before the reels arrived the entire town was talking about the production and the star. The newspaper co-operation lifted the event out of the ordinary run and served to give emphasis to the opening, which is always the big value in any newspaper co-operation.

Three season tickets were the prizes, and the resultant publicity was worth many times their cost, not counting the ease with which other advertising schemes could be worked, nor the reduced cost of the full page flash.

Try This Out.

Essay contests and similar stunts work all right for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," but if you want to entertain your patrons announce an impersonation contest. Hang up prizes for the best transformations from Jekyll to Hyde done in full view of the audience. Make the prize big enough to encourage to boys to make a real effort at costume and make-up.

Have a "Miss Jekyll and Mrs. Hyde" contest for the girls and offer equal prizes in this class.

Jazz up the stunt with queer light effects and thrilly music and spread it over a week, with five elimination trials and the finals.

But don't queer the effect of the drama by running it with the showing of the film. Keep it for the following week, with a lighter feature, which may need help more. That will give you ten days or two weeks for preliminary advertising and a week for the run.

Don't say it can't be done. Do it.

Mr. Wheelan knew the value of the newspaper hook-up and by looking after it himself he put it over more easily than the local management could; which is one of the chief arguments in favor of the exchange publicity man. He stamps the house enterprise with the newspaper, just as the newspaper connection helps the theatre. There was nothing particularly new to the essay contest, but the fact that he came down from Dallas to offer the suggestion swelled up the idea in the editorial mind.

Jockeys Must Be High Toned in England.

According to the Mt. Vernon version they ride to the course in a tallo-ho in "The Sporting Duchess." The bettors walk. Anyhow, it served to advertise this Vitagraph feature.

Played to Big Business Without Mention of House

ADVERTISING for a couple of weeks without mention of his house brought the crowds to the William Penn Theatre, Chester, Pa., which is managed by a man auspiciously named Proffitt.

Mr. Proffitt figured that he was going to need jazz to get over such a jazzy offering as "Down on the Farm" and he had used street parades and the other familiar devices until the patrons only laughed a little, so he started to figure something new.

Cards That Merchants Used.

He determined upon a campaign through the stores and he had a lot of 11 by 14 cards printed up with the title, "Down on the Farm" in a red diamond. Above he printed such lines as "Overalls for," "Apples Fresh From," "Buy Your Car Here For" and twenty-five other slogans, mostly covering articles of country produce. There was no mention of any theatre.

These were distributed to the grocery stores, dairies, clothing stores and automobile agencies and the entire section blossomed out with them. He also supplied grocers with six-pound bags printed up with a scene from the play. Paper also appeared in profusion with no mention of the theatre and not until two days before the opening was the house hooked up to all of this advertising.

Made Bid for Newsboys.

Then Mr. Proffitt offered six dollars in cash, split three ways, as a daily prize to the newsboy who sold the most papers and yelled "Down on the Farm" the loudest, and those kids surely did yell.

And the money came rolling in along with capacity crowds.

Two Old and Tried Stunts Make Business for "Jinx"

MABEL NORMAND in "Jinx" can still clean up even though the release date suggests last year's calendar. Lately it was put over strong at the Alhambra, Toledo, where Manager Horator used two old stunts to the same good results as ever.

Shaded with Two-Page Hook-up.

The first boost was a double page hook-up with local merchants and prizes for the misspelled words. The second was the offer for free tickets for black cats. Nothing is said as to what became of the cats, but cat pelts brings a pretty price in the market these days, and perhaps the stunt was a clean-up in a double sense.

Tallyho Useful to Exploit "The Sporting Duchess"

NOT many towns boast four-in-hand coaches, but where such can be found, they are more than useful in exploiting the racing atmosphere of the Vitagraph production of "The Sporting Duchess" with Alice Joyce. The cut shows a drag used by Proctor's Theatre, Mt. Vernon, N. Y., for this picture, but the coach was loaded with jockeys instead of with race-goers. It would be more effective and more in keeping with the spirit of the production to load the coach with fashionably dressed men and women in summery costumes. Where a coach cannot be had a light wagon can be provided with benches and the body masked in with banners with almost equally good effect. The bright costumes and the four horses are the important points.

Try An Old Car for a Lobby Attraction

Talk of Circus Advertising; How Does This Stunt Appeal?

ADVERTISED like a circus is a common phrase to denote an intensive exploitation, but Will D. Harris, of the Grand, Columbus, Ohio, changed it to "advertised by a circus," when he recently played "Down on the Farm."

In every town the programmer for a circus is supposed to get a contract for the banner privilege from some local concern, but Mr. Harris fell on the neck of the contractor and wept for joy. Even the hardened circus man was stunned when Mr. Harris explained what he wanted, but he revived in time to sign the papers.

The show was the John Robinson outfit and when it hit town Harris was there with banners to burn. There were blankets for the elephants and banners for the dens and band chariots. There were banners above the entrances and draped around the rings. Banners floated from the "high traps" and on the horse tent.

Each clown was tipped to call out, "I'll see 'Down on the Farm' next Monday at the Grand," as he paraded and in the ring, and if the contortionist did not spell out the letters with her supple body it was only because there was not time to learn the new stunt.

And after the show went on Mr. Harris used all the banners all over town, but there was no real need for it. The only persons who had not seen the announcements were blind and they had been told about it.

A Window Is Not Merely a Piece of Glass.

How a department store in Regina, Sask., made a really artistic display for "The Sporting Duchess," with a Vitagraph six-sheet cutout of Alice Joyce for the centerpiece.

Smashed Auto Silent Ad for De Mille's Late Production

PUTTING over "Why Change Your Wife?" for the LaFayette Theatre, Fayetteville, N. C., Ben Laskin, Paramount exploitation man at Charlotte, went over the familiar jumps. He started an essay contest in the local paper, worked a thousand teaser postals, got circulars in laundry and department store packages and used paper and window cards wherever he could.

But that didn't satisfy him. He wanted something he could photograph and send to the papers and all of those stunts were old. He found his idea back of a garage when he ran across a battered car. There was not much left of it, but it held together while they dragged it in front of the theatre. There a wheel was removed and a sign placed on the windshield reading, "Smashed up in a hurry to buy tickets for 'Why Change Your Wife?' at the Lafayette Theatre. Tonight, 25-50 cents."

Even a burst tire will pull a crowd. The smashed car got half the town and Laskin got his photograph to send to the folks in the home office and the home office rejoiced.

Even a Wrecked Car Has Its Exploitation Uses.

This ghost of what had once been a road scorcher was anchored in front of the La Fayette Theatre, Fayetteville, N. C. The stunt was devised by Ben Laskin, Paramount exploitation man at Charlotte.

Six Sheet Cutout Served as Basis for Window Show

USING a cut-out from a six sheet for "The Sporting Duchess" as the basis for a window display brought a pretty effect in a department store window in Regina. Backing the cut-out with a painted background framed in a lattice gave the keynote to the display, which included two dresses, riding gear and spring styles for sporting duchesses. The floral effects were contributed by the millinery department and served to give the proper touch of color to this advertisement for this Vitagraph special with Alice Joyce. This display shows unusual taste in handling and is worthy of study.

Used Unsigned Cartoons for "Down on the Farm"

USING the press book cartoons without house signature and trusting to the nearby press story to locate the house, is something new in theatrical advertising.

Sennett's "Down on the Farm" was played simultaneously at the Alhambra and Stillman theatres, Cleveland. After the first shot, the house advertisement was a two fours cartoon rudely hand lettered, "Dear Bill! The way we do it, 'Down on the Farm.' Mabel." This was run absolutely without house signature or additional lettering of any sort but was hooked up with a nearby press story. Other forms of display were used to connect the houses with the title, and the resultant business seems to be the answer to this unusual form of just once booming.

One good strong phrase may sell more than a page of bunk. Make it short and crisp.

Another Good Idea from S. Barrett McCormick

McCormick Uses Chalktalk Faces for "Inferior Sex"

POSSIBLY because his cartoons for "A Virtuous Vamp" were so well received, S. Barret McCormick uses caricature sketches to put over Mildred Harris Chaplin in "The Inferior Sex." But he trusts more to his text. The copy for the space on the left reads: There are all kinds of men and women, from the flapper to the strong-jawed Jane, and from the putty husband to the caveman, that swings a stone axe. And from the time that Adam said "She tempted me" clear down until last Wednesday, when South Carolina came through with the suffrage ratification there has been a lot of arguing as to which is the inferior sex, and it probably isn't over yet—which makes this such an interesting picture." This gets the interest and he backs it up with the question, "Who's the boss in your home? Is the man's dominant physical strength dulled by the subtle power of woman?" If you want to find a better pulling line than that you must go where there is neither marriage nor giving in marriage. A lot of men and some women would pay more than the cost of a Circle admission to find out who is the real boss.

Makes Others Pay For His Big Advertising Campaigns

SENDING in a batch of stuff for criticism, H. P. Watts, of the Strand, Omaha, writes:

You will find among them a full page on "Double Speed." This ad cost me —nothing—which I consider most reasonable. 'Twas auto week, and after being properly coaxed (?) I consented to allow two cars to be placed on the stage, providing a full page ad would be furnished me gratis, I to thank the dealers, in the ad, for the loan of the cars.

This is the second time I have pulled this stunt, the other was a double truck on "The Roaring Road," with the same restrictions.

Next week I have "Excuse My Dust," and am promised a page for myself in the event that I can be convinced—and I think that after thinking the matter over that I will consent. Would you?

And then he forgets to send in the page in question, but the idea is there, and he does send in a particularly good page for "On with the Dance," the back of which is spattered with hook-up advertisements of dancing schools, cabarets and dance halls. Just for good measure there are a couple of phonograph stores, and they all hook in with the title. Mr. Watts has the right idea. There is no use paying when h: can get free space, and that leaves that much more money in the advertising appropriation for something which may need it more. Mr. Watt runs all the way from a two-inch single to a full page and from specially drawn designs to press book adaptations. He has a good idea in a reverse strip down the centre of a three or four column space, which makes a pretty advertisement in the original and sometimes comes out well in the paper. His artist handles solid blacks better than most and does not make the mistake of using small lettering; which is the chief, though by no means the only, objection to the reverse cut.

More of Mr. Smith's Odd Ideas for Exploitation

SOMETHING new in a layout is this four sixes from "Mister Smith's" Theatre, Indianapolis, a little sister to the Circle. The design is a triple arch of Arabic design, with the left hand openings given the play and the right hand enclosing the type announcement. Point is given the design by the top line, which describes the house as "a little Oriental jewel box." Oddity of advertisement is apparent throughout the space. It will be noted that "Mister Smith's Four Singing Sons" form a part of the program instead of the usual announcement of a quartet, and the "Mister Smith," with the mister always spelled out, always dominates the space. It seems to give a personality to a larger extent than would be realized, and it is the only "Mister" theatre in the country, if not in the world. The design, with its characteristic arch effect, would make a good, permanent form of advertisement.

Takes Better Part of Page to Keep the Others Away

SINCE the Imperial, California and Portola, San Francisco, combined, they have been looking for a way to hog the advertising space, and the best thing they have struck yet, and the best page from the Call, in which the three houses take the greater portion of the space. Instead of separate advertisements or a big combination space, they take the better part of a page for three distinct displays, the essential of which is that each house, rising somewhat higher than the next to the left, staggers the display so that each signature gets its full value, as would not be the case were the three to be evenly spaced, with the signatures on a line. It requires a lot of space, but it is so ingenious a use of the space that it probably pays. And if you will study this layout you will note that the three displays are so arranged that nothing in one advertisement detracts from its neighbors. The staggered idea is work throughout, and not merely in the signatures.

Fought Circus Type with Open Spaces with Profit

BECAUSE the opposition started to sling big, black type advertisements John L. Johnston, of the Finkelstein and Ruben houses, Minneapolis and St. Paul, has gone in stronger than ever for open spacing, with the result that he has more than held his own. Johnston used to load his space down with drawn designs, but for some time he has specialized in white spaces, varying his treatments, yet always getting an attractive result. This is something impossible with heavy designs. You are more limited in your choice of styles and once you have used up your limited repertoire you have nothing to fall back upon. With white space the case is different.

You are not trusting to the mass effect of black. You have an infinite variety and your displays do not look all the same.

Try These Stunts Which Have Worked for Others

These three and five eighteens have been given a considerable reduction, but they will suggest the general style. The copy is not essential. The big fact is that they faded black designs and are still available when the black has lost its novelty. Now and then it is permissible to use the largest and blackest letters you can find, but for a steady appeal the white space is far more lasting in its effect. Mr. Johnston has become very expert in handling open displays, as these samples show.

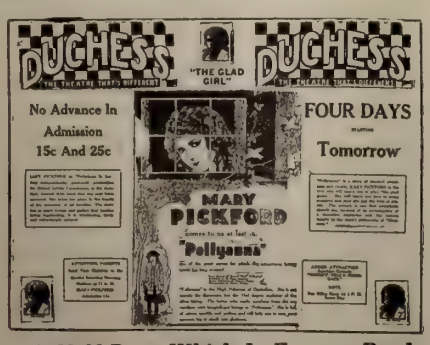
Paneled Statements Are Safest for Large Spaces

WHERE it is desired to use a number of statements in a single large space it is best to panel in each statement that the attention may be held to that space while it is being read. The panel does for the large layout what the column rule does for the news pages. It serves as a boundary for the eye. When you pick up a page or half page jammed with type, you do not know just where to begin and are apt to pass something over. Most times it is the entire text you pass up, barring the title. This half page from the Duchess, Warren, Ohio, built up on a press book cut, shows an intelligent planning of the space, though we think the house signature is no better than it might be. Still it serves the purpose of attracting attention, and that is the main point.



A Half Page Which Is Easy to Read.

After the signature has been introduced, the form of the device is sufficient. It does not matter, save to the transient, that the lettering is difficult to read. By blocking off the different banks the eye can pick up any particular one and read that without interruption. It could do the same thing without the paneling, but the suggestion is not there, so the effect is lost. The left hand bank tells of the star and that on the right of the story, while the lower boxes announce a special morning matinee and the other program features. It is not a good example of typography, but it is a good advertisement, which is the more important. A selling advertisement is to be preferred to a pretty display, though a pretty announcement which sells is a still better combination.

Makes Clever Lobby Fronts from Posters and Cutouts

PAINTED lobby front doesn't worry A. Levy, of the Victory Theatre, Dallas, Texas. He picks a couple of likely looking three sheets and builds them up with cutouts from other lithographic material and gets a better effect than the local sign painter could possibly give him. With a foundation of oilcloth stretched on a frame or built in sections it would be possible to work with patent kalsomines for a ground color and get a striking effect, which could be washed off after the showing and used repeatedly for special attractions. This display is rather elaborate, but could be much simplified and still hold its attraction, though the more elaborate the work the stronger the impression is apt to be, so it is well to go to as much trouble as you can.

Keeps Underline Out of Way

HANDLING the underline in a big display is always a nice problem. We like the way it has been handled in this cross page sevens. The current attraction has all the room it requires, and gets the full value of a full cross page, yet by titling it there is plenty of room for an underline in a space many would consider ample for a full display. Sometimes a little planning will work wonders in handling space, but the tendency is to slap in straight lines and let it go at that. This is simple, but sometimes it is costly and a layout should not be dropped until you are positive that you can do no more with your space allotment.

Shamrock Advertisement Is Good "Just Once" Novelty

USING a background of shamrocks for a four fifteens proved to be a winner around St. Patrick's Day, though it would be appropriate enough at any time for such a title as "The Luck of the Irish." Only the top part of the display is shown, which does not give the full effect of the layout, but suggests the idea. Small flags could be used for the Fourth of July; turkeys with spread tails for Thanksgiving, and Santa Clauses for Christmas with equally good results. The text is all in mortises, cut into the design and framed. This idea is a "just once," but it is a capital idea for one time only.

Selznick Schedules One Special and Four Star Pictures for May and June Release

PROMINENT in the list of releases scheduled for May and the first week in June by the Selznick Pictures Corporation is one special and four star productions. The four starring vehicles are "The Man Who Lost Himself," with William Faversham, which was released on May 3; "The Flapper," with Olive Thomas, released on May 10; "Whispers," starring Elaine Hammerstein, to be released on May 17; "The Valley of Doubt," a special production scheduled for release on May 24, and "The Desperate Hero," with Owen Moore, to be released on June 7.

William Faversham, "The Man Who Lost Himself," his first Selznick picture, is said to give a splendid dual characterization as Victor Jones, an American commercial agent stranded in London, and as the Earl of Rochester, known as one of the worst bounders in London.

Supporting Mr. Faversham are Hedda Hopper, who plays the leading feminine role as Teresa, Countess of Rochester; Violet Reed, Radcliffe Steele, Claude Payton, Mathilda Brundage, Emily Fitzrey and Downing Clarke.

The story was written by the well-known English author, H. Devere Stacpoole. George D. Baker directed.

Olive Thomas, in "The Flapper," is credited with giving a capital performance as Ginger King, a sixteen year old boarding girl. Included in the supporting cast are Arthur Houseman, the well-known heavy; Warren Cook, Louise Lindreth, Charles Craig, Theodore Westman, Jr., William P. Culton, Katherine Johnston, Maury Stewart and Raymond Hewitt.

"The Flapper" is from the pen of Frances Marion. Alan Crosland directed the production.

Elaine Hammerstein, in "Whispers," gives a delightful performance in the role of Daphne Morton, who has lived all her life with an aunt, a social pretender, always hard up and always hoping to bring about a rich marriage for her niece who is, really, only a means to an end.

In the supporting cast are Matt Moore, brother of Tom and Owen Moore, who plays the part of the reporter; Phillips Tead, Charles Girard, Ida Darling, Bernard Randall, Warren Cook, Templar Saxe, Maud Hill, Dorothy Worth, George Stevens and Edgar Hudson.

"Whispers," written by Marcus V. Connolly, was adapted for the screen by George Proctor. William P. S. Earle directed.

The special production, "The Valley of Doubt," is announced as a virile story of the Far North from the pen of the well-known playwright, Willard Mack.

Th leading masculine role is played by Thurston Hall, ably supported by Arline Pretty, Anna Lehr, Jack Costello, Bobby Agnew and John Ardizoni. R. Cecil Smith adapted Mr. Mack's story for the screen. Burton George directed.

Owen Moore, in "The Desperate Hero," scheduled for release on June 7, is said to portray the role of a young newspaper man who tries to maintain a certain amount of "front" in order to get a better price for his only inheritance, an oil lease.

Supporting Mr. Moore are Gloria Hope, who plays the leading feminine role; Nell Craig, former Essanay star, back on the screen after an absence of two years; Henry Miller, Jr., Emmett King and Charles Arling.

"The Desperate Hero," written by Edgar Franklin, was adapted for the screen by Zelda Crosby. Wesley Ruggles directed.

Pearson Finds Showmen Determined to Fight Producer-Exhibitor Competition

AFTER a tour of three weeks during which he visited the principal key cities in the central part of the country, Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has returned to the home office filled with enthusiasm for future prospects and deeply impressed by the evidence everywhere displayed of the determination of exhibitors to resist producer-exhibitor competition. The Chicago meeting of independent exhibitors has aroused exhibitors, he states, and everywhere he went the hope was expressed that something in the way of an effective protest would be arranged.

Mr. Pearson points out that economic conditions of the moment are decidedly in favor of the exhibitors and most of them realize this fact. They are all enjoying box office receipts such as they have never had before, and the building situation and, more particularly, the reluctance of bankers in the matter of loans, is keeping down the construction of theatres to a minimum.

"Wherever I went," Mr. Pearson said, "there seemed to be earnest hopes that something might come of the independent movement thereby exhibitor co-operation really would voice an effective protest against what picture men term unwarranted coercion by threatened competition.

"There still remain many thousands of independent exhibitors, so many of whom are giving the independent producer and distributor splendid support that plenty of good production should be available. Every exhibitor seemed exceptionally pleased to learn of Pathe's plans to spend whatever was necessary in promoting productions which, together with the Associated Exhibitors' ambitious plans and arrangements will provide one dependable source of independent open market supply.

"There was also considerable evidence that the public of the entire central part of the country was seriously heeding the political economist and the government's advice not to indulge in extravagant luxuries, foibles and reckless speculation. Thus, while the bankers are successfully preventing speculation on a large scale, the public's co-operation is providing ample funds for all necessities besides rapid accumulation that will positively insure that section against any reaction that our economist friends, looking upon the East alone, seem to think inevitable. On the other hand, the banker's reluctance in the matter of loans is playing right into the hands of some exhibitors who woud have competition just as sure as building money was available. Of course, such unusual attendance at the theatres has tempted the projection of many new theatres that must now wait for money with which to build them.

"Every branch visited found the entire sales force in high glee at the splendid business they were enjoying, practically all having broken all previous records in March and some again in April."

CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

JAMES S. McQUADE

Will Soon Begin Work on Film Exchange Building

MR. WELCH, owner of the ground lease of the new film exchange building, at Kinzie, and North Clark street, has announced that work will begin on that long discussed structure not later than June 1, and that it will be completed by May 1, 1921.

Final arrangements were recently concluded with Mr. Welch by Secretary Elliott, of the N. A. M. P. I., and Mr. Butler, representing the Eastman Kodak Company, the 100,000 square feet of space, which was fixed as the minimum rental space by the owners of the property before construction begins, having been agreed upon.

The site on Kinzie and North Clark street is the ideal spot in Chicago for such a building. It is central and easily accessible from all parts of the city, either by surface or elevated railways.

It seems a great pity, for the convenience of exhibitors, that a few film concerns are contemplating the building of their own exchange offices on Wabash avenue, near Ninth street. Time-saving will become more and more important as the industry advances, and the time required for the booking of films would assuredly be reduced to the minimum, if all Chicago exchanges were housed in one great fireproof building.

There has been a lack of concerted action on the part of the heads of several film concerns in this matter, and this has created uncertainty in the minds of others, equally important in the industry, as to whether such a building would ever be constructed. This, naturally, has led to the policy of self-protection; but now—when the Kinzie and North Clark street building is assured, is it not the part of wisdom and economy to join hands and conduct the distribution of films in Chicago under the same roof?

Auditorium Will Present Grand Opera with Movies

MOTION pictures are to be shown in conjunction with performances of grand opera at the Auditorium, beginning Sunday, May 23, under the management of Andreas Dippel, formerly director of the Chicago Grand Opera Company. This marks the introduction of a distinctly new combination in the way of Chicago entertainment.

Clara Kimball Young's latest Equity feature, "For the Soul of Rafael," which has not been exhibited yet in Chicago, has been chosen as the opening screen attraction. This has been booked, through Greater Stars Productions, for a run of four weeks.

Admission prices will be considerably higher than are now charged in any Chicago picture theatre. Seats will range from fifty cents to one dollar, and an additional fifty cents will be charged for reserving seats which are bought in advance. In regard to imposing this fee, Mr. Dippel said:

"I am satisfied that many movie fans would gladly pay the extra fifty cents for the sake of not being obliged to stand in line at the box office. This policy has been adopted and is a success at the State-Lake, where vaudeville and pictures are presented.

"Although this opera-movie entertainment is new in Chicago," Mr. Dippel continued, "we are fairly confident that it will prove popular, as it has been tried in New York, at the Capitol Theatre. If it is a success, I expect to continue these shows all through the summer."

Three hours is the scheduled length of the entire program. First, the opera or operetta, as the case may be, will be presented, and afterward the feature. Between acts, shorter film subjects, such as educationals, scenics and comedies will be exhibited. Mr. Dippel will make a special effort to book appropriate travel pictures, which have much the same atmosphere as the opera. A new musical production will be introduced each week.

Beginning May 23, Franz Lehar's romantic operetta, "Gypsy Love," will be the attraction. Arthur Albro, tenor lead, and the original New York cast have been engaged. A symphony orchestra will provide the music for the pictures.

"The Hope Diamond Mystery" Serial Is Nearing Completion

LUCIEN C. WHEELER, treasurer of Kosmik Films, Inc., has been supervising the production of "The Hope Diamond Mystery" at Uunversal City, for the past eight weeks for his company. This serial is pronounced exceptionally good, both from an artistic and a commercial standpoint. It will be completed in the near future.

May Yohe wrote the story, Stuart Paton is the director and Grace Darmond is the star. The cast, which is said to be exceptionally strong, includes George Cheseboro, Carmen Phillips, Harry Carter, William Marion, Boris Karloff and others. May Yohe, the author, also appears in it.

A strong adjunct of the serial, from a publicity standpoint, is an arrangement with the Hearst newspapers to publish a double-truck fiction version of the story by Miss Yohe, simultaneously with the release of the successive episodes.

The officers of Kosmik Films, Inc., are George Kleine, president; John Larsen, vice-president; L. C. Wheeler, treasurer, and B. C. Hardcastle, secretary.

Hallmark's Division Manager Reports Record Collections

D. M. VANDAWALKER, JR., division manager for Hallmark in midwestern territory, with headquarters in the Mallers Building, states that collections for the week ending May 1 broke the Chicago office records, and that new bookings are being made in proportion to the collections.

He also informed the writer that notwithstanding the handicap of being obliged to handle firms as far away as Evanston, not a single shipment has been missed. This has been accomplished by means of truck service, two trucks being kept at work, twenty-four hours daily, between the various railway depots and the shipping room in Evanston.

The old Doll Van office, at 207 South Wabash avenue, fortunately, is still at Mr. Vandawalker's service, and it is being used as the distributing center for city exhibitors and for the inspection of films, which is done by a night crew.

The Burton Holmes studio, in Evanston, was leased by Mr. Vandawalker just in the nick of time as film storage headquarters for the Hallmark product, and not a single hitch has occurred in the shipments of films to out-of-town exhibitors. Mr. Vandawalker is also handling the old Triangle product under the Hallmark name.

Semon Comedies Gaining Steadily in Popularity

FRED C. AIKEN, Vitagraph's Chicago manager, recently contracted for twenty-five 24-sheet stands in Milwaukee for a term of sixty days, beginning June 1. These stands will be devoted solely to the exploitation of Larry Semon in his popular two-reel comedies. This is said to be the most extensive billing yet devoted to any star in the Cream City for a like period.

The Semon comedies have secured great popularity throughout the country and the demand for them is steadily growing. Instances have occurred where these two-reel comedies have been featured in newspaper advertisments, taking precedence of the booked feature on the same program—a very unusual happening.

President A. E. Smith, of Vitagraph, is expected to stop over in Chicago on his return from the Los Angeles studios, about the middle of the present month.

"Woman He Chose" Going Strong.

"The Woman He Chose" closed a successful run at Barbee's Loop Theatre, Saturday, May 1. J. B. Koppel, managing director of that house, says concerning the picture:

"It is with the greatest enthusiasm that we indorse 'The Woman He Chose.' The single thing that impressed Mr. Barbee and myself more than the capacity business was the expressions of appreciation by our patrons as they passed out. It is a great picture. We are pleased beyond words at having selected this production from the many that were offered to us for this open week in our theatre. We held them 'on the walk' for two and a half hours one night, and that tells the whole story."

The Mickey Film Corporation has booked the picture over the entire circuits of Lubliner & Trinz and the Ascher Brothers, for extended runs.

Carl Laemmle Visits Chicago.

Carl Laemmle came in from Universal City last week, making a short stopover before proceeding to New York.

Mr. Laemmle will leave New York July 8 on the steamer Olympic for a European trip and will return some time in October. He will visit the Universal offices in London and in other European cities.

Mr. Laemmle will be accompanied by his children, Rosabel and Julius, and by his brother Louis Laemmle, Mrs. Louis Laemmle and daughter. The Laemmle party, most probably, will also be accompanied by Julius Stern and Mr. and Mrs. Abe Stern.

Advertising for Exhibitors, conducted for Moving Picture World by Epes Winthrop Sargent, was the first department to be established by any trade paper to aid showmen with his publicity problems.

THE THIRD

A murder committed in a motion picture studio; circumstantial evidence points to the guilt of a girl star in that studio; the chief argument of the prosecution is a motion picture film which apparently shows the girl in the act of committing the crime. Certain dangerous men, to serve their own ends, seek to fasten the crime upon the girl, while her own friends do their best to save her.

With such a plot, with such a sterling actor as Warner Oland playing the "heavy," with such a charming star as Eileen Percy and with fast and furious action in every episode, you may depend upon it that this serial is there.

Fire Damages Oriole Theatre.

THE Oriole Theatre, Bernard Vohwinkle, manager, was damaged $3,000 by fire on May 3, which is believed to have been started by a burglar who escaped after a patrolman had trapped him in the building. The policeman said he saw a man hiding in the front vestibule of the theatre early in the morning.

Intruder Probably "Fire Bug."

When the officer started to question him the intruder ran into the theatre, down the main aisle, making his exit by a door at the rear of the stage. The patrolman chased the man but the fugitive escaped.

On returning to the theatre to investigate, the patrolman found the stage in flames. He sounded an alarm, but before the firemen arrived the blaze had spread to other parts of the building. Detectives found that a cash drawer in the box office had been pried open, but no money was stolen.

Extensive improvements have been made in the Strand Theatre, Berkeley, Cal., of which G. E. Thornton is manager. A marquee has been added and the house re-decorated throughout. The Chimes Theatre is now being refitted and plans have been completed for rebuilding the Lorin Theatre and greatly adding to its seating capacity. These houses are owned and conducted by the Beach-Krahn Amusement Co.

Washburn in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" Is Current Paramount Artcraft Release

BRYANT WASHBURN comes back to make things merry in the Paramount Artcraft version of a famous old farce comedy, "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," the release date of which is May 9. Incidentally, in view of the success scored by Washburn in "Too Much Johnson" and "Why Smith Left Home," both adaptations of popular stage farces, his current vehicle was booked for the present week at the Rialto Theatre, New York City.

The authors of "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" were Frank Wyatt and William Morris, both of them actors as well as playwrights, the former being an Englishman who has appeared in support of Henry Irving and other famous stars and the latter an American. Mr. Morris also played a role in the original cast when the play had its premiere at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, February 1, 1905.

Mr. Washburn's role is that of Jack Temple, a young husband who is being pursued by a "vamp" and has the misfortune to be locked for the night with her on the roof of a department store. Jack invents a John Brown, with whom he claims to have spent the night. But his wife is suspicious and sends a telegram to Brown, and by chance there happens to be a real Brown living on the very street that Temple thought was fictitious. Then real complications ensue.

Wanda Hawley Is Featured.

Wanda Hawley, who has the role of Mrs. Temple, is featured, as is Walter Hiers in the role of Frank Fuller. Carmen Phillips plays the siren and clever character roles are interpreted by Sylvia Ashton, Leo White and Anne Schaefer.

James Cruze directed the production, while the adaptation was accomplished by Elmer Harris, author of the musical comedy hits, "So Long Letty" and "Canary Cottage," now a permanent member of the Famous Players-Lasky scenario staff.

Farrar to Produce in East for Associated Exhibitors

WITHIN two weeks Geraldine Farrar will begin work on "The Riddle: Woman," her initial production for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., at the former Thanhouser Studios in New Rochelle. Director Edward Jose at present is busy gathering a staff of such calibre as to insure high class production.

Miss Farrar at present is on a concert tour through the South, and will return to New York within a week.

Realart Broadway Successes Enliven "Lady in the Swing"

THE record for Realart runs at Broadway took a sudden spurt last week when three new productions were booked, jumping the total from nine in a row to twelve. As a result the month of May will see Realart paper plastered over the nearly White Way in a liberal fashion. The young lady in the swing atop the Hermitage Hotel building is scheduled to make a couple of complete loops in celebration of the event.

"Sinners," which was the star boarder at the Capitol Theatre during the week of April 25, was listed in the Realart record books as No. 8. A short time ago "The Stolen Kiss" was on the screen of the Rialto Theatre for a week. It was No. 9. The record remained there until last week when Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, ordered "The Deep Purple," an R. A. Walsh Production presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, for the week of May 2.

Hugo Riesenfeld Interested.

Somebody tipped Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld off that "Miss Hobbs," Wanda Hawley's first Realart picture, was a winner. He walked over to see Lester W. Adler, Realart's New York manager, and took a contract for the production for the Rialto Theatre during the week of June 6. Next a "sold tag" was hung on "Nurse Marjorie," Mary Miles Minter's recent production, and orders were given to have it delivered to either the Rialto or Rivoli theatres on May 3.

"Animated Cartoons" Tells Interesting Secrets of Work

"ANIMATED CARTOONS," by E. G. Lutz, is a book of 261 pages that actually covers the subject which it treats in a satisfactory manner. It serves a twofold purpose in that it both satisfies the curiosity of those who have wondered by what magic the clever animated drawings, whose screenings so amused them, are produced as well as indicates to the would-be cartoonist the methods to be employed.

The book is well illustrated with photogravures, sketches and diagrams showing the "how" and "why" of the various processes and operations. So well indeed is the book illustrated that the list of pictures and diagrams fills the greater portion of a six-page index.

The scope of the work is best indicated by reproducing the table of contents which is as follows: the beginning of Animated Drawings, the Genesis of Motion Pictures, Making Animated Cartoons, Further Details on Making Animated Cartoons, On Movement in the Human Figure, Notes on Animal Locomotion, Inanimate Things in Movement, Miscellaneous Matters in Making Animated Screen Pictures, Photography and Other Technical Matters, On Humorous Effects and on Plots and Animated Educational Films and the Future.

The book is published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York City, and the price is $3 net.

Constance Talmadge Secures Hoyt's "A Contented Woman"

FROM the Arthur S. Kane offices comes the news that Charles Ray has just completed the sale in Los Angeles of "A Contented Woman," the second of the famous Hoyt comedies to be disposed of by the First National star. Joseph M. Schenck has acquired the screen rights to this farce-comedy as a vehicle for Constance Talmadge. Mr. Ray disposed of "A Texas Steer" a week ago to Samuel E. Rork.

Proving himself to be as good a business man as an artist, Mr. Ray shortly after embarking upon independent production negotiated for the screen rights to fourteen of the most famous of Charles H. Hoyt's dramatic works for the uses of his producing company. Although the purchase price of these stage plays was highly Mr. Ray's judgment as to their screen value is being borne out by the deals he has just completed with two big film men of the West Coast.

Vitagraph Head Returns East.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has arrived in New York City after a six-months' visit to the West Coast, where he spent much of his time at Hollywood, Cal., where Vitagraph's western studios are located.

Mr. Smith has made a practice of making two trips each year to the center of motion picture activities in California, planning to remain away from his offices at the Brooklyn studios for about six weeks on each trip, but his latest visit west stretched itself out to six months, during which time Mr. Smith made many changes at the Hollywood studio, greatly increasing its facilities and production.

"Courage of Marge O'Doone" Is Booking Fast Everywhere

ALTHOUGH the finished prints of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," Vitagraph's special production of the popular novel by James Oliver Curwood, have been reaching the various Vitagraph exchanges only during the past few days, heavy sales are being made in all parts of the country and Canada.

Within the past week additional bookings have been recorded as far south as Texas and as far west as California, with the Middle West and eastern territory crowding the various branches for prints. One of the most recent bookings was for fifty-seven days in the Proctor theatres in New York city and state and nearby territory, and sixteen days in Poli theatres in New Haven, Hartford, Bridgeport, Waterbury and other cities.

Many Contracts Recorded.

Contracts were just closed in Dallas, Houston, Ft. Worth, El Paso, San Antonio, Waco, Austin, Abilene, Temple, Wichita Falls and Dennison, and from the Detroit exchange came word that contracts had been signed for several of the larger cities in the territory, notably Flint, Saginaw, Kalamazoo, Battle Creek and Lansing.

Wheeler, W. Va.; Butler, Pa.; Providence, R. I.; Springfield and Holyoke, Mass,; Sioux Falls, S. D., are some of the widely separated cities that have contracted for the production within the past few days. These cities, however, do not include the motion picture centres where the various Vitagraph exchanges are located and which made their bookings far in advance.

Clyde Cook Entertains Party of Australians in Hollywood

BEFORE he has had nearly enough time to become acclimated to California weather Clyde Cook, eccentric dancer and comedian, who recently left the New York Hippodrome for Fox Sunshine Comedy work on the coast, has been called upon to enact the dual role of comedian and host of the extensive Sunshine Comedy section of the Fox lot in Hollywood.

During his early career on the stage Clyde Cook established a strong friendship with a number of troopers of the Australian forces who later participated in the war. A party of these men visited Cook at the Fox studios in California during a tour of the United States, and it was a gala occasion. Photographs were taken of the soldiers with several of the Fox stars, including Clyde Cook.

While the directors waited and smiled, Clyde Cook towed his old friends about the studio grounds and through the various departments of the plant, which is one of the largest in California, introduced them to all the Sunshine Widows who form the backgrounds for the Anglo-American comedian in his celluloid comedies, and dined them at the studio restaurant.

Holmes Leaves for Three Months' Tour of Near East, Turkey, Spain and Bohemia

BURTON HOLMES, globe trotter, lecturer and author, whose Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel pictures are recognized as the last work in travel series, will sail from New York on May 19 on another film-gathering voyage. His tentative itinerary calls for a three months' tour of the Near East, Turkey, Spain and part of Bohemia. He will return to this country around the end of August to fulfill a lecture tour which starts early in September.

Mr. Holmes will probably travel first to Cherbourg, proceeding overland to the South of France and from there either to Port Said or Alexandria, Egypt. From one of these ports he will travel directly to Jerusalem where he plans to make an intensive study of the Zionist movement and the agrarian and colonizing plans which are now being consummated in the Holy Land. This will be the prime object of his trip to the Near East, although if conditions are favorable he may make a detour south of Jerusalem covering the ground won by General Allenby in his advance against the Turks.

To Study Land of the Turks.

The completion of his aims in the Holy Land will be the signal for his departure for Constantinople where Mr. Holmes intends to make a study of existing conditions under the new regime, as well as to take a series of interesting pictures depicting present-day life in the land of the former Ottoman empire.

While Jerusalem and Constantinople will be the main objectives of Mr. Holmes' journey, he will also visit Spain, Italy and Switzerland. From either one of the two latter countries he will make a side trip to Prague, Bohemia, in June to take in the "sokol," the national exhibition of 12,000 representatives of the gymnastic societies of the country who annually give a demonstration of calisthenics said to be the most comprehensive in the world.

Owing to uncertain conditions in the zones he is to visit, Mr. Holmes will travel very lightly. His only companions will be Dr. George Earl Roeguel, student and lecturer on political science subjects, and Herford T. Cowling, Mr. Holmes' chief cameraman, who will join the party from Spain where he is just at present turning the crank.

Has Filmed Almost Every Land.

"The ideal which I have in mind for these pictures," says Mr. Holmes, "is a subject that will not be a series of scenes or incidents, but one that can tell a complete story in two reels, maintaining constant interest and mingling beauty of scenery with dramatic interest."

Mr. Holmes, it will be recalled, was one of the first travelers to turn his attention to the film field. He made his first pictures in Europe in 1897 when the motion picture was almost unknown. The following year he took pictures in the Philippines during the insurrection and in 1898 he filmed famous scenes in Hawaii. Since those early days he has been constantly adding to the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel pictures until, at the present time, he has covered practically every known country in one or more releases.

Do not consider it "hokum" when I say that if it were $30 instead of $3 I would just as gladly pay it.

I personally write the majority of the programs for this territory and find the M. P. World indispensable. It's an asset to anybody in the business.

It will not be amiss at this time to thank Walt. Hill for the many pleasant minutes I get with each issue with his "Rambles"; for the exploitation helps of Mr. Sargent, and the new "Clip and Paste." Ye gods! how can you do it for three bucks?

With best wishes for your continued success and trusting you will pardon this noisy effusion of thankfulness, I am

Metro Engages E. J. Ratcliffe for "Love, Honor and Obey"

E. J. RATCLIFFE, who has been engaged to play Holbury, the "heavy," in the S-L all-star production of "Love, Honor and Obey," a picturization by Eugene Walter, of Charles Neville Buck's novel, "The Tyranny of Weakness," at Metro's New York studios, is a veteran of the stage remembered by New Yorkers as a member of Daniel Frohman's stock company at the old Lyceum Theatre in New York.

Mr. Ratcliffe was born in London and went on the stage as a boy. He gave it up to seek his fortune in India, where he worked on a silk plantation until fever drove him back to England. There he returned to the theatre, playing with Mary Anderson. He came to America with her and has been playing here ever since.

His first appearance in pictures was made four years ago in "In the Palace of a King." Since then he has appeared with Ethel Barrymore, Florence Reed, Petrova, Madge Kennedy, Eugene O'Brien, Marguerite Clarke and Norma Talmadge.

The S-L production of "Love, Honor and Obey" will be released by Metro. Wilda Bennett, Claire Whitney, Kenneth Harlan and George Cowl are some of the players in the all-star cast. Leander de Cordova is the director.

Mildred Davis to Continue in Support of Harold Lloyd

MILDRED DAVIS, the young western girl who jumped into fame by her performances opposite Harold Lloyd in his series of $100,000 two-reel comedies distributed by Pathe, has renewed her contract with the Rolin Film Company. This insures her appearance with Lloyd in his second series of two-reelers, the first of which is now under way in the new Rolin studio at Culver City.

Miss Davis made her debut in two-reel comedies with Lloyd in "From Hand to Mouth." She achieved instantaneous success for her youth and beauty, coupled with her ability to portray comedy roles, established her as a leading woman of the first magnitude.

Miss Davis is probably one of the youngest leading women in filmdom, but she has had an extended career, which began with her apearance in one-reel comedies produced by Hal E. Roach, president of the Rolin Film Company.

Cecil B. De Mille Renews Contract with Famous Players-Lasky; Rejects Big Offers

CECIL B. DeMILLE, the noted motion picture director, has signed a contract for five years with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. DeMille, who, for more than five years has been director general and a member of the board of directors of the Paramount organization, and whose old contract is about to expire, made a flying trip from Los Angeles to New York to consider offers from several other organizations. Mr. DeMille, after investigation, decided not to accept the offers.

Leaves for the Coast.

After completing his arrangements, Mr. DeMille left New York at once for Los Angeles to begin work on a new production in which he will introduce to moving picture patrons a new leading woman who, he believes, will outrival Wanda Hawley, Bebe Daniels, Gloria Swanson or any of the other beautiful women who have become famous in Cecil B. DeMille productions.

The announcement of the signing of Mr. DeMille's contract was made by Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"In signing this new contract, Mr. DeMille paid a great tribute to Famous Players-Lasky Corporation," said Mr. Zukor. "He had received offers of immense salaries from actually every other organization of any consequence. He decided to remain with us solely because he felt that in our organization he could produce finer pictures than in any other, and that these pictures would obtain wider distribution and better presentation. He had the entire industry to choose from, and, after thorough investigation, made as a business man as well as a director, selected Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

Goldwyn Buys "The Concert," Leo Ditrichstein's Vehicle

WITH the purchase of "The Concert," in which Leo Ditrichstein made a success some years ago, the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation adds another well known play to its list of future productions. Recently, "The Great Lover" was purchased for picturization by this company, and the addition of the former Ditrichstein success to the list of coming Goldwyn pictures is indicative of the kind of comedy that this company seeks to present on the screen.

"The Concert," in its play form, was an adaptation by Leo Ditrichstein from the German version of Herman Bahr. It was produced at the Belasco Theatre on October 4, 1910, and after running more than a season in New York, played for several years on the road. The play has since been produced by many stock companies.

An interesting sidelight on "The Concert" may be seen in the personnel of the original cast. Supporting the star were Janet Beecher, Jane Grey, Catherine Proctor, Cora Witherspoon and Alice L. Pollock, who has since become well known as a playwright. The men in the cast were William Morris and John W. Cope. The play received the unstinted praise of the critics. One reviewer said that nothing more artistic or more completely satisfying in the way of pure comedy than "The Concert" has been seen on the local boards for many a day.

Eugene Mullin Joins Gibraltar.

Eugene Mullin, former scenario editor of the Vitagraph, Universal and Goldwyn, has associated himself with Arthur F. Beck, president of Gibraltar Pictures, and will signalize his new connection by adapting Gellett Burgess' "The Heart Line," production of which will begin shortly at the Robert Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, recently leased by Gibraltar.

Five High-Class Posters on "Thirtieth Piece of Silver"

THE American Film Company, Inc., announces five high-class posters on "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," starring Margarita Fisher and King Baggot. A colorful one-sheet shows the stars standing with their tennis rackets against the bloom of an apple orchard. It spells summer and romance to the casual passerby—two words that have a mighty appeal nowadays.

One of the three-sheets shows Miss Fisher at the crystal-gazers, depicting the fortune teller with her eyes rivited on the little glass ball, into which the girl also stares with amazement. The idea is in line with the present interest in things occult. Other posters supply a sentimental atmosphere.

All of the posters furnish cut-outs, and several may be combined with other accessories to provide striking effects in the way of lobby trimmings.

Columbia's Summer Scenario Course.

Photoplay making will be taught in a series of courses at the summer session of Columbia University, John J. Coss, the new director, announces. The courses, which will be given by Rowland Patterson, will take up the main problem of presenting a story through the medium of pictures. In the elementary course attention will be paid to the composition of cinematic plot as contrasted with dramatic and narrative plot.

Movie Queens in Overalls Shock Staid Tampa Dames and Worry Humane Society

TAMPA, FLA., May 8.—Accusations of "living a double life" were doubtless mentally hurled at E. W. Blossom, a director of the Hillsborough County Humane Society, a local newspaper man and correspondent for theatrical magazines, a few days ago.

The Humane Society was holding a business session at the De Soto Hotel, Tampa, and was in the midst of a serious discussion when a bevy of "overall girls" from the American Bioscope Company came tripping along. Lorgnettes were hastily adjusted and the girls were given a cold and icy stare.

"Who are those young persons?" one lady asked.

"Girls in overalls? How scandalous!" remarked others in chorus.

Director Blossom, whose back was turned on the scene of criticism, while he was figuring out some bids on printing, turned just in time to be hailed by Virginia Wells, Bioscope's leading lady.

"Ta, ta, Blossom, old top," she said.

There was a moment of silence and then the meeting proceeded with its routine work. Mr. Blossom does not know whether he is still in good standing with the society or not.

As Organizer and Creator of Good Will Irvin Salyerds Is Voted 100 Per Cent.

DURING the past three months, while the New York Legislature has been in session, Albany has become pretty well acquainted with the accomplishments of Irvin Salyerds, of Rochester, perhaps better known among his fellow townsmen and throughout motion picture circles, as "100 per cent. Salyerds."

The nickname well describes the man. As state organizer for the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, he has visited every city, village and almost every hamlet where such a thing as a motion picture show exists, with the result that the state league now contains about 1,000 members and within the next few months will be virtually a 100 per cent. organization.

Mr. Salyerds might well be termed a "motion picture hound." Scenting out the houses that have not become affiliated with the state organization, he is able to explain the advantages of joining in a way that has been productive of magnificent results. Today "100 per cent. Salyerds" has the record of bringing every motion picture house in Rochester first into the local organization and then into the state association; and he was also responsible for Rochester being 100 per cent. strong in supporting the successful fight to gain Sunday shows in the state, and at the state convention in Utica, Rochester was present to a man.

Twenty Years in Business.

Mr. Salyerds has been in the motion picture business for the last twenty years, sixteen of which have been spent in Rochester. When the business was in its infancy he was the first man to take a road show into the Canadian Northwest, turning the crank to the motion picture machine and lecturing at the same time. Those were the days when the film was run off into a sack and it was necessary for Mr. Salyerds to occasionally interrupt his flow of oratory to give the sack a kick in order that it might take in a few more feet of film.

Through Mr. Salyerds' efforts the thirty-two motion picture houses in Syracuse are all members of the state association, while the same holds true of the seventeen in Binghamton, twenty-seven in Rochester, sixty-eight in Buffalo and the seventeen in Albany. During the next few months to come, Mr. Salyerds will line up the smaller places throughout the state.

Here's Where Films Hold Good Influence Over Boy Who "Slugged" Candy Box

As well we know, the screen is flippantly blamed for all sorts of derelictions when youth plays a prank or slips into initial crime. Why not score one for films and presuppose that a photoplay of good morals was being screened when this happened—on April 29, to be exact—in Salt Lake City? Read on:

A letter enclosing 45 cents in silver coins was received through the mail by Manager George E. Carpenter, of the Paramount-Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City, from an unknown person who explained that the money was to cover the cost of candy removed from boxes in the theatre through the use of slugs. The letter appeared to be in the handwriting of a youth, and its tone indicated that he forwarded the money after having become conscience stricken following the realization that the action was tantamount to theft.

The letter accompanying the money read: "My friend and I put slots in your candy boxes today in the show. We have put 45 cents in here to pay for the candy we took. We did not think we were stealing at the time."

There was no signature.

British-Produced Pictures Get Canadian Circulation

ENGLISH film productions, the release of which in Canada is controlled by the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Ltd., of Montreal and London, England, will be marketed in the Dominion as "British Mastercraft Productions" through the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Canadian distributors of Pathe and other pictures. The long-expected release of the first of the "Mastercraft" features actually took place on May 9 from the Montreal, Toronto and St. John offices of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd. The first picture of the new series is "The Ware Case," starring Lang, who was seen recently in Canadian cities in "Mr. Wu" (another British subject) and Violet Hopson. "The Ware Case" is a Broadwest film.

According to the schedule arranged, the Specialty company fixed upon May 16 as the Canadian release date for "His Dearest Possession," a Hepworth picture starring Henry Edwards and Chrissie White. Following this was "The Keeper of the Door," a Stoll picture with Peggy Carlisle and Basil Gill for release on May 23 and May 30 has been fixed for "The Kinsman," another Hepworth attraction in which Miss White and Mr. Edwards are seen.

Boost "Masterpiece" in St. John.

While L. E. Ouimet, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., was spending several days in Vancouver, B. C., to confer with his local manager regarding British Mastercraft pictures before proceeding to California to investigate conditions in the industry there, Mr. J. B. MacKay, manager of the Anglo-Canadian company at Montreal, was a visitor in St. John, N. B., on the East Coast of Canada, to arrange business matters at the St. John office of the Specialty Film Import. While he was in St. John, Mr. MacKay secured whole page space in the St. John Standard for an announcement regarding the new film alliance and for a description of the plays and the stars that will be seen under the "Mastercraft" trademark.

Blondes of All Hues Come in Answer to Eddie Polo Ad

EDDIE POLO, the Universal serial star, reached New York several days ago with a great idea. Having completed his latest serial, "The Vanishing Dagger," he decided he needed a bewitching blonde as heroine in his next chaptered photo thriller.

Wanting a girl with little or no motion picture experience, he concluded that an advertisement in the New York newspapers would bring a few likely applicants. He called a convention of blondes for last Saturday afternoon in the grand ball room of the Hotel Majestic.

Blondes Abound in Profusion.

He was overwhelmed. He had blondes of every shade. Among those present were moving picture aspirants from every known profession, and some with no profession at all. Polo selected several and made tests of them. He has not decided which one he will choose.

The serial star came East to take about 30,000 feet of film for his next serial, the title of which has not yet been selected. It will be a circus serial, and will to a large extent be a screen autobiography of Polo's early life, when he was a circus favorite.

Akron's New Rialto Opens as Crowds Acclaim Needed House

THE Rialto, newest and largest motion picture theatre in Akron, Ohio, was opened to the public May 7, to an immense audience, with hundreds turned away. It is a handsomely appointed house, situated in the outskirts on East Market street, opposite the Goodyear Rubber Company's plant.

It has a balcony, which with the main floor will accommodate over 1,200 people. The opening attraction was Marshall Neilan's "The River's End." The policy will be to show pictures for three-day runs.

Equipped with All Conveniences.

The Rialto has every modern convenience and surely will make a hit with the folks in Akron, which has for a long time needed large theatres. Horwitz & Co., of Cleveland, a concern which operates the Olympia and New Palace theatres, in that city, owns the Rialto.

Manager Horwitz on the opening night was host to a party of associates and city officials. About twenty-five film men traveled from Cleveland.

Lubliner & Trinz Sign for Vitagraphs.

Vitagraph's increased activities in Chicago and its environs, consequent on the ever growing popularity of its productions, has just been further evidenced by the addition of twenty-six first class theatres which will now present Vitagraph stars. Through contracts just signed with Lubliner & Trinz fourteen theatres controlled by them were added to those already showing Vitagraph productions and twelve more were added through a similar contract with the Ascher Brothers, who have now included the Larry Semon comedies in their bookings, and who will exploit and present them as features.

The addition of the twenty-six new theatres is entirely without the Loop district. All of the theatres are within the city limits of Chicago, but many lies in the outlying districts. Many of them play the day and date.

Camera Work Is Completed on Wanda Hawley's "Miss Hobbs"

CAMERA work on "Miss Hobbs," Wanda Hawley's first production as a Realartist, has been completed at the Realart studios in Hollywood and the work of titling and cutting is now being done. The picture will be ready for release, as promised, early in June.

The final scenes for the picture were taken at Carmel, Cal., a famous historical shrine, where Director Donald Crisp took the company for some exterior shots. He is said to have obtained some exceptionally beautiful outdoor scenes.

The cast which supports Miss Hawley is distinguished in its own right. Harrison Ford, the leading man, has appeared in leading roles with many favorite picture stars. Helen Jerome Eddy has a prominent part and is reported to have made an excellent foil for Miss Hawley in the comedy situation of the play.

Walter Hiers, well-known character man, also has a prominent role, and others in the cast include Julianna Johnson, Jack Mulhall, Emily Chichester and Frances Raymond. The settings are reported to present some entirely new and distinct ideas in decoration, in harmony with the leading character in the story.

Rawlinson Makes Pathe Debut as Star of Blackton Picture

HERBERT RAWLINSON, one of the most popular leading men on the screen, makes his debut under the Pathe banner as star of "Passers By," J. Stuart Blackton's screen version of the stage success by C. Haddon Chambers. Mr. Rawlinson was engaged by Mr. Blackton especially for this production, because of the ideal qualifications he possesses for the character of Peter Waverton.

Tom Lewis, Dick Lee and W. J. Ferguson are seen as the male support of Mr. Rawlinson. Tom Lewis portrays "Cabby," the lovable, human London cab driver, who is one of the "passers by" prominent in the Chambers play. Dick Lee has for years been rated with the foremost character actors of stage and screen, while Mr. Ferguson for nearly forty years has held a prominent position in theatricals.

Commodore Blackton, in "Passers By," introduces some new mechanical effects by transferring the fogs of London to the screen in all their natural density.

By Taking Advantage of Exchange Rate, Eleanor Fried Outwitted Wily Chinese

HOW a Yankee girl, trained in the film world, outwitted wily Chinese in their own country, became known recently with the return to her home in New York City of Miss Eleanor L. Fried, who managed the Universal Walcamp serial expedition to the Orient.

Though not far removed from her 'teens, Miss Fried was entrusted with the business management of the expedition, a $200,000 job, and that she made good is very evident from the reports she has turned in to President Carl Laemmle. Under her official care were the nineteen members of the expedition, including Marie Walcamp and her company, and a great quantity of baggage.

Perhaps the most interesting and original of Miss Fried's exploits occurred in China. She found that the American dollar varied in value from 78 to 79 cents up to 85 or 90 cents. She also learned that the hectic exchange rate varied considerably from day to day, sometimes as much as 4 or 5 cents on the dollar.

Waited for Rate to Go Up.

Miss Fried got her Yankee wit to work. When the exchange rates went down, she put off paying bills until the rate went up again, which usually would be in three or four days. When she could not delay payment, she borrowed from the local banks on the strength of her letters of credit, paid her bills, and then reimbursed the banks when the value of the almighty (in America) dollar jumped up again.

By playing this game assiduously Miss Fried saved a considerable sum of money for Universal.

Probably the most vexing experience of the entire trip, which took the party to the Philippines, China, Japan and Hawaii, occurred in the "Land of the Rising Sun." Miss Fried's time was largely taken up with unwinding the volume of red tape of Japanese officialdom and in warning the company against infraction of the many Japanese police regulations.

Difficulties in Japan.

Try as she would, Miss Fried could not secure the thorough co-operation of the Japanese police in clearing a working space every time Director Henry McRae began "shooting" a scene. Thousands of curious Nipponese thronged around, some even crowding so close to the camera as to be able to peer directly into it.

So the stunt of using a dummy camera to collect the crowd was used and for a time proved successful. It was not long, however, before the natives "got wise" to it, though property men, different actors and even Miss Fried acted in front of the dummy camera to allay suspicion, and the old difficulties were encountered again.

Warm Reception in Philippines.

The party had one unpleasant experience in Tokio. A Japanese coolie was hired to play in a scene. His part was merely to demand money of an American who tried to quit his rickshaw without paying. A Japanese policeman protested that in the eyes of the American people it would seem that the coolie was seeking alms of an American. And the Jap stuck to his point, despite Miss Fried's explanation that, if anything, it was the American who appeared to disadvantage for trying to evade payment.

In China the party was warmly welcomed everywhere it went, and some exceptionally fine scenes were secured. This was also the case in the Philippines, where Governor General Harrison put a vessel at the disposal of the company and extended every possible countesy.

How Did She Do It?

Another stunt which Miss Fried put over—though she doesn't know how she did it—was in China, when the party was seeking return passage to the United States. The agent told her she would be lucky to secure passage for her party before August, and that even then it would have to be split up.

"Oh, no," said Miss Fried, "I'm going back right off if I have to swim or paddle a canoe."

The agent laughed at her.

"Now, remember," said Miss Fried, on leaving, "you are to wire me when I can have transportation and I expect to hear from you within two weeks."

Of course she wasn't really severe about it, and within a week the telegram came that her party was booked to sail within another week.

Miss Fried was also of great assistance to Director Henry McRae in obtaining permission to film the Summer Palace, the Winter Palace and other important places in and around Pekin for scenes to be incorporated in "The Dragon's Net." In fact, say Universal officials who have talked with different members of the party, Miss Fried was "just generally on the job."

Dorothy Dalton Back from Charleston.

Despite day after day of rain at Charleston, S. C., during their three weeks' stay there, Harley Knoles and the Dorothy Dalton Company have returned to New York with exquisite shots of the famous Magnolia Gardens and other interesting locations in the old southern town, which they managed to squeeze in between showers, so to speak. With the exception of an accident scene, to be taken in New York, this marks the completion of Miss Dalton's second picture as a star of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It is "This Woman—This Man," adapted from the Avery Hopwood play by Rosina Henley.

Not All the Drama Gets on to the Screen in the Moving Picture Theatre

WE hold no brief for Cincinnati 'Tis unnecessary. Cincinnati will continue to be Cincinnati, and news will be news regardless. Look at this from the "Queen City":

A small cartridge wedged in a seat in the Carrel Theatre, Eastern avenue, exploded when John Sallarger, twenty years old, attempted to sit down.

He sustained a flesh wound in the right leg.

It is surmised that the cartridge fell from the pocket of an overcoat hanging on the rear of the seat and rolled down into the hinge.

The Gem Motion Picture Theatre was the scene of much excitement when May Tribbe and Clemen Mitchell become involved in a dispute.

The woman, who was sent to the General Hospital to have a wound in the neck sewed up, told the police that Mitchell objected to attentions bestowed upon her by another man.

The "other man?" Well, he's in the last reel.

William Fox Engages Emile Chautard to Film Mystical French Detective Tales

ONE of the most important announcements coming from the executive offices of William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, during the present spring season is that just issued regarding the engagement of M. Emile Chautard, the French director. M. Chautard, whose artistic skill in staging many successful screen productions has brought him an international reputation, has been signed by William Fox to produce a series of "super-special" films.

Decision has already been reached by Mr. Fox as to the productions which first will go into work. They will be a series of the detective stories "Fantomas," the collection of fantastic and mystical tales by Pierre Souvestre and Marcel Allain. While small portions of these successful stories are already known to the screen, having been produced in Europe several years ago in a crude manner, it is announced by Mr. Fox that all the material which will be utilized for this series will be brand-new and will number twenty-six stories in all.

Not only has William Fox engaged M. Chautard, but he has further augmented his organization by the addition of the director's entire staff of cameramen, art and technical experts, cutters, property men and assistant directors.

Prominent in the personnel of Mr. Chautard's staff is M. Henri Menessier, well known in the motion picture field as an art and technical expert. One of the most recent productions the success of which depended largely upon the artistic efforts of M. Menessier was "The Red Lantern," a Chinese story of the Boxer rebellion. In this Menessier distinguishd himself as a period and design artist of greatest skill. He will begin at once the designing of the settings for Chautard "Fantomas" stories at the Fox studios in New York City.

Another of the staff which comes with Chautard to the Fox studios is Albert Lena, assistant director and location man, who possesses a keen knowledge of types and who will aid his chief in the general casting of the pictures. Jack Bizeul, chief cameraman of the company, will hace charge of the photographic work of the "Fantomas" productions and will be assisted by Tommy Brannigan, second cameraman of the company.

M. Chautard, it is announced, will write his own continuties for the films, as in the past, and Miss Irene Wheeple, whom he has brought with him to Fox, will continue in her capacity of cutter.

None of the principals for "Fantomas" are announced as yet.

"Me for the City," Says Farmhand on Seeing Movie

THE moving picture is one of the influences working toward a depletion of farm labor, declares Representative Sisson, of Mississippi. The hard life of the farmer does not appeal to his boys and girls, who strike out for the towns at the first opportunity where they are attracted by the white lights, the moving picture shows and good pay."

In a long speech on the floor of the House, Mr. Sisson declared that the high pay offered by some of the newer industries, among them moving pictures, automobiles and professional baseball, are luring the boys from the farms, are causing a great waste of time and money and are making no returns to the country.

"The moving picture is another industry which is affecting our industrial life to a greater extent than at first thought might be apparent," he said. "In the city of Washington, D. C., alone there are about seventy moving picture shows. Thousands of men are engaged in manufacturing the moving picture machines. Still other thousands are engaged in producing the films, and other thousands running the shows in every city, town and village in America.

"Not one of these so engaged produces anything, but each of them is added to the already large list of consumers. It is estimated that about 37,000,000 people daily attend moving picture shows in America. Here again you find not only lost energy, but millions spent for pleasure of at least doubtful value in many cases."

Girls in Utah and Idaho Win Pickford Contest and Photos

THE Mary Pickford Club, of Heber City, Utah, with Miss La Rue Wilson as president, has been adjudged the winner of the Mary Pickford picture contest recently conducted through the photoplay department of the Desert News, Salt Lake City. Miss Pickford, herself, acted as the final judge, and of the five best letters forwarded to her, she selected the one written by Miss Wilson on behalf of the club.

The club will receive at an early date the large autographed art photograph of Miss Pickford, which she offered as the first prize. The other four letters, submitted to Miss Pickford, were so good, however, that she decided to give the author of each a smaller autographed portrait of herself, which she will do through the Desert News.

The four who will receive the smaller portraits are Miss B. Thomas, Sugar City, Idaho; Mrs. Arthur Johnson, Gunnison, Utah; Edna Child (age thirteen years), Murtagh, Idaho; Folke Thedell (age seventeen years), Salt Lake City, Utah. The five contestants who will receive pictures were selected as the authors of the best letters received from scores of readers of the News telling what class of pictures Mary should hereafter appear in.

Prior to his association with Cosmopolitan Productions, Day was a lieutenant in the army but before that he had been for five years a member of Famous Players-Lasky's publicity staff. He leaves Cosmopolitan Productions with the best wsihes of the entire organization.

Major Campbell Is Directing Paramount's "Burglar Proof"

LATEST of stage producers to enter the film world, Major Maurice Campbell is celebrating the early days of May by making his debut as a director for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Major Campbell was assigned to produce "Burglar Proof," a Paramount Artcraft comedy which features Bryant Washburn. Tom Geraghty wrote the scenario.

Although the new director has had over twenty years of stage experience, he felt that he needed a thorough grounding in motion picture technique before entering actively into the work. He has spent the last six months as assistan to Cecil B. De Mille, Donald Crisp and other well-known film makers, learning the business from the ground up.

Had Newspaper Experience.

He graduated from newspaper work to make his bow in the theatrical world. His first star was May Irwin. Following this production he staged "Mistress Nell" in 1900 for his wife, the famous Henrietta Crossman. After a short period as co-producer with David Belasco he went "on his own" until 1908. In that year, with Henry Harris, he put on "The Christian Pilgrim," adapted from Pilgrim's Progress. It was a great artistic success.

Among Major Cambell's own plays perhaps the best known are "The Almighty Dollar," "Where There's a Will" and "Thou Shalt Not Kill."

Goldwyn and Hess Returning.

Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, who has been in London for the past six weeks arranging for the distribution of Goldwyn Pictures in England and on the Continent, sailed for New York on the Mauretania on May 8. Gabriel L. Hess, secretary of the company, also is returning. An interesting announcement concerning the handling of the Goldwyn product in the foreign market is expected to follow the arrival of the Goldwyn executives in New York.

Richman to Support Anita Stewart.

Charles Richman, equally famous both in the legitimate and silent drama, has arrived in Los Angeles to play an important role in support of Anita Stewart in her latest Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction, "Harriet and the Piper," which is now being filmed at the Mayer studio under the direction of Bertram Bracken.

"The Scoffer" Is Acclaimed by a Jury of Twelve Officials

A JURY of twelve Mayflower Photoplay Corporation officials have witnessed a pre-release view of Allan Dwan's latest production, "The Scoffer." The verdict of the twelve was unanimous. It was to the effect that the production is one of the strongest ever screened.

There is action in "The Scoffer," with never a let-up on the heart-strain until the finish. That most fascinating incident to humanity—the entry into life of the young—is the alluring motif which ushers in the plot. The Scoffer (James Kirkwood), an upstanding figure, a doctor gifted with rare and progressive talent, a staunch believer in the omnipotent power that rules the universe, is suddenly distorted in mind through the vicious caprice of a nerve-racked woman (Rhea Mitchell) and the base treachery of an erstwhile chum in the profession (Philo McCullough). The Scoffer becomes a cynical and morose reviler of the Almighty power. He nurses this hell of hate into such vigor that he becomes its slave and vents his blasphemous views at every possible opportunity.

But there comes a moment when a wounded dog makes a slient but pathetic appeal to his slumbering humanity and he unbends his stern will to relieve the suffering brute's agony. His wondrous surgical skill is then invoked to save the life of a boy crippled by the onslaught of a whiskey-maddened father. The doctor struggles against his ruling demon of hate and his vow never again to raise a hand to help a human being. Finally, Margaret Hadden (Mary Thurman) challenges him to prove his claim that the power of man is greater than the power of God and in answer to this challenge The Scoffer undertakes an operation which he knows will save the boy.

A terrific storm breaks and the lights go out. The Scoffer, with his whole thought now centered on saving the life of the boy, is thus forced to admit defeat. Realizing his helplessness, he calls upon God for aid. The answer is a blinding flash of lightning. A great tree is shattered and instantly bursts into flames. The light thus furnished enables The Scoffer to complete the operation and the lad is saved.

According to tentative plans, "The Scoffer" will be First National's second release under the new contract with Mayflower.

Earle Williams Is Working on "The Purple Hieroglyph"

THE PURPLE HIEROGLYPH," a story of adventure on the Pacific Coast and an American romance shrouded in Oriental mystery, has been purchased by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as the next Earle Williams production to follow "The Master Stroke." Chester Bennett will direct this feature, and is now finishing the script in collaboration with J. Grubb Alexander. Filming will soon start at Vitagraph's California studios. The story is by Will F. Jenkins and recently appeared in a popular magazine.

"The Purple Hieroglyph" is the mysterious sign attached to the death threats of a secret Chinese organization in San Francisco's Chinatown.

"Rio Grande" Booking Fast.

"Rio Grande," the Edwin Carewe production of the stage play by Augustus Thomas, has demonstrated within two weeks after the date of release that it is exactly the type of virile Western picture of the great outdoors that exhibitors have been wanting. It is full of fight and action, romance and love, and is filled with live scenes taken along the border country and in the mountains of Northern Mexico.

Among important contracts approved by the Pathe home office in the past week are Tally's Broadway, Los Angeles; Garrick Theatre, St. Louis; Colonial, Stockton, Cal.; Hippodrome, Toledo, O.; Grand, Reading, Pa.; Third Street, Easton, Pa.; Criterion, Washington, D. C.; Landers, Springfield, Mo.; Isis, Topeka, Kan., and the Colonial, of Lincoln, Neb.

New Taxes in Berlin Hit Screen Enthusiasts Hard

NEW Berlin taxes on motion pictures are hitting the German exhibitors and public hard, as they are much higher than the rates on other amusements. The tax on admissions begins with 10 pfenning (a mark is composed of 100 pfenning) on a ticket costing 1 mark, rises to 2.50 marks on one costing from 5 to 6 marks and from that point on amounts to 50 per cent.

Proprietors of picture shows also pay a daily tax of 50 marks on premises now covering more than 100 square meters, and then 25 marks more for each additional 25 meters.

On tickets to theatres, concerts and lectures, the tax begins with 10 pfenning on 2 marks, rises to 1.30 marks on tickets costing from 9 to 10 marks and reaches only 4.60 on tickets costing 20 marks.

Big Western Houses Sign for "Bringing Up Father" Series

THE Riveria, of Chicago, and Miller's, Los Angeles, are two more leading theatres in which the "Bringing Up Father" comedies, featuring Johnny Ray as Mr. Jiggs and Margaret Fitzroy as Maggie, will be seen in the future. In every important city in the country the comedies have been played by the principal theatres, and in scores of instances co-operation has been effected with the local newspapers running the comic strip of George McManus.

"Father's Close Shave," to be released on May 15, is the second of the series and the reputation established by the first picture, "Jiggs in Society," augurs well for the second one. The second picture is full of thrills and laughs, for Jiggs has some of the wildest adventures ever evolved for the screen.

A big cast supports Johnny Ray and Margaret Fitzroy. Laura La Plante is Nora, the daughter of the comedy pair. She was selected after a contest in which some of the most beautiful women in the film colony were entered.

East Indian Fete Filmed for Lytell Picture.

A Hindu street scene in "The Price of Redemption," Bert Lytell's forthcoming Metro special, is an exact reproduction of a street in the town of Baroda, India. Dr. H. R. M. Maddock, who spent many years in India in British Army service, is technical advisor for the picture. The set was constructed under the supervision of A. W. Alley.

The street, covering in all about three hundred feet, is formed in an angle. The houses and stores in varied colors, are made of cement and stucco, the lowest about twenty feet high, the tallest about seventy. As many of the inhabitants of the town are English, the signs on the stores are painted in both Hindu and English script.

Exhibitors Compliment Pathe Service on "The Third Eye"

THE Pathe branch offices have been complimented by exhibitors for the service they have rendered in connection with "The Third Eye," the fifteen episode serial which has been elected to succeed "Daredevil Jack" on Pathe's schedule.

Manager Stombaugh, of the Minneapolis branch, reports that the twenty-four sheet poster has made a big hit with the exhibitors in his territory. It is in three colors, showing a striking handling of red, yellow and blue. The paper, campaign books and other advance matter have been in the hands of the exchanges for some time now and exhibitors who have already booked "The Third Eye" were supplied the means with which to open up their campaign immediately, an item of high importance to the showman.

In addition to the extensive billboard advertising campaign mapped out for the serial, Pathe has made a large money appropriation for special newspaper advertising. The method to be adopted in distributing this newspaper advertising applies a co-operative scheme between the exhibitor proper and the exchanges.

The campaign book prepared by Pathe's exploitation department devotes space and articles pointing out the unusual opportunities for stunt exploitation which the picture affords, and gives a variety of illustrations of attractive and workable devices of this kind.

Goldwyn to Start Work on "Stop Thief" With Moore Soon

WORD is received from the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, that the mystery farce, "Stop Thief," soon will be placed in production, with Tom Moore as the star. In this, as in "Officer 666," which he has just completed, Moore will be directed by Harry Beaumont.

Although the cast for "Stop Thief" has not yet been selected, it is announced that Hazel Daly will be the star's leading woman.

In common with "Officer 666," "Stop Thief" has the distinction of being one of the most successful plays ever staged by Cohan and Harris. It ran for a full year at the Gaiety Theatre, New York, where it was first presented in the fall of 1913. As a road attraction, and later in stock, it was equally successful. With all of the scenes laid in one house, the action of this rapidly moving farce is supposed to transpire during the actual playing time of the piece.

"The Honey Bee" Gets Extended Bookings.

Extended bookings in representative theatres all over the country with the East much in evidence is indicative of the widespread appeal of "The Honey Bee," the "Flying A" Special, starring Mme. Marguerita Sylva. The high lights in the drama, particularly the renunciation of the man she loved by the heroine, Hilda Wilson (Mme. Sylva); the mother love which hungered for a home and children, leading to unconventional situations which bid fair to damage her good name; the remarkably realistic prize fight put over by Kid McCoy and Nigel Barrie, which turned a woman's budding love to a feeling of revulsion; and the comedy introduced by those experts, Albert Ray and George Hernandes, give some hint of the breadth of appeal in this Special.

Among the bookings received during the last few days are Miller's Theatre, Los Angeles; the Palace, San Antonio; the Boston Theatre, Boston; Majestic, Beloit, Wis.; Victory, Providence, R. I.; Olympic, of New Haven; William Fox Strand, Denver; Columbia, Washington, D. C.; the Strand, of Portland, Maine; and Hippodrome, of Warren, Ohio.

Myron Selznick Tells of His Efficiency Production Methods

A STRIKING example of the all-around efficiency in the making of Selznick Pictures has been revealed by Myron Selznick, president of the Selznick Pictures Corporation, in connection with Olive Thomas' forthcoming production, "Jenny."

Mr. Selznick believes, and justly so, that each and every person connected with the organization must and does contribute his mite toward the completion of first-class productions. Elaborating his statement, Mr. Selznick said:

"Following the example of all good builders of dwellings, we always lay the foundation for our pictures weeks in advance of actual production. For instance, just prior to accepting 'Jenny' for production, Olive Thomas, who is now working on that picture, was filming 'The Flapper' at our eastern studios. Now 'Jenny' was to be filmed at our West Coast studios, and it was essential that all details be formulated beforehand and forwarded promptly to Los Angeles in order to forestall any loss of time.

"And when Miss Thomas, after completing 'The Flapper,' arrived in the West, the first scenes for 'Jenny' were filmed the following morning. All of which proves that we don't ever attempt to place the cart before the horse."

"Jenny" is from the pen of the noted British author, Roy Lorniman. Laurence Trimble is directing the production.

American Has Campaign Book Describing "Slam Bang Jim"

A FLAME-COLORED campaign book of twenty-four pages is just off the press for the use of exhibitors booking the American production, "Slam Bang Jim," which has been adapted from "Snap Judgment." This book has been built up to help put over in a big way the comedy-drama it advertises and exploits.

Reproductions of the attractive posters, which include a 24-sheet, two 3-sheets, a 1-sheet and a 6-sheet, besides the 22 by 28 lobby portrait of William Russell and scene from the drama, all teeming with action and interest, introduce the reader to the main advertising features. Following reproductions of the newspaper cuts are practical exploitation suggestions which are effective and at the same time easy to put over.

There is also a generous supply of catch lines for ads and programs for which this dual-role, double identity farce is a prolific source. Thumb-nail synopses and notices for newspapers will prove a boon for exhibitors—in short, this campaign book will meet in a practical way the varied exploitation and advertising demands of the theatres in both the small town and large city.

Nazimova Beats Box Office Records at Merrill Theatre

THE biggest box office receipts for one week that the Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee has ever known were piled up by Nazimova in "The Heart of a Child" during the recent showing of that picture, when the Merrill held the production over for a second week after it had smashed all attendance figures for the first seven days of its run.

According to E. C. Bostick, manager of the Merrill and also of the New Strand, "The Heart of a Child" receipts for the first week of its run beat all previous records by $500.

The record established by the new Nazimova picture in Milwaukee has been duplicated elsewhere in a number of instances, according to Metro officials. "The Heart of a Child," adapted by Charles Bryant from Frank Darby's great novel of English life, presents Nazimova as Sally Snape, in a role that shows her off at her versatile best. Ray C. Smallwood directed.

Pay Bonuses to Star and Director of Curwood Film

Calgary, Alberta.

(By wire to Moving Picture World)

AT its annual meeting Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., of this city, voted a cash bonus of $15,000 to Nell Shipman and $8,000 to David Hartford, respectively star and director of "Back to God's Country," this being in addition to salaries already paid them and as agreed when a certain amount of profits should be realized by the company.

It was resolved to continue operations with two of the Ralph Connor stories for First National Exhibitors exploitation. A one-half interest in "Back to God's Country" and all new operations was voted to Ernest Shipman, who was present, for his co-operation and enterprise.

Kid McCoy in "The Honey Bee."

Norman Selby, who is better known to the sporting fraternity as Kid McCoy, by special arrangement, appears in one of the most spectacular ring battles of his career in 'The Honey Bee," the American super-special, with Mme. Marguerita Sylva, the noted opera singer, in the featured role. The verdict of some fight fans who were among the first reviewers of these scenes featuring the prize fight between Kid McCoy and Nigel Barrie, was very gratifying to the management of the "Flying A" studios.

Record Many Repeat Bookings on Neilan's "The River's End"

A HIGH-WATER mark in rebookings and return dates business is confidently anticipated by J. R. Grainger, in charge of sales for Marshall Neilan Productions, on "The River's End," the initial independent Neilan release through First National.

"Never in my long association with the sales end of the motion picture business," said Mr. Grainger, "have I experienced such a deband for rebookings and extended runs as is being evidenced in connection with 'The River's End.'

"I can safely say that to date 50 per cent. of the theatres that have booked and played this film have arranged for either extended bookings or have requested return dates. This applies to the large theatres as well as the small.

"'Don't Ever Marry' is running close to the record of 'The River's End,' and from present indications will even do better than our first offering."

As a result of the rush of business in connection with "The River's End" and "Don't Ever Marry," the Marshall Neilan offices in New York have become cramped for space, and another suite of offices adjoining the present space in the Capitol Theatre Building will be taken over immediately.

George H. Plympton, for several years a continuity and special story writer for the Vitagraph company, has been added to the scenario department of the J. D. Hampton studios.

"Forbidden Trails" Is Latest Buck Jones Release for Fox

IN the selection of "Forbidden Trails" as the second vehicle for his new cowboy star, Buck Jones, William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, exhibits a consistency which, if adhered to, should insure the popularity of all films in which this star appears.

"Forbidden Trails," in novel form, is said to have surpassed in sale many other works by the same author, Charles Alden Seltzer, whose stories of life in the open West are in big demand.

During the filming of "Forbidden Trails," Buck Jones, in pursuit of the realism which he insists upon in his pictures, seriously injured a foot in making a reckless fall from his horse. This interrupted the production for three weeks.

A happy combination of director and star has been found with Scott Dunlap at the megaphone with Jones. The supporting cast includes Harry Dunkinson, Fred Herzog, George Kunkel, William Elmer and Stanton Heck. Winifred Westover, the demure, blonde leading woman, does work which goes far to bring out in Buck Jones a pleasing suggestion of dramatic talent seldom found in cowboy stars—whose main object is to thrill with hair-raising stunts.

Gibraltar Picture Acclaimed at Hodkinson Trade Showings

BOTH in theme and enactment, Leah Baird pictures, produced by Gibraltar and released by Hodkinson, grow in power. This fact was amply attested by the enthusiasm and spot booking that marked simultaneous trade showings at all Hodkinson branches of Miss Baird's newest production, "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," by Louis Joseph Vance.

Claims set forth in advance by the Hodkinson organization and Gibraltar executives that the new Leah Baird production was even more powerful and had greater exploitation possibilities than her "As a Man Thinks" attracted, scores of prominent exhibitors to the showings. The cagerness to book "Cynthia-of-the-Minute" fully substantiated the good things said in advance by the producers and exhibitors.

Leah Baird's Work Is Praised.

Every element of popular appeal has its place in "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," a romance highly seasoned with the thrills, stirring suspense and smashing climaxes that screen devotees and booklovers look for in a Louis Joseph Vance story. These qualities, in conjunction with the human touches that are brought out as its love story is unfolded, not only stamp the production the biggest of all Leah Baird achievements to date, but also one of the finest and most engrossing melodramas offered on the screen in months.

Arthur F. Beck, president of Gibraltar Pictures, has inaugurated a book publishers' advertising campaign on the Louis Joseph Vance picture that should prove as beneficial to exhibitors as successful booksellers' drive on "The Westerners" and "Desert Gold."

Kilgour Added to "Hearts Are Trumps."

Joseph Kilgour, after a brief absence from the playing forces at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, has returned to enact one of the principal roles in "Hearts are Trumps," the third of the Drury Lane melodramas to be produced for the screen by Metro. Mr. Kilgour will have the part of Lord Burford, a distinguished Englishman, in the all-star cast that is to interpret the story of love and intrigue by the late Cecil Raleigh.

Call for Title of New Sunshine Comedy Brings Suggestions

FOR the past four months the advertising and publicity departments of Fox Film Corporation have been receiving a steady flow of communications from theatre managers, owners and publicity men—from houses of all sorts, sizes and clienteles. Announcement was made at that time that the company was looking for a suitable title.

The exact date for the selection of the title is yet undecided, but the name of the winner will be announced within the next six weeks.

Plans for the special distribution of this de luxe Sunshine Special have already been perfected by the Fox sales heads and will be ready for the release of the multiple reel comedy in the near future. Special photos of attractive poses by the seventy-five Sunshine Widows who throng the hundreds of scenes of the picture have been prepared for distribution and will offer exhibitors many new angles for snappy lobby displays on the production.

Hampton Del Ruth, farceur supreme, personally supervised the entire production, with a corps of six Sunshine directors working day and night for six months.

Showmen Plan "Mrs. Sidney Drew Week."

Pathe branch managers throughout the country have reported that many exhibitors are preparing to make the return to the screen of Mrs. Sidney Drew a real event in their theatres. In some cases "Mrs. Drew Weeks" are being arranged. When Mrs. Drew and her late husband were producing and appearing in comedies they were in favor in thousands of theatres throughout the country and the patrons of these theatres have been waiting for an opportunity to again see "Polly" Drew on the screen.

Mrs. Drew returns to the screen temporarily in the third picture of her present series featuring John Cumberland. The picture is "The Emotional Miss Vaughn," and Mrs. Drew is seen as Miss Vaughn, a role idealy suited to her talents. The comedy will be released on May 30.

Harry Morey's Next Feature Is Now Nearing Completion

HARRY T. MOREY'S forthcoming Vitagraph feature will be called "The Gauntlet." The star and his supporting company recently returned from the mountains of Tennessee, where many of the exteriors were filmed, and now has gone with his director, Edwin Hollywood, to Saugerties, N. Y., where the picture will be completed.

"The Gauntlet" is based on a magazine story by Lillian Benett-Thompson and George Hubbard and was put into picture form by Fred Schaefer. Louiszita Valentine, who appeared with Mr. Morey in "The Sea Rider," has the leading feminine role. The locale is among the mountaineers and moonshiners of the Tennessee mountains.

In selecting the picture for Mr. Morey, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, is fulfilling his promise to provide the star with features dealing with outdoor life so far as possible. Mr. Morey recently completed "The Sea Rider," a rugged story of strenuous life on the deep, and previous to that he was seen in two pictures dealing with mountain life. Edwin Hollywood directed all these features.

Gladys George in Leading Role.

Gladys George, one of the most promising of Thomas H. Ince "discoveries," has been cast in the leading feminine role opposite Douglas MacLean in his first individual starring vehicle, "Yanconna Yillies," according to word from the Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City, Cal.

Miss George will assume the character of Juliet, a young chicken farmerette.

Douglas MacLean and his company recently completed the shadow rehearsals for "Yanconna Yillies." The photographing of the first scenes in the play is now progressing under the direction of Jack Nelson. The new play abounds with original wit and humor and sports several departures in "gags" and photographic effects.

Green Starts Directing New Pickford Film; Has Big Cast

WITH Al Green retained as a Goldwyn director and a strong cast of motion picture favorites assembled, work on the Jack Pickford starring vehicle, "The Man Who Had Everything," by Ben Ames Williams, has been started at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City. Billy Reiter will act as assistant to Director Green, and the camera work will be in the hands of Clyde Cook.

This story, which was first published in a popular weekly, will be Pickford's third production since he became a Goldwyn star, the other being "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" and "The Double Dyed Deceiver." Priscilla Bonner, a young actress who has made rapid progress since her entrance into picture work last December, will play opposite Pickford.

Alec B. Francis, the well-known Goldwyn character actor, is said to have an excellent opportunity in the role assigned to him in "The Man Who Had Everything," whereas another telling performance may be expected from Lionel Belmore. Others in the company are Shannon Day, William Machin and Carl Girard.

Bandbox Gives Two Weeks Run to "An Adventuress"

AN ADVENTURESS," starring Julian Eltinge, the female impersonator, has again scored a booking triumph, according to Briton N. Busch, president of the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director.

Mr. Busch stated that the Bandbox Theatre, of Chicago, which recently opened its doors for the first time with the Select picture, "She Loves and Lies," booked "An Adventuress" for two weeks as a first-run production.

"This instance of a two weeks' first-run at Barbee's Loop Theatre," declared Mr. Busch, "is only one of the many instances where exhibitors have profited by the showing of 'An Adventuress.' Throughout the entire production there runs a vein of humor, tinged with thrilling scenes.

"Our bookings on the picture thus far show that exhibitors have been delighted with the spontaneous outburst of aproval from their audiences."

Ince's "Homespun Folks" Ready.

Thomas H. Ince has edited his new special production, "Homespun Folks," in which Lloyd Hughes carries off honors as the featured masculine player. The special will be ready for pre-review within the next week. It was directed by John Griffith Wray, under the personal supervision of Mr. Ince.

Newspaper Tie-Up Aids in Advertising Flynn Dramas

THE Chief William J. Flynn two-reel detective dramas, released by Republic, have been booked by all the big Chicago circuits, according to Sam E. Morris, general manager of the Republic Distributing Corporation.

This announcement was augumented by the statement that the entire series of Flynn dramas have been fictionized by Wilson Mizner and are now running in leading dailies during the showing of the pictures in the motion picture theatres throughout the country.

At the present time the Brooklyn Citizen is running the fiction versions of the entire series for eight weeks.

"Brooklyn exhibitors are cashing in on this newspaper tieup by placing a small ad the size of an ordinary index card at an advertising expense for the entire eight weeks of not more than $40."

Vitagraphers Fly to Location.

A trip to location of an entire motion picture producing company on a fleet of hydro-airplanes was the feat accomplished by Director Tom Terriss in going to Catalina Island with Vitagraph's producing unit on "The Girl from the Sky." This will be the second of the productions recently announced by Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph. The first is James Oliver Curwood's "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," now ready for release.

The start was made from an aviation field between Los Angeles and the beach. Catalina, the famous tourist resort island, lies 20 miles out at sea. The company reached the location without mishap, landing on the beach not a hundred yards from where sets had been constructed the day before by a staff from Vitagraph's Hollywood studio.

Announces Cast for Kennedy Feature.

With the selection of a cast to support Madge Kennedy, the Goldwyn star, in "The Girl with the Jazz Heart," work on that production is progresing at Goldwyn's New York studios under the direction of L. Holmes Will Do Serious Role on Stage.

When Taylor Holmes returns to the speaking stage following his excursion into motion pictures, this actor will conduct a novel departure by assuming a serious role, although he has earned fame as a comedian. In "To-Morrow's Price," by Samuel Shipman and Percival Wilde, to be produced shortly by A. H. Woods, Mr. Holmes will essay a straight dramatic part.

As an independent picture producer, Taylor Holmes recently has made three comedies for release by Metro. They are "Nothing But the Truth," "The Very Idea" and "Nothing But Lies."

DANGEROUS EYES (Fox-Sunshine).—Chester Conklin revels in a job in a modiste's shop in this two-reel comic. He cranks the revolving platform for the lady models and has a tremendous time lacing up the corset strings for a "Perfect 63." The situations are breezy in this, but so funny that they should get over without offense. The safe cracking episode in the second reel is a laughable stunt.

Sidelights and Reflections

ANY attention paid to the communications and interviews in the trade papers, from week to week, in which exhibitors, scenario writers and art directors express their views on all sorts of screen subjects sometimes leaves the impression that to several of these gentlemen moving pictures have little, if any, individuality and should all be treated with scant consideration for the class to which they belong. One exhibitor whose opinions as to the best methods of conducting his business are generally clear headed and have placed him among the leading screen showman complained recently that the producer did not give enough thought to the importance of music in the presentation of pictures. To quote from the article, which appeared in this publication:

"Rather he or the cutter of the film overlooks the possibilities for giving the musicians a chance. For instance, there is a shift in the action compelling the director of the orchestra to swing to another piece of music. Yet before the musicians have got fairly started they are choked off by still another radical switch on the screen. Many pictures lean heavily on the musical accompaniment, and it seems to me it would be the part of wisdom for the producer to recognize this and help the showman by exercising better judgment in the cutting."

There will one day be just one class of film fiction that the cutter can consider with relation to a musical setting; and when this class arrives it will be known as screen opera. In the screen novel, the screen comedy and the screen drama the mental action controls the tempo, and scenes cannot be pieced out or new incidents added to suit the convenience of a musical score. If a shift in the action takes places there can be but one reason for it—the proper telling of the story demands such a shift. When a stage play is correctly rehearsed and acted it is possible to beat time to it. The same thing is possible with a screen play, if it has been correctly photographed and assembled. Neither class of fiction can be thrown out of dramatic harmony in order to synchronize with the notes selected for a musical setting.

When screen opera is a reality the music will dominate the action on the screen in the same way the work of the composer overshadows the words of every grand opera libretto. Special themes that lend themselves readily to this form of story telling on the screen will be selected. It is hardly necessary to add that the music will be written by the foremost composers, if screen opera is to be a success.

No one needs to be reminded of the consequences if the operator does not set his picture machine at the proper pace. The correct movement of the human beings shown on the screen is no more arbitrary a condition than is the proper tempo of the mental action. When skilfully selected and as skilfully played the musical setting chosen for every piece of screen fiction blends in perfectly with the picture as it comes from the hands of the cutter. If the story holds the interest in the way it should, it would be worse than folly to alter it for the sole purpose of giving the musicians a chance. WEITZEL.

"The Yellow Typhoon"

Anita Stewart Doubles in a Clever Adaptation of Harold McGrath's Story Released Through First National.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

MUCH of the personality of the author has been transferred to the cinema version of "The Yellow Typhoon," a climactic melodrama, replete with intrigue and quick action. The production is a worthy one and evinces marked craftmanship on the part of the director. Heavy demands in the way of elaborate settings have been made upon the producer, and the effects are colorful and vivid. As the scene of action shifts from America to the Orient and back from the Orient to the Philippines, there is a scrupulous regard for atmospheric details and incidents that increases the spectator's interest.

A blonde, Anita Stewart is one of the novelties of the picture, which affords the star a chance for depicting two contrasting roles. As the dark-haired sister of sweet, unselfish character, she is more familiar, of course, and to this role she is better suited by type and temperament. The other role calls for somewhat baser and more hardened qualities which she does not assimilate with the same degree of conviction.

The members of the supporting cast perform in a way that is a credit to their director, as well as to their individual talent. Ward Crane is an attractive type, who supplies what small amount of love interest there is, and Donald MacDonald and Joseph Kilgour prove capable in other important parts. Excellent photography aids in making the picture a success.

"The Yellow Typhoon" is the name which has been given a young blonde woman as dangerous as she is beautiful, and who is suspected by the United Secret Service Bureau as being connected with a certain conspiracy.

The Story.

Hilda and Berta Nordstrom are twin sisters with vastly different ideas in regard to life and happiness. Berta's existence is one round of selfish pleasure and her thoughtlessness and neglect eventually causes her mother's death. The immediate cause of this tragedy was her elopement with Robert Hallowell which was followed by Hilda's discovery of her sister's clothes by the bank of a river, which led Hilda and her mother to believe that the girl had committed suicide.

In reality she had gone to Italy, where she was continuing her gay life of extravagance, and is known as "The Yellow Typhoon." When Hallowell's funds are exhausted, she deserts him for another admirer who owns a notorious gambling establishment in the Orient. Her new lover, Karl Lysgaard, begs her to accompany him to Manila, where he intends to carry out secret plans in league with an enemy to the United States. She is eager for adventure and consents to go with him.

Hallowell, meanwhile, has repaired to Manila, where he is perfecting an invention which will insure American ships from submarine attacks. Hilda, now a secret service agent from Washington, comes to the place. Hallowell and his friend, Lieut. Commander John Mathison, note her resemblance to "the yellow typhoon," and suspect her, in spite of her assertion, that she is the other's twin sister. She is assigned to the task of watching her sister and Lysgaard. She learns of their plan to get possession of the prints of Hallowell's plans, which are to be sent to America. In a dramatic scene which follows her discovery, Hallowel is killed and Mathison is detailed to carry the papers to the United States. Berta and her companion follow disguised as immigrants. But Hilda outwits them, and in a scuffle which occurs upon the arrival of the police, Berta and Lysgaard are killed. Hilda and Mathison acknowledge their love and are married.

"Everything But the Truth"

Lyons and Moran Appear in Excellent Five-Reel Universal Comedy Subject.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE multitude of screen fans who for years have watched Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran do team work in one and two-reel subjects will be pleased with this first five-reel production, entitled "Everything But the Truth." It is done in their usual comedy vein and carries a good, light plot, with numerous laughing moments strung along through the action.

These two players are particularly apt in depicting the early troubles of engaged couples or newly-weds. In this particular story Lee is already married and Eddie is about to be. Through an unkind fate Eddie is made prisoner overnight in company with Lee's wife, and there is a general disturbance of "love's young dream" all along the line. The prisoners make their escape next day, and some laughable attempts are made at explaining their absence. They tell everything but the truth, but in the end nothing but the truth saves them.

The subject contains numerous angles of special interest to young married couple. Eddie's business troubles, as pictured at the beginning, are thoroughly amusing. The following scenes are taken in the suburban village of Blythedale, where Eddie makes the unfortunate acquaintance with Lee's bride.

The settings are all pleasing and the story moves smoothly. Katherine Lewis and Anne Cornwall have the feminine leads.

The Story.

Billy Hervey, in "Everything But the Truth," is head of the William Hervey Oil Company, a concern which is in bad shape financially. The stockholders and employes of the company are badly worried, but Billy himself is in love with a girl named Helen Gray, who is soon to become his bride, and bears his troubles easily. On the eve of a stockholders' meeting he dashes away to look at his new bungalow, which is to be a surprise gift to Helen.

While at the bungalow in Blythesdale, Billy meets Annabelle Elton, the young wife of Jack Eton. The latter has been called to town for the night by his employer and Helen wishes to get some fresh eggs from a chicken farm some distance away. Billy volunteers to drive her over in his car, just to be neighborly. When they arrive at the supposed house Billy and Annabelle are made prisoners and kept overnight by a strange individual, who turns out to be an escaped lunatic. He thinks he is running a sanitarium and that the visitors are crazy.

On their escape, next day, Billy and Annabelle make some wierd and unsatisfactory explanations, both to Jack and Helen Gray. They lie singly and in concert, to no advantage whatever. It is only when the truth finally comes out, through other individuals, that the suspicious ones are finally satisfied.

"Out of the Storm"

Brilliant Picturization of Gertrude Atherton Novel by Goldwyn.

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney.

"OUT OF THE STORM" is a succession of motion picture story punches that will prove it to be one of the season's best pictures. It is a picturization by Goldwyn and Rex Beach of Gertrude Atherton's novel, "The Tower of Ivory." The search for good stories has brought out this one, and the way it was produced is a credit to everybody concerned in the making of it.

There are some fine incidents and climaxes. A shipwreck is unusually realistic, and the jail delivery both exciting and gripping. There is plenty of emotional appeal and a love story that will keep your audiences on edge to see how it is going to turn out.

The leading part is played by Barbara Castleton. She does splendid work in "Out of the Storm." John Bowers is the leading man. He is another whose work is gathering popularity. Another important role is that of Al Levering, played by Sydney Ainsworth. This part gets a certain amount of sympathy for several reels, and it is this situation that makes the story so good. Exhibitors will find "Out of the Storm" a picture that will not only satisfy their patrons, but one that will be talked about.

Margaret goes to San Francisco to study music, promising to marry Levering when he gets out. In a shipwreck she is rescued by John Ordham, younger son of the noble English family of Bridgeminster. They become separated and go their ways, neither knowing the other has been finally saved.

Five years later Margaret is a reigning opera queen in London. Ordway is engaged to another girl. Meantime Levering escapes from prison and takes up a hunt for Margaret. Ordham again meets her and they renew their acquaintance, which ripens into love. But Levering appears and demands she choose between Ordham and him. She discloses her past to Ordham, who had broken with his fiancee. But Ordam forgives her. Anxious to save him from scandal, Margaret flaunts Levering before him. This embitters Ordham. "The Fortune Teller"

Robertson-Cole Super-Special Presenting Marjorie Rambeau in a Dramatic Story of Motherhood.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

WHILE the drift of "The Fortune Teller" is toward melodrama, the underlying motive goes to establish the necessity of mother love as a great contributing factor to the happiness and success of a man. No American will question this. To the contrary, all recent methods of education place the teacher's influence as secondary to that of the mental development of children. In the Robertson-Cole product the mother is discarded most unjustly by a husband devoted to scientific research, who thereafter brings his boy up on such scientific principles that he amounts to nothing as a man. He is a failure until chance restores the natural inspiration of a boy's life. This is brought out by the star's remarkably fine characterization rather than by Capellani's direction.

Marjorie Rambeau qualifies as an emotional screen actress in "The Fortune Teller," carrying interest far beyond that of the story by her personality and intelligent interpretation of the leading role. It is she who gives emphasis to the important theme of the story to which extraneous matter relating to subordinate characters does not contribute, some of which could be eliminated with benefit to the production. Of Miss Rambeau's support, Virginia Lee, in an ingenue role aids materially to enhance story interest. Frederick Burton, Raymond McKee and Franklin Hanna providing admirable types. The direction is capable in detail, but lays too much stress on the unimportant instead of driving steadily along the main line of interest. The entire product is a high class one, and, as shown at the Broadway, it should prove a fine entertainment anywhere.

Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

Not as "The Fortune Teller" of a circus did Madame Renee begin her career, but as the virtuous wife of a scientist named Browning. Falsely accused of relations with a circus manager, Tony Salviatti, and on his account divorced by a merciless husband, she was set adrift without the custody of her little boy, to whom she had been devoted.

The spiritual character of Renee gradually decayed, until she was a mere wreck of her former self twenty years later. Then her son came to have his fortune told. His scientific education was a failure. He had been discarded everywhere in attempts to make his own way. His mother, on learning his name, rouses from her lethargy, inspires him without letting her identity be known. She quits her demoralizing associations, supports herself by her art of telling fortunes and lifts her son rapidly in society and business until he becomes a successful candidate for political honors and the fiance of the Governor's daughter.

In achieving so much for her son, she raises herself socially, proving that the devotion of a true-hearted mother is the mainspring of action in a boy's life, and that the mother receives in giving him the training, energy and courage he needs. Her own reward in the end is full recognition, not only of her motherhood, but of her noble qualities of mind and heart as well.

"The Notorious Mrs. Sands"

Robertson-Cole Presents Bessie Barriscale In a Realistic Variation of the Eternal Triangle.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE NOTORIOUS MRS. SANDS" is a lifelike presentation of the almost universal plot of husband, wife and one other, the third party in this case an honorable lover. The sense of duty in his breast, as well as that of the wife, is at war with natural passions to the point of renunciation, though the fires of instinct are never wholly quenched. He neither spoils her life nor his own, though both suffer from the husband's unreasonable jealousy and fiendish schemes of malignant torture. It is a true motion picture story in that it adheres to one main line of action. Its logic is defective only in details such as the accusation of crime on very slight evidence, but this is amply compensated for by the strong pictures of the woman's tortured soul. The product is admirably staged and notable for the skill with which the mental workings of its characters are portrayed.

Miss Barriscale interprets her difficult role with true spiritual insight, not overacting the scenes of tragic passion, never forgetting that she is depicting a modern woman of intelligence and refinement. In scenes where she accepts public dishonor for the sake of private right her attitude of resignation shows a delicate appreciation of how a well-born woman would act in a compromising situation. Her work is excellent throughout, a compliment to her art and to the clear judgment of her director. Exceptionally good in quality is the taste shown in backgrounds and settings. The whole product, as shown at the Rio Theatre, is a fine entertainment.

The Story.

"The Notorious Mrs. Sands" does not become so through any wrong act of her own, but through the evil machinations of her husband. He has thwarted the natural longings of her heart for Harold Cane, only to feel her contempt when she discovers the depth of his deceit. She is loyal to the core until her husband begins a systematic torture by flaunting her love for Cane in her face. Even then, when Cane comes in his share of torture at the hands of the husband, his employer, Mrs. Sands keeps her dignity and self-respect. At a moment when Cane is about to leave the city, Sands loses his head so completely as to show such brutality to his wife that she goes to a hotel and sends for Crane. She begs him to take her away with him, but realization comes to her that she involves her mother in such conduct, and she decides that they must await the trend of events in separation.

With fiendish ingenuity her husband plants a safe robbery at this moment, leaving Cane's gloves on the scene for evidence against the young man, and has him arrested for burglary. At the trial Cane refuses to account for his time, fearing to compromise Mrs. Sands. She goes to the courtroom and saves him by an admission of his presence with her in a hotel room at the hour, establishing an alibi, freeing him, and forever staining her own good name. Her husband, however, refuses to divorce her, and Cane goes away to seek his fortune. The husband changes his mind, and Mrs. Sands finds herself a social outcast, barely able to earn her living as a teacher. She is removed from this position and about to follow Cane in despair, when he returns unexpectedly, and, at last, the two fond hearts find their way to complete happiness.

"Burning Daylight"

Metro Presents Mitchell Lewis in Adaptation of Jack London Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

MITCHELL LEWIS proves himself well suited to the title role in the A. C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., adaptation of the Jack London story "Burning Daylight, which is being released by Metro. His impersonation of this rugged character carries conviction. Generally speaking the production might have been developed in a more masterly fashion; for, while the story contains good situations, the screen version allows trivial details to interfere with a stronger appeal. The show stuff is good—so also is the Alaskan atmosphere with its varied types of humanity. Helen Ferguson as Dora, and William V. Mong as Necessity, her father, do good work. The cast is generally satisfactory, and the production will please the average audience, in spite of the fact that the story's romantic side is not as strongly developed as some might wish.

The Story.

The central figure in "Burning Daylight" is a miner known to his associates by this name. He is the only live thing in the Alaskan mining town of Garaguk, according to the girls in the dance hall; and one evening he comes to the Tivoli, a hotel kept by Dan MacDonald, with rare pickings of gold, which discloses the fact that he has "struck it rich."

In the saloon that night is an agent of one of the biggest mining syndicates of New York, who tries to overhear what Daylight is telling his companions. For his trouble he is thrown outside, but not soon enough to prevent his carrying the story back to his employers. Immediately the head of the syndicate takes the trail for Alaska. Daylight sells his claims and right of way, for six million dollar, and accepts an invitation to visit New York, where later he opens up offices, falls before the wiles of the schemers who bought out his Alaskan property, and loses all he has made.

Determining not to be beaten, he breaks in on a conference which is being held by the swindlers, and gets his money at the point of the gun. He then takes his sweetheart, who, with her father and crippled brother, have accompanied him to New York, and heads again for Alaska.

"The Third Eye"

New Pathe Serial Makes Moving Picture Star Heroine of Thrilling Action in H. H. Van Loan Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ONE of the swiftest moving serials of the season, introducing new atmosphere and thrilling situations, is presented in the H. H. Van Loan story, "The Third Eye," screened by Astra and released by Pathe. Eileen Percy and Warner Oland are the featured members of the cast, and are suported by able players.

The first three episodes of the fifteen of which the serial consists, have a tremendous punch. There is suspense in every foot of film, the story is well woven, and as consistent as the highly colored melodrama can be. The work of the director is highly commendable, and the sincerity and capability of the players is praisworthy. The settings of the picture will appeal to the average theatregoer, for the reason that considerable of the action takes place in a moving picture studio. Some of the backgrounds are quite elaborate, and nicely equipped with the properties of mystery. Eileen Percy and Warner Oland are especially convincing in their work. Jack Mower and Olga Grey are also noticeable for good work.

The first three episodes are named "The Poisoned Dagger," "The Pendulum of Death" and "In Destruction's Path." The story as told thus far shows a pretty moving picture star becoming the victim of a murderous gang, the head of which has fallen in love with her, and also has marked her as a useful addition to the gang. In his scheme to revenge himself on her for refusing to obey him, he feigns death when she shoots him with a studio revolver, and later it is found that a moving picture camera has recorded the event, leaving the hand that turned the camera a mystery.

A struggle then begins between the young woman, aided by her sweetheart, and the leader of the gang for possession of the film. The young woman is lured to the gang's headquarters, and is later commissioned to kill a man she is to find in a certain room at scene of a masked ball. The man proves to be her sweetheart. She breaks the dagger with which she is to stab him, and places the stub in his clothing with the appearance that the deed has been done. She then goes to regain the film which she has been promised for the carrying out of the deed. However, before she has it in her possession the gang leader's would-be sweetheart phones him that he has been duped. The scenes that ensue involve an automobile chase, and the car being driven by the young woman breaks a wheel on the railroad track as a train is approaching. The closing scene leaves her imprisoned by her clothing in the car, and the train about to run over her.

Comments

THE BOWLING ALLEY (Fox).—A Mutt and Jeff animated drawing full of laughable incidents. There are many grotesque situations in this, in fact it leans so strongly to the eccentric as to lose a little of the human quality for which this pair are famous. Keep 'em human, Bud!

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

The Question on Optics.

41. How is the curvature of a condenser lens determined? (P. 96).

42. What advantage is there in placing the flat side of plano convex next arc? (P. 97).

43. Why has a condenser lens more spherical aberration near its edge than at its center? (P. 98).

There, gentlemen, that will do for a starter. We would suggest that not to exceed five of these questions be taken up each week and that aside from looking them up in the Handbook, your members also look up all the data they can find elsewhere—in other words, learn all that CAN be learned about each subject.

You may ask what some of the questions have to do with optics, to which I reply that it is well to thoroughly understand the thing you work with in itself, before going too deeply into its technical action.

Should any other local or locals care to join in this study will they be good enough to advise us. If there is sufficient interest we might take up the entire subject of projection in this way.

Something to Study

From J. R. Thompson, Sharline, Ohio, comes a drawing, in two sections, which are designed to work together, but could not be reproduced in practical form without using an unreasonable amount of space. These drawings are designed to illustrate the possible gain through the use of a large distance between center of shutter shaft and center of light beam, with consequent large diameter revolving shutter.

We have re-drawn the idea, as we understand it, and put it into practical form for publication. And now we cannot make up our minds whether it really does or does not teach any lesson. Examine into the matter for yourselves and let us know what you get out of it.

Point A is the center of the shaft of the revolving shutter of a projection machine. Horizontal, parallel lines BB and CC represent the outer diameter of a light beam one and one quarter inches in diameter. AB is a line representing the edge of a shutter blade just beginning to cut a one and one fourth inch diameter light ray, the center of which is three inches from the center of the shutter shaft.

The blade contacts with the ray at B. Line AE is the same revolving shutter blade cutting the same diameter ray, but with the ray center six inches from the center of the shutter shaft.

The blade edge and ray edge contact at H. Lines AF, AG and AB are shutter blade edges contacting with the ray at nine, twelve, fifteen and eighteen inches distance from center of shutter shaft to center of light ray.

Notice to All.

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Don't "guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City; Garrick Building, Chicago, Ill., or Wright & Callender Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

The Question Is.

On the upper side we have continued all the lines representing blade edges to approximately eighteen inches. On the under side we have stopped these lines at their point of contact with the ray.

The question is what, if anything, does this drawing teach. At first glance we would presume that with the ray removed to eighteen inches there would be present the possibility of reducing the master blade in width equal to the distance from D to the upper horizontal line BB and that as between a three and six inch distance there would be the possibility of a reduction equal the distance I-H, but is there?

Then, too, there is the item of increase of speed which causes the eighteen inch shutter to revolve at such greatly increased speed that the ray diameter is reduced, in effect, to almost nothing.

Of course, all this is, however, somewhat far fetched inasmuch as the ray diameter would not, in practice, remain the same at the various distances named. On the whole we are just a bit puzzled, as we before said, as to what, if any, lesson is taught. What do you think about it?

Projector Repairs

We have just replied, by mail, to a letter from a man who says he is to immediately take charge of the repairing of fifty Power projectors. He writes to ask what tools he will require for the work.

We have no desire to embarrass the gentleman, hence withhold both name and location. We found the information supplied too meager to enable us to give an intelligent reply, hence referred the main inquiry to the Nicholas Power Company for attention.

We feel, however, that this matter should have further attention.

Here is a man who proposes, presumably, to take entire charge of the repairs of at least five thousand dollars worth of projection machinery and who does not even know what tools he needs. Does that look quite right on the face of it?

We have for years—in fact ever since we have been the head of this department—held that for anything more than very ordinary repairs the factory is the logical place to have them made, first because the factory is equipped with many thousands dollars worth of delicate machinery especially adapted to the building and repairing of that particular mechanism.

Second, because at the factory are men who do nothing else from one year's end to the other but repair projection mechanisms of that particular make, and third, because the manufacturer is vitally interested in seeing to it that the repairs are accurately and substantially accomplished, because the very reputation of the firm depends on the successful performance of the machine it makes.

Keep Extra Parts on Hand.

We have no doubt but that the man in question will do the very best he can, but even supposing him to be a perfectly competent mechanic, he is not equipped with a machine shop especially adapted to work on the Power projector, and surely he cannot himself be very expert in the repairing of the Power projector, else he would not be obliged to ask what tools he will require.

We have long advocated the purchase by theatres of an extra, complete intermittent movement assemblage, in the case of the Power machine including a framing carriage, all ready assembled and ready to slip into place when repairs become necessary to the intermittent. The faulty one may then be parcel posted back to the factory for repairs and adjustment, with every assurance that the work will be well done. It is mighty good practice. The purchase of the extra part is in the nature of an insurance against trouble.

I know, of course, there are those who will say: "Yah, I sent in a 'head' to be repaired and it came back in worse shape than it was before," which is an exaggeration, pure and simple. It is unfortunately true, however, that factory inspection is not always what it should be, and careless workmen do sometimes let a machine go out in bad shape.

Is the Exception.

But this proves nothing, because it is the exception. Factories will do exceedingly well to have a rigid inspection and projection test of every repair job before it leaves the factory. We were ourselves inspector in a projection machine factory (Power factory) for four years, and well know what a battle it is to compel workmen to do their work right, but the very worst trouble of all is with the machine which has been received with orders to do exactly so much repair work and no more. Very often a new part cannot be made to work well with a half worn out part, and there lies the rub.

Our advice is to have your projector mechanisms thoroughly overhauled at the factory periodically, remembering that "periodically" does not mean every time the machines become so badly worn that a couple of gears drop off, or the film ceases to go through because there are no teeth left on the intermittent sprocket to move it.

Government Methods Wrong

B. Ludesher, Alpena, Michigan, says:

The question booklets received, and though there are any number of them that I am unable to answer, they are fine. I will await the day when the answers will be published.

Not very long ago the writer noticed, in the department, something regarding the government teaching projection in schools. Of course there are any number of men who have been so badly wounded that work calling for little physical exertion is all they can hope to accomplish, but I don't believe that the government should undertake to keep the school only for those men who are so badly wounded that they cannot do anything else.

Schools for All.

There is more in the letter, and as nearly as we are able to get the idea, brother Ludesher's idea is that the government should open its projection schools to all soldiers.

If this is his view, then we are unable to agree. With the soldiers who went to France and came back disabled we have every possible sympathy. We would aid them in every possible way, but for the soldiers who went to France and came back sound and whole we were never able to work up any very large rain of tears. They had a great big adventure, which should have been worth to them every single bit of the hardship and loss involved. We have rather had sympathy for the ones who, without any great adventure or glory to urge them on, stayed home and bore the burden of labor necessary to keep the war going, and to make it successful—just exactly as necessary to success as was the work of the man who went "Over There," from whom, mind you, we have not the slightest desire to take one particle of glory.

For these reasons we favor schools for the permanently maimed only, with the proviso that we do not favor schools even for them unless they be thoroughly taught and trained—with a year minimum of combined schooling and practice. Maybe I'm wrong in the above view, but anyhow it is the way I feel about it.

Answers Not Published.

We do not intend to publish the answers to the questions because we want you to get the REAL good by hunting them out for yourself. We right now have on our desk 385 questions, with answers compiled and ready. We could easily clean up ten thousand dollars in the next twelve months, and most likely five thousand dollars a year thereafter by publishing them. We have, however, definitely turned that proposition down because it would work injury instead of good. Study and learn the answers for yourself, and it will bring to you real benefit, which is very much more than merely learning an answer by rote would do.

Road Equipment

A. Glassnapp, Bowman, North Dakota, who is an old time reader of the World, wants information, as follows:

Will you kindly give me addresses of companies making a good, light projection machine, which is sturdy enough to carry with a traveling show and which will project a good picture with a 750 or 1,000 wat Mazda, using regular condensers? There are small, home projectors which accommodate smaller lamps only, but this would not be sufficient light for my purpose. I want something a bit better adapted to theatrical work than those.

I am going on the road with a musical and picture show. Will play the theatres wherever possible, but will have to put on the show in a hall at times, where there is no projector, and perhaps even no electric current.

I shall arrange a small generator, to be operated from the truck engine.

We may only use this outfit three or four times a month, but when we want it we shall want it badly, and it must give a good picture.

I remember having seen some such outfits described in the Moving Picture World, but my files are not complete. Does insurance law require a fireproof projection room?

Much Depends.

Very much might depend upon what your idea of a "good picture" might be, neighbor Glassnapp. We may, however, readily admit the fact that no projector is suited to the giving of a traveling theatrical performance which will not give a fairly brilliant, flickerless picture on a plain white cloth projection surface. We may start out by assuming that in a small town "hall" where there would be no balcony or steps of any sort, and where practically every one in the town would be thoroughly familiar with the hall, very little in the way of auditorium would be needed, which in turn reduces the projection light necessary to give a satisfactory picture.

On the whole what I would advise is this: From the Nicholas Power Company you may secure a projector which will give high class results, made up as follows: Mazda lamp equipment or small lamphouse and arc, at your discretion. Wood machine table and telescopic legs. The regular Power mechanism and magazine.

There are, of course, a very great many diffirent kinds of small projectors, such as, for instance, the Projectoscope, Peerless, Rotary, Victor Anamatograph, DeVry, all excellent machines, but hardly, I think, suited to your requirements. What you should have is a light professional projector, and the Power is the only one made

Good Advertising

Harry K. Lucas, manager Lucas Theatre Supply Company, Atlanta, Ga., has several times been named in this department as a high voltage live wire. He now sends sample of a card he is sending, in quantities, to local film exchanges to put into each film can.

HAVE MERCY
MR. PROJECTIONIST.

Moving Picture Films representing an investment of thousands of dollars are being destroyed through rank carelessness on the part of a small portion of projectionists in the South. They are entirely overlooking the fact that no matter what make, class or age machine they are using it is imperative that it be kept thoroughly CLEANED AND ADJUSTED.

ARE YOU DOING YOUR PART?

Let's get together and eliminate this dreadful error which has wrought destruction to a multitude of exchanges. Wouldn't you feel a sense of actual joy in receiving your films clean and in perfect physical condition? Then co-operate with us to stamp out the evil. Make an examination of your mechanism each day before starting your show and see that all sprockets and rollers are in perfect alignment and be sure that they are not worn out. One loose screw, a worn aperture plate, a wobbly roller or a damaged magazine valve can cut up enough good film to bankrupt the average exchange. And dirt—Let's make this an unknown quantity on projection machines. It ruins films, wears out parts and mars projection. At the same time this unnecessary combination of wrongs is jeopardizing YOUR reputation, and putting a question mark against YOUR future.

We will be grateful for your help.

THE EXCHANGE MANAGERS OF THE SOUTH.

This is a really splendid stunt, but we feel that Lucas has made one serious error. He has had 50,000 of the cards printed. That part is not only bad, but very bad, because while the first one or two received will be read and considered, those arriving afterward will be thrown aside because the projectionist knows exactly what is on 'em.

Friend Lucas should have spent at least one whole evenjng writing up at least a dozen forms of those cards, and should have put out a new form at least every week. More work and oodles of more expense, yes—but allee samee it is the only effective way to keep the campaign going for any length of time.

On the back of the card is the advertisement of an Atlanta made film cement.

Release the Air

H. E. Boatright, Tabor, Iowa, gives us a breath of the far distant past by using one now almost obsolete, and several modern railway terms. He says:

Slack the pin! Release your air and come on with the lens charts. Sent four dollars and fifty cents for handbook and charts. "Bible" arrived O K, but the charts—not yet. Let's have 'em, Old Man.

Since receiving the handbook I have moved the lamphouse back five inches, and get better definition. Wont tell you the line-up until I get the charts and see where I am at on the optical train.

Small town, small house, but we carry our air at correct pressure, ease 'em 'round the curves, whistle for all Xings and make station stops without jarring the patrons.

As for speed, well we don't exceed sixty-five at most and in absence of slow orders this works very well. I'm gonna cut down on my slide motion, get well hooked up and see if she won't work better still.

You've been there, I'll tell the whole wide world. "Slack the pin" was common thirty years ago, but the "pin" has gone the way of many other old-time things. It was the relic of the days when the experience of a switchman or brakeman who applied for a job was judged by the number of fingers he had missing.

For the Uninitiated.

For information of the uninitiated the "pin" was the coupling pin of the drawbars, which held the cars of the train together.

Well, Brother Boatright, when you "get a swing on 'em" I'll bet you'll be knocking the stars out of the sky with the "skyrockets" from your stack, and that you'll need no sand to keep 'em from "spinning" when you strike a "wet rail" (poor picture) or a heavy hill (bad weather). I am sure your "squirt" (injector) will always work well and keep the water level (income) well above the "crown sheet."

Glad the handbook has helped you already. The charts you have long since received, I have no doubt. Let us know how it works out.

We would add that those who find the charts to not work well (if there be any such) will confer a favor by reporting that fact. We do not want just the good reports, if there are any of the other kind. We want 'em all.

Makes a Long Jump

Our old friend, E. A. Shields, for many years projectionist in the leading theatres of Curtis street, Denver's "Great White Way," writes from Oakland, California, where he has journeyed, and now hath mind to set up his tent and stay.

We wish friend Shields good luck and happiness in his new home across the bay from the City of the Golden Gate. Shields is a good man and will make good whereever he goes. In this case we may truthfully quote the old, somewhat over worked country editor's favorite: "Denver's loss is Oakland's gain."

Reasons for Brown Ghost

Recently a Des Moines man wrote, complaining that he had a "brown spot in center of screen," which same usually developed rather suddenly when everything was O K and the screen perfectly clear.

I advised that the ghost was probably due to carbon core fault and that crater center was in too close focus at the screen. I referred the letter to Griffith because of some other matters optical on which his opinion was desired and he also commented on the ghost, as follows:

The brown ghost looks like loose carbon core or current drop. Watch ammeter. No use to move condenser, as slightest move of crater would move crater image from aperture. Maybe the particular brand of carbons being used do not work well with current of the generator. It frequently happens that carbons work well with one generator and not at all well with another. It may also be that the set of carbons is such that the current has a tendency to pull the core out of the carbon.

Well, I Dunno.

Well, I dunno. Seems to me current drop would have opposite effect, i. e., to discolor edges of screen, since it would operate to reduce size of crater, hence size of spot. That D C current from different generators does differ widely, and work very differently, I know of my own personal experience.

Why it is so I have never understood. That it affected the carbon in the sense of causing one carbon to work well and another badly on different generators I had never heard said before, nor did I observe this as being true when I was projecting.

Five In Or to One

There has always existed and does still exist some measure of difference of opinion as to the exact meaning of intermittent ratio of movement to rest as at present expressed. We think this has come about mainly because of the fact that there has, to some extent been two expressions used, which have two quite different meanings.

Some have used the term, which we hold to be correct, "Five to one," while others have sought to express the same thing by saying "One in five," which we hold to mean something very different.

Argument.

We hold "five to one" to be the correct expression (or six to one or four to one, or whatever it may be), and that the meaning conveyed is that the two added together make the total of divisions or periods of the movement under consideration. For instance: five to one (or one to five) very naturally, it seems to us, means a total of six periods, and that five of them are rest and one movement or action.

On the other hand, one in five would naturally be a five period movement, with one period devoted to movement and four periods to rest.

We shall present at the May meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, in Montreal, the following addition to the nomenclature already adopted by that body, viz: Five to one intermittent movement. A movement having a total of six periods, of which one period represents the time the intermittent sprocket is in movement, and five periods the time during which it is at rest. Other ratios of intermittent movement follow the same procedure.

Could you give me the name of a projectionist who has a correctly designed rewinder, or a sketch showing proper size pulleys.

I well remember publishing the required dope, but it was quite some time ago. Will some one who has a properly geared down rewinder send the necessary data as to pulley sizes, etc., either to this department or to the good brother himself at the Ballston Theatre, Ballston, New York.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E.T.KEYSER

The Lot Had Nineteen Feet of Frontage But They Built a Real Theatre On It

IN a recent issue we strongly advocated that the services of an architect with picture theatre experience be utilized in the planning of every picture house.

We stated that the benefits thus obtained were always worth many times the amount of the architect's fees, not only in better service, but in the direct cash saving which such services would effect.

As a concrete illustration of the correctness of our statement the 1,610-seat Victoria Theatre, of Shamokin, Pennsylvania, serves most admirably.

Here is the case in which an odd and apparent awkwardly shaped lot on a main street, undesirable for many purposes, was, through the skill of an architect who knew picture theatre requirements and possibilities, utilized for the erection of a particularly attractive house, and at least $10,000 saved in the purchase of the necessary real estate.

The architect in question is W. H. Lee, of Ritcher-Lee Company, architects and engineers, 32 South Seventeenth street, Philadelphia. Before Mr. Lee was called into consultation it had not occurred to the owners of the theatre that it was possible to erect a picture house on the property, and they were negotiating for a much more expensive plot, with a large frontage on the main street.

A Nineteen Foot Frontage.

As will be seen by referring to the plans on another page, the plot on which the house is erected has a frontage of but nineteen feet. One side of the plot is one hundred sixty feet and the other one hundred ninety-two feet long, and the rear line of the property measures one hundred twenty feet.

One of the illustrations indicates how well the apparently impossible narrow frontage was utilized to give an attractive appearance, and the plan shows the commodious lobby provided.

This lobby measures eighteen feet in width by twenty feet in length, with an entrance into the foyer of fifteen feet in the clear. To the right of the lobby, as one enters, is the ticket office, triangular in shape, and back of this the lounge, retiring room and toilet, all of which are entered from the foyer. To the right of the rear aisle is a second toilet, and to the left a check room.

Plenty of Aisle Space.

The parquet floor is laid out with two sides and two intermediate aisles. The side aisles are 3½ feet, and the intermediate aisles are four feet in width.

There are forty-one rows of seats, supplied by Heywood Brothers and Wakefield Company. Each seat is twenty inches wide.

In addition to the exits from the lobby there are three additional ones on the right hand aisle and also three on the left, and, as will be noted, the rows of seating designated as C-C., M, L, and H, are broken to give unimpeded passage to these side exits.

The balcony, which is reached by staircases from each side of the foyer, contains, in addition to six boxes, twenty rows of seats. The different sections of the gallery seats are separated by broad transverse aisles, which, in turn, are connected with each other by two aisles penetrating the upper, and three which pass through the lower banks of seats.

There are eight exits from the balcony floor, six of which connect with outside stair-ways.

The ventilating fans and organ chamber are installed above the boiler room.

Walls of Hollow Tile.

The walls are of Dennison Hollow Tile, and the steel roof trusses rest directly on these. The front is of brick and terra cotta.

The delay in procuring large quantities of steel necessitated the use of several posts for the support of the balcony, but these posts are so arranged that they do not interfere with the view of the screen, and every seat has clean sight lines.

The rewinding and projection rooms are located at the rear of the balcony floor and are entered by service stair-ways from the right hand side of the lobby entrance. Two Powers projectors are used in the projection room.

The heating system is operated by fans pulling the air through the ventilating radiators through the rear of the building and forcing it into the theatre through ducts in the side wall and under the floor. The registers are all placed about eight feet above the floor line. The foul air is exhausted through the registers in the floor by means of another fan system, thus avoiding loss of heat at ceiling and exhausting foul air at its source. The offices, ticket booth and rest rooms are heated by direct radiation.

Color Effects in Lighting.

The house is lighted by indirect fixtures placed in the dome back of the proscenium arch and under the balcony. This is supplemented by bracket lights distributed through the theatre. All lighting is controlled from the projection room, and three colors are utilized in the indirect system so that various color combinations may be secured when desired. The scheme of decoration is ivory, gold, light tans and browns. The wall panels are stenciled in imitation silk tapestry.

Throughout the house a fine quality of light red carpet is used, and, in order to keep down the expense, black iron railings, covered with velour, are used instead of brass railings, which require daily polishing.

Tell Us Your Troubles

WHENEVER any exhibitor or house manager runs up against a snag in the matter of equipment—its choice, use or installation; whenever you are in doubt as to just what you should do to make a new house attractive or improve an old one—ask the "Better Equipment" Department and we will dig up the dope for you. BUT don't forget to enclose a stamped return envelope with your inquiry.

How a Supply Dealer Keeps His Show Room Clear and His Stock Accessible

HERE is something that will interest you supply dealers. It is an illustration of the method by which B. F. Porter, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, keeps his stock of repair parts housed out of sight, but instantly accessible, and also a system by which a customer may instantly pick out the part which he wishes and know just what it will cost before he is waited upon.

Porter's counter is a trifle over 29 feet long. On the top rests a glass showcase in three sections. Each section is lined with black velvet, and against this background one sample of each of the spare machine parts is fastened. Each part is given a serial letter and a serial number, and this number and letter is indicated by a metal plate. The price of each part also appears on an attached price card. This is written in pen and ink and may be changed from time to time, as prices fluctuate.

Well Arranged Sections.

Beneath the counter is a series of sections, guarded by sliding doors with locks. In one section there are forty drawers, each not much larger than those of card index cabinet. In another section are twelve large drawers, and the remaining sections contain six larger drawers each. Each drawer is divided into three bins, and each drawer bears a serial number and each bin a serial letter.

When a customer points to a certain spare part and says, "Give me one of those," all the attendant has to do is to note the classification on the identifying plate. Suppose he wishes 31-B and the price card says $1.25, the attendant goes to drawer, 31, puts his hand in bin B, pulls out the part, charges the customer the price, and, at the same time, checks off one number on the perpetual inventory card, which he finds in the bin.

Customer Saves Time.

The customer saves time in making his purchase. He may not even know the name of the part which he is buying. He does not need to. It is displayed in the case, and both he and the attendant knows, without looking up a price book, just what it is going to cost.

The attendant saves time in locating stock and looking up prices, as each sale is recorded on the stock sheet as soon as made, Porter always knows how many

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

Three important reasons why the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System should be installed in your theatre NOW—

1 Because, during the hottest summer weather you will have the crowds coming to your house simply to cool off —TYPHOONS will do it.

2 Because, it was demonstrated last summer and summers previous that hot, stuffy theatres could not pay — people demanded summer comforts and they went where they could get them.

3 Because, your box-office receipts will jump with leaps and bounds. You will find yourself drawing more business than ever before. Prepare now for the summer rush. —Install TYPHOONS parts he has in stock, and when to order more.

The drawers and bins keep the stock dust-proof and rust-proof, and there is absolutely no stock lying around.

There is no reason why this same system may not be applied to all small devices and supplies sold by the equipment dealers.

Surplus stock may always be kept in the storeroom and the bins replenished from this surplus.

One rule that must always be followed is that no sample may be sold from the counter display, no matter how great the temptation.

The accompanying plans, which give the actual dimensions of Porter's layout, may be modified to suit the requirements of individual dealers, but they indicate plainly how a selling method like this may be installed and operated with a minimum of help, which, in these times of labor scarcity, is an item worthy of consideration.

These Exhibitors Are Now Ready for the Summer Heat

NOTWITHSTANDING the present cold weather, many exhibitors throughout the country have found it advisable to prepare now for the installation of their cooling and ventilating systems, realizing that when the warm weather does commence it will be money in the cash drawer to be prepared.

The Typhoon Fan Company of New York have recently closed contracts for the Typhoon Cooling system in the following theatres:

Oracle, Rock Springs, Wyo.; White Eagle, Toledo; Flash and Star theatres, Tonawanda, N. Y.; Colonial, Tarboro, N. C.; Criterion Amusement Co., Chattanooga; Strand, Amsterdam, N. Y.; Orpheum, High Point, N. C.; Grand, Anderson, S. C., and the Garing, Greenville, S. C.

Every time a local newspaper carries an advertisement concerning your theatre, have a "reading notice" go with it in another column. Get the full value of your investment.

The Emotional Factor

AN audience is more likely to listen sympathetically to an actor than to a lecturer. Why? Because he appeals to their emotions. The RITCHEY poster follows the same psychological procedure, and through its emotional appeal it convinces the mind. It appeals to one of the fundamental human emotions. Be it a subject depicting love, hate, sorrow or joy, the effect is always the same. It gets a sympathetic reaction! Further, as all people are in some degree emotional, its appeal becomes universal!

In the artistry and in the reality of that appeal the RITCHEY poster is marvelously effective. And it always shows a verisimilitude to nature so accurate and so sincere as to carry an absolute conviction. A conviction that leads to the ultimate purchase of a ticket.

That is the way the RITCHEY poster functions. It works from the heart, through the mind, to the pocketbook, and at each step on the way it gets the exactly right reaction.

MASTERPIECE OF MOTION PICTURES

"Courage of Marge O'Doone" Leaves Lasting Impression on All Who See It.

TELLS THRILLING STORY

It is seldom that a motion picture is produced that will leave the impression that James Oliver Curwood's "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" leaves upon audiences. It is truly a picture in a thousand and one that will long be remembered. The scenic beauty of the landscapes, the cleverness of the players, the intenseness of the story, the faithfulness of the director and the introduction of animals in strong roles are some of the things that make "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" different from the average picture.

Every member of the cast, which includes Niles Welch, Pauline Starke, George Stanley, Jack Curtis, William Dyer, Boris Karloff, Billie Bennett and James O'Neill, is indeed an all-star organization. Each player is an artist in his or her line and works in harmony with the others. The production moves like clock work, and even Tara, the trained bear, and Baree, the outlaw dog, seem to know what is expected of them. These dumb animals feel the importance of their roles and attack each piece of difficult business with all the cunning known to the animal kingdom.

If Director David Smith went after realism, he certainly got it and the atmosphere of the north as well. The picture was taken a few miles out from Truckee in the Rockies during a severe blizzard. The players withstood all of the hardships of a life far away from civilization in order to produce genuine color and the result obtained is worthy of all the sacrifices made. The savage dogs, the bear fight, the thrilling escape from "The Nest," the meeting of David and Marge, the death of Tavish and the scene on the mountains just as the dawn is breaking on a new day are some of the big situations that grip the spectator and are recalled long after the picture has fadded from the screen. It is a big production, handled in a big way and presented with all of the splendor and magnificence known to screen art. It is a travelogue as well as one of the most thrilling and interesting stories ever filmed.

Los Angeles, Calif.

My dear Mr. Kohn:-

We wish to compliment you on "THE ILLITERATE DIGEST" by Will Rogers, the Goldwyn star. This week's issue, which is now playing in this theater, is most laughable and entertaining and has been the subject of most favorable comment from our patrons.

Not alone do we wish to express our satisfaction at the clever witty sayings contained in "THE ILLITERATE DIGEST", but also at the high class manner in which the film is gotten up in the way of laboratory work. The toning, tinting, artistic titles and back grounds are the finest specimens of this class we have ever seen.

Taking everything into consideration, briefly we want to take this means of informing you that the Rogers sayings are well blended, snappy, entertaining and are going over very big at every performance here this week.

Wishing you continued success,

we are

Very truly yours,

But because my dollar sense is common sense—and because common sense history and the bankruptcy courts swear that nobody ever successfully played both ends against the middle—I'll take the advice of Fair and Square and defend your opportunities to better extend mine.

Various Czars, Kaisers, Sultans and Princes who never took much stock in the live and let live doctrine assure me that the grab-all game isn't what it's cracked up to be.

The more I produce for you, the more you'll produce for me. If the exhibitor isn't a success, I'm a failure.

"APPEALS TO EVERYONE"

Exhibitor's Herald

A GREAT ACTRESS

"Katherine MacDonald has avoided the mistakes of many rising young screen stars by showing that she can act and allowing her beauty to be a second consideration. In 'Passion's Playground,' Miss MacDonald runs the gamut from laughter to intense emotion. The picture is very dramatic and unusually interesting. A fine supporting cast adds to the class of the production. A very worthy and well-made production and should find favor everywhere. Play up the star who is becoming a big favorite, and pound home that it is a high class production, expensively made."—Moving Picture World.

EXCEPTIONAL ACTING

"The screen beauty, the seeming goddess of marble, Katherine MacDonald, really can act. Miss MacDonald's face has been her fortune, but she really lives, and moves and has a being—cries, laughs, faints, walks, emotes, and does all the necessary things to compel you to believe that she underwent all the trials and finally won out in 'Passion's Playground.' As is customary she has been placed in settings of beauty which add rather than detract from her own. The picture is extremely interesting and exceptionally well acted. Miss MacDonald is very pleasing, and the story is very melodramatic."

—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

APPEARS AT HER BEST

"The appeal in 'Passion's Playground' is universal. A story of Monte Carlo, it gives Katherine MacDonald an opportunity to appear at her best. Her magnificent gowns, in which she is photographed against the magnificent settings provided, make her striking beauty more than ever effective. Story dramatic and absorbing. Admirable supporting cast."—Exhibitor's Herald.

FULL OF THRILLS, ENTRANCING

"The charm of the star makes the picture enjoyable, for Miss MacDonald is very charming in this, and lovely to look upon as well. It will delight those who like society drama with a good bit of melodrama. Full of thrills, entrancing."

BEAUTIFUL AND CAN ACT

"Katherine MacDonald is an ideal heroine in 'Passion's Playground.' She is beautiful, she is young and she can act. She looks out on the world with extraordinary clearness and innocence—a true gift in the realm of filmdom. No false note is struck as Miss MacDonald portrays her role. Story is full of melodrama, with the light of pure romance. A truly Mediterranean atmosphere has been achieved by the splendid use of superb natural scenery."—Chicago Tribune.

Shall It Be Two Conventions or One?

PRESENT indications point to two exhibitor conventions in Cleveland, June 8 to 11. The Hotel Winton will be the scene of the gathering called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, announced definitely several weeks ago and intimated as long ago as the Utica convention. The other, according to the present outlook, will be held at the Hotel Cleveland under the auspices of the leaders of the recent Chicago sessions. That there is to be a division of exhibitor forces is matter for real regret on the part of all men of independent thought.

We pointed out last week that there seemed to be an absence of unanimity as to what in the view of exhibitor leaders constituted the chief evils to be combated by organization. At that time we noted the insistence of the Chicago faction on the importance of the distributor-exhibitor issue. The Theatre Owners did not in its statement of a week ago mention this particular item.

Sydney Cohen this week removes any doubt as to the position of the Theatre Owners regarding the producer-exhibitor. In the first paragraph of the statement sent out under his name he very frankly states the attitude as to this issue of the body of which he is the temporary chairman. It is in line with the demands of the men who went to Chicago at the end of April in response to the call sent out by Willard Patterson.

THIS means that so far as concerns the issues to be discussed there is no material difference of opinion between the two groups. There remain, then, as grounds for controversy the factors of men and methods. As to the second of these two there will be found on another page copies of letters which have passed between Mr. Cohen and the editor of the Moving Picture World and bearing on the plan of representation at the Hotel Winton convention. While the temporary chairman of the Theatre Owners does not make categorical answer to the queries propounded by the World he does state that the attitude of the convention will be one of great liberality. "I think every independent exhibitor ought to be admitted not only to membership," Mr. Cohen goes on, "but to a voice on the floor and especially in the important committees."

While the head of the Theatre Owners qualifies these expressions as being his personal opinion an examination of the letters will show the answer came fifteen days after the inquiry was sent. The significance of this lies chiefly in the fact that the delay indicates careful consideration was given to the subject by Mr. Cohen and his associates.

The letter from the head of the Theatre Owners goes far to remove any cause for friction as to methods. There remains then the important factor as to men, which being further reduced means whether the one convention shall be held at the Winton or the Cleveland, whether the official gathering shall be the one temporarily headed by Cohen or Rembusch. The original call was sent out by the former The decision at Chicago was that the delegates should attend "the" Cleveland convention, not "a" Cleveland convention. The burden of proof seems to be on Mr. Rembusch and his associates to show why there should be two conventions.

IT was believed in Chicago that the acrimony which developed on the afternoon of the second day had cleared the air and removed from the chests of the partisans those controversial matters which at exhibitor gatherings weigh so heavily upon them. A perusal of the communications this week from the respective headquarters shows that the belief was ill-founded. There is a renewal of the recriminations so destructive of harmonious effort and action, so successful in maintaining division among exhibitors.

"The way to resume is to resume," remarked a Senator from the state of Sam Bullock more than a generation ago. The way to get together is to get together is a paraphrase only too obvious. If Frank Rembusch were as diplomatic and tactful when he held a pen in his hand as he is when swinging a gavel it is the opinion of the Moving Picture World the get-together might be accomplished. For it is a fact the work of Mr. Rembusch at Chicago was unusually well done.

There are remaining before June 8 two full weeks—weeks that profitably may be employed in devising plans for harmony rather than in inventing epithets. Let's go!

The Censor: His Dislikes Predominate

THE Yale Review for April contains an article from the pen of Ellis P. Oberholtzer. The title of the essay is "The Moving Picture—Obiter Dicta of a Censor." Interesting withal is this grouping of views of "the thing called a moving picture," as the Film Overlord of Pennsylvania phrases it. There is praise and there is blame as well—the latter largely outweighing the former. For the general level of public taste as the Review writer sees it manifested in picture theatres he has no large respect.

As proof of his contention that it is fair to conclude the name of the picture is one-half of the battle for the man who has below standard wares for sale Mr. Oberholtzer quotes the titles of pictures in which are rung the changes on "virtue," "hell," "scarlet," "passion," etc. He concedes "The melodrama is not, of necessity, a nefarious form of theatrical entertainment." But why, he asks, should these melodramas be sent out into the world with such bold names?

In the inability of publishers to sell the dime novel as formerly, indeed at their recent want of power to sell great numbers of copies of books of any kind, the Keystone State censor thinks he sees the answer in the motion picture. "Literary industry has reached the limit of endurance after the nightly visit to the picture house," he declares. "A half dozen stories can be absorbed in pictures in the time which would be required to gather the sense out of one book." Every inclination which the boy ever had for the dime novel kind of reading is answered in the "crime serial,"

Cine-Mundial, the monthly Spanish edition of the Moving Picture World, is published at 516 Fifth Avenue by the Chalmers Publishing Company. It reaches the South American and Spanish-speaking market. Yearly subscription, $2. Advertising rates on application.

the censor insists: "The only point which I would make is that the dime novel is now a picture."

IN the same category as the fakir with a medical museum or the keeper of a book-stall up an alley with a volume about sex hygiene Mr. Oberholtzer classifies the man who makes pictures of unsavory character, those around subjects about which people, as a rule, do not freely speak. "Eugenics or not," he says, "such a topic can well be taught only in its own place, and I bar the moving picture theatre."

If in his four-thousand-word story Mr. Oberholtzer has one word of praise for the many splendid dramas that every year come to the screen we have failed to find it. The censor does wax enthusiastic over the news and travel weeklies. He quotes views of others that fifteen minutes for these out of two hours of pictures is inadequate.

"In the presence of such pictures school children and their teachers may well resolve to throw away their maps and globes and books," writes the Pennsylvanian after reference to scenics. "And yet so active is our dislike of being instructed in a place to which we have come for amusement that all but a few of us seem to regard the insertion of such matter into a program as a kind of intrusion."

AS to screen comedy the censor says it clearly is a going out in a new direction and that one must believe the adventure has been attended with success. Since the lamented departure of Sydney Drew, he declares, the comedy always is of the slapstick variety, and adds that not one speech or movement in the humorous picture could a parent of the most rudimentary of consciences recommend for imitation to a growing boy or girl. While disavowing a wish to complain of our civilization as it is reflected in film he concedes the comedy is funny "because all sorts and conditions of our fellow-beings madly laugh at it." He expresses the fear that unless the comedy-makers have reserve powers of inventiveness the ultimate point in the search for the universal and primitive chord in man's funny mechanism has been attained.

The conclusion of Mr. Oberholtzer's article takes up the particular subject which presumably looms largest on the horizon of the writer inasmuch as it has to do with his bread and butter—the subject of censorship. "The picture man resents control," he says. "He seeks refuge under the old provision of our bills of rights about liberty of speech and freedom of the press and tells us that some God-given privilege of his is being infringed when he is informed that it is undesirable for him to make and exhibit a picture of a woman who is unclothed * * *. I say that our freedom of speech is not for a man who has so low an estimate of his social responsibility."

AFTER citing the fact that Canada and four states are "provided with legal protection against injurious film" Mr. Oberholtzer declares "the number of states ready to deal with this topic needs immediate extension. When twenty populous states instead of four have commissions of this character working to a common end we shall dry up the source of the evil."

Mr. Oberholtzer discusses the motion picture in just about the fashion that one would expect from a professional censor. He is always an extremist, he distinctly is not the type of average man with whom you rub elbows in shop and office. He is narrow rather than broad. Instinctively you sense his belief in his own superior insight into the affairs of life and his inability to comprehend the viewpoint of the mass. You feel his education has compressed rather than expanded him. The blame for the present condition of "the thing called a moving picture" he places not on the producer or director, but on "the great average assortment of onlookers in the fifteen thousand moving picture houses set in every nook and cranny of America."

In other words, he indicts a people. "God must have loved the common people," said Abraham Lincoln, "he made so many of them." If it be true there are so many of them it is to be regretted, if censors we must have, that we cannot have censors from among them. But of course among them the professional censor is not—the ways of ordinary folk are not his ways; he is a thing apart.

Canadian Exhibitors Declare Dividend to "Co-Op" Members

A DIVIDEND of five per cent. has been declared by the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, Ltd., Toronto, which is the exchange organization operated under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, according to an official announcement by Thos. Scott, secretary-treasurer. The dividend is payable to shareholders who were recorded before April 1 last.

According to the latest official list, the representatives of no less than 110 different theatres in Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba are shareholders of the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange. The exchange was organized only one year ago and offices have been operated in Toronto and Montreal.

The purpose of the exchange is to protect independent exhibitors, and a considerable number of film subjects, including Hodkinson releases, have been secured for Canada. Officers of the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange are elated over the showing that has been made by the company during its first year.

Bill Against Lewd Films Passes

The U. S. Senate has approved the amended draft of the bill prohibiting the transmission through any common carrier of objectionable moving picture films. The bill was passed by the House some time ago, but as a result of changes made by the Senate committee on the post office, the measure will now have to go to a conference committee for adjustment.

Manners Loses in Supreme Court

The United States Supreme Court has denied the motion filed by J. Hartley Manners for a modification of the decree in the "Peg o' My Heart" case, under which it would be possible to exhibit moving pictures of the play at any time or place in the United States when and where the stage representation was not being given.

A. M. P. A. Co-operating with the National Board of Review

THE committee on co-operation with the National Board of Review authorized sometime ago by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers met recently in conference with representatives of the board. Paul N. Lazarus, who had been appointed chairman of the sub-committee by Paul Gulick, presiding officer of the Associated Advertisers, designated Lynde Denig and Vivian Moses as other members.

It was decided that a copy of the pamphlet issued by the National Board, entitled "Motion Pictures Not Guilty—Verdict based on reports from chief probation officers of juvenile courts throughout the United States," be sent to each member of the association. The pamphlet is of interest to film publicity men who not infrequently are called upon to answer this charge, as well as for the reason that the report contains criticisms of sensational and misleading advertising which it is the purpose of the association to combat.

Other plans were discussed upon which report will be made to the Associated as soon as they have been completed.

Drinkwater's "Lincoln" Now Protected by Federal Court

WILLIAM HARRIS, JR., who controls the producing rights for the United States and Canada of John Drinkwater's "Abraham Lincoln," has won in a federal action brought by him in Chicago to protect the title "Abraham Lincoln" as applied to a play, motion picture or dramatic composition. He has won a permanent injunction restraining Ralph T. Kettering, who was defendant in the suit, from using this title.

Mr. Kettering, who is publicity representative for Jones, Linick & Schaefer in Chicago, produced his play in Chicago, sent it on tour of the one night stands, and released it for stock companies. Because of his advertising this play as "Abraham Lincoln," Mr. Harris brought suit.

Rothapfel Opens Goldwyn's Milwaukee First-Run House

WITH Will Rogers in "Jubilo" as the attractions, the Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, was officially opened Wednesday, May 12, under the management of S. L. Rothapfel. The Merrill, one of the finest theatres in the state of Wisconsin, has been secured as Goldwyn's first run house in Milwaukee and will be conducted along the most advanced lines of showmanship, particular attention being paid to the presentation of the pictures and the musical program.

Battle Between Cohen and Rembusch Threatens a Split in Exhibitor Ranks When Conventions Meet in Cleveland

LATEST developments point toward a bitter controversy between different leading exhibitors on the one hand and exhibitors and some producing interests on the other at the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Cleveland from June 8 to 11. Out of the mass of literature mailed exhibitors during the past two weeks and received by Moving Picture World one fact stands out prominently: That Sydney S. Cohen, temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and Frank J. Rembusch, chairman of the Committee of Seventeen, have split. The former has sent out a call for a convention to be held at the Hotel Winton; the latter announces headquarters of the "Chicago" group as the Hotel Cleveland. Both factions charge that producing interests are responsible for the battle now apparently developing.

M. Van Praag, a fellow member of Mr. Rembusch's committee, comes out in open attack on the chairman, charging him with usurping power and acting in such a way as to tend to divide exhibitor strength.

Mr. Rembusch's committee makes an interesting report, naming those producing organizations which definitely subscribe to exhibitors' contentions that producers must not invade the exhibiting field and which promise to keep "hands off."

By SYDNEY S. COHEN

Temporary Chairman, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Editor Moving Picture World:

YOUR editorial article of May 22 on the coming Cleveland convention will no doubt be widely read and must have an influence on many exhibitors. You intended, of course, to give an accurate and impartial account of the situation as you saw it, for I can well understand that a consistent and honest support of the organized exhibitor is entirely compatible with a due regard for the interest of independent journalism.

Appreciating your good intentions, I feel it is my duty to enlighten you on the actual conditions which confront the motion picture theatre owners of the country at this hour.

Motion picture theatre owners are keenly alive to the dangers threatening them from the producer-exhibitor. They will under no circumstances and by no maneuvres whatever be diverted from organizing themselves into a powerful national body. They are not afraid of a fight in the open with the interests arrayed against them.

In fact, they are ready for a fight. The exploiting interests evidently do not want to fight us in the open. Neither their objects nor their methods can stand the light of publicity. A vigorous exhibitors' organization means an end of all the illegitimate drives for exhibitors' money; it means an end to the invasion of the exhibiting field by the producer; it means an end of extortion by way of deposits; it means an end to the craftily matured percentage plans; it means an end to the million dollars of graft the producers are collecting from improper advertising on our screens.

Unable or unwilling to fight us in the open; fearful of the just resentment of organized, independent exhibitors, the interests have resorted to the employment of a staff of accomplished smoke-screen artists either to prevent the convention or make a desperate attempt to break it up. In this way they hope to deal exhibitors anxious to organize another blow from which they may not recover for years to come.

They are directly or indirectly hiring notorious but irresponsible agitators and common scolds, to whom the publicity agents of these interests supply the ammunition they are to "shoot" at Cleveland. Fifteen thousand postal cards have been furnished by one large producing company to circularize the exhibitors of the country for a so-called second "convention" at a different hotel in the same city and at the same time selected by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Cohen Declares Independent Exhibitors Should Have Voice and Vote as Well as Membership on Important Committees

THESE two letters, one from the editor of the Moving Picture World and the other from Sydney S. Cohen, temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will be found of interest by exhibitors who are following the fast-moving incidents leading up to the Cleveland conventions:

May 4, 1920.

Dear Mr. Cohen:

At the recent convention of independent exhibitors in Chicago the question was asked: Are independent exhibitors or exhibitors unaffiliated with exhibitor organizations going to get a square deal in Cleveland? In order that there may be no misunderstanding on the floor of the convention, that every possible step be taken that will insure harmony of action among the hundreds expected to be present, that every effort be made to bring to Cleveland the most representative gathering of exhibitors the industry has known, may I ask you to indicate the attitude of your organization or, in the absence of any definite previous stand by the body, the action that you will recommend on the following questions:

1—Will every bona fide exhibitor unaffiliated with any exchange or producing interest be given a voice and vote on the floor of the convention?

2—Will each duly accredited delegate in voting be restricted to one vote or will he be permitted to cast more than one?

3—Will the combined delegates of any state organization in voting be permitted or authorized to cast votes equivalent in number to the exhibitor members of the organization they may represent?

I think you will agree with me that a clear understanding on these essential points will go far to eliminate friction at the Cleveland convention; that if your answer be satisfactory to unaffiliated exhibitors it will have important influence in increasing the number in attendance at Cleveland June 8.

With kindest regards to you personally and with every good wish for the full success of the large undertaking of yourself and your associates, believe me

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE BLAISDELL, Editor.

May 19, 1920.

Dear Mr. Blaisdell:

I beg to thank you for the interest which you have taken in the affairs of the organized exhibitor and which prompted you to ask certain questions regarding procedure and rules at the coming convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland, June 8 to 11.

I will say, as a matter of personal opinion, that the attitude of the convention will be one of great liberality. I think every independent exhibitor ought to be admitted not only to membership, but to a voice on the floor, and especially in the important committees.

Sincerely yours,

affair like the gathering at St. Louis, where a well-known opponent of the deposit system and former president of a national exhibitors' body was excluded from the privileges of the floor because he attempted to speak on the evils of the deposit system. The man who drove him from the floor at that time is today at the head of a large producing company, and was then known for his affiliation with producing interests.

The intention of the smoke-screen artists is to create confusion in the minds of independent exhibitors. They are trying to stage a producer-distributor-exhibitor convention at another hotel in Cleveland at the same time for which the convention of the thirty-two states has been called.

It is a story of unscrupulous scheming and desperate daring. These producing interests and their tools have thrown down a challenge to motion picture theatre owners. The next few weeks will show whether these men and these interests can "get away with it."

Will Gather at the Winton.

It all depends on us—on the men who own and operate motion picture theatres for a livelihood.

In conclusion let me repeat that the call to the Cleveland convention at the Hotel Winton comes from independent exhibitors prominent in organization work in thirty-two states. They decided upon Cleveland as the place and upon June 6 to 11 after careful deliberation for the time of their big meeting. They will gather at the Hotel Winton.

Straightforward exhibitors are in no mood for trifling. The smoke-screen artists and the professional disturbers may not know it, but they are labeled like a trunk that has made several trips around the world.

Rembusch Expects Organized Opposition to Purposes of Cleveland Convention

ORGANIZED opposition to the purpose of the national convention of independent exhibitors in Cleveland on June 8 is charged by Frank J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind., an as immediate aftermath to definite and official statements by seven companies that have production sources that they are in complete accord with the sentiments expressed at the Chicago meeting against producer-exhibitors, and that the production interests affiliated directly or indirectly with them are not now and will not become exhibitors.

Formal commitments from the seven companies were made to a sub-committee of the main Committee of Seventeen, appointed at the closing session of the Chicago convention two weeks ago to confer in New York on June 3-4 with producers and report their findings to the Cleveland assembly on June 8.

Seven Out of Eleven Answered.

Of a total of eleven organizations from which the sub-committee requested official declarations of intentions about the alleged producer-exhibitor situation statements were made by representatives of First National, Pathe, Robertson-Cole, Selznick, United Artists, Universal and Vitagraph to Mr. Rembusch, Louis F. Blumenthal, of New Jersey; Charles E. Whitehurst, of Baltimore, and William Brandt, of New York, who make up the membership of the sub-committee.

Each of these companies put itself on record to the general effect that producer-exhibitor competition is a serious obstruction to the welfare of independent theatre owners who have been and will be forced to meet this form of organized opposition without the controlled production resources which would make for competition on an equal footing. Each further declared that none of the stars, directors or producers associated with their respective organizations have failed to concur with the official opinion—that the exhibiting field should be intrusted exclusively to independent theatre owners.

Allege Hostile Preparations.

The four remaining concerns with which the sub-committee communicated had failed to file with it any answer to the question of attitude and policy on the subject when the members adjourned their New York meeting.

The allegation that a carefully prepared attempt is in formation to block any concerted action against producer-exhibitors by the independent theatre owners who will meet in Cleveland is made by Mr. Rembusch through the publicity committee for the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America.

"This opposition," declares Mr. Rembusch, "was discovered entirely by accident. There are certain interests that will attempt, through exhibitor representatives they will have on the floor of the Cleveland meeting in the guise of independents, to clog the convention with issues, discussions, protests and arguments entirely apart from the one big, main purpose of the assembly. Of this I am confident from a chance remark made to me over the telephone in New York by the executive head of the eleventh company we approached as a sub-committee.

Predict Failure of Opposition.

"Something of this kind was apparent in an unorganized way at the mass meeting called by Mr. Patterson in Chicago, when the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America was formed. Practically an entire day was lost in overcoming this effort to antagonize Mr. Patterson's plan for a national exhibitor defensive body against the theatre opposition of producers. I believe that this effort will be repeated in Cleveland, with organized method and concerted action by its sponsors as the means to an end which failed in Chicago.

"It is freely predicted on all sides, however, that any such action as set forth above will meet with the same measure of failure as it did in Chicago. The movement of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America has gained such momentum since its organization that there is no room for the errors which have been evident at past conventions, at which exhibitor activities have been eclipsed by a few who talked the convention to death.

Film Service Agreements.

"Indications are that exhibitors from all sections of the country in greater numbers than ever before are preparing to attend the Cleveland convention with the set purpose of settling for all time the question of whether a producer should try to monopolize theatres or control motion picture houses. It has been agreed that all producers should get out of the theatre business or not go into it at all. It also has been agreed that independent exhibitors buy their film service exclusively from film companies who agree to this in writing. That seven out of eleven producers questioned favor this plan is taken as an indication of the strength of the independent exhibitors at the Cleveland convention."

It is estimated that exhibitors to the number of 5,000, present in person or represented by proxy, will subscribe in Cleveland to an open declaration of organized opposition to producer-exhibitor competition. Also as stated last week ,the Committee of Seventeen, through its chairman, will submit a detailed account of its New York meeting, putting the producers on record regarding their stand. This will show all exhibitors exactly what the producers intend to do, and actions.

Add Goldwyn, American Film and Associated Producers

Since the accompanying article was written word has been received from Frank J. Rembusch as follows:

"Add American Film Company and 'Big Six' to the list of our friends. This makes nine big producers ready to give us all the pictures we need and sign a contract not to go into the theatre business.

"Goldwyn has announced that it would not go into the theatre business. Only two or three more and it is unanimous."

Van Praag Launches Attack Against Frank J. Rembusch

Editor Moving Picture World:

M. VAN PRAAG, secretary of the Kansas State Exhibitors' Association and a member of the committee of seventeen recently appointed at the Patterson conference at Chicago to prepare a report to the Cleveland convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on the attitude of the producers in regard to theatre buying, asks you, in justice to the organization he represents and for the enlightenment of the motion picture theatre owners throughout the country, to publish the facts concerning the activities of his committee and the attitude of the chairman of the full committee, Frank Rembusch.

A delegation of the organized exhibitors of Kansas attended the conference called at Chicago by W. C. Patterson, of Atlanta. We were invited by Mr. Patterson to take part in the deliberations of the conference and to advise with him and other exhibitors on the possibilities of forming a national exhibitors' organization. Our primary object, as I understood it, was to keep the producer from making continued inroads upon the exhibiting field.

Purpose of Committee of Seventeen.

A committee of seventeen, representative of almost every section of the country, was appointed and instructed to meet at the Hotel Astor in New York City at least two weeks before the convention to be held at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland, June 8 to 11. The committee of seventeen was to meet with the producers to get a frank statement as to where they stood on the question of the producer acquiring ownership of picture theatres. After the meeting the committee was to go directly to Cleveland to report to the convention.

Directly after the convention at Chicago the committee went into session. Two sub-committees were formed, one, composed of Messrs. Rembusch, Whitehurst and Blumenthal, was to go to New York in advance of the meeting of the full committee to arrange meetings with the producers.

The second sub-committee, composed of H. W. Kress, H. C. Farley and M. Van Praag, was to go to Cleveland prior to the meeting in New York of the full committee and learn what arrangements had been made for the convention. This sub-committee met at the Hotel Statler in Cleveland on May 5 and had a conference with Henry Lustig and Samuel Bullock, the latter being the temporary secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Both these gentlemen gave the members of the sub-committee a detailed account of the arrangements that had been made for the Convention, and the members of the sub-committee unanimously agreed in their report to the chairman of the full committee that the arrangements made for the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were entirely satisfactory. The committee suggested that the full committee should meet as instructed by the Chicago conference with the gathering of independent exhibitors as gathered by the Motion Picture Theatre of America, and proceed further in accordance with the definite instructions of the Patterson conference.

The report of the sub-committee had been made verbally to Chairman Rembusch and he had been informed that the sub-committee had unanimously indorsed the arrangements made for the convention called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Under these circumstances I am unable to understand the attitude of the chairman, Mr. Rembusch, in not only disregarding the report of the sub-committee, but in usurping the power of the directing committee and telling exhibitors by means of circulars that he has called a convention of his own at a different hotel, claiming to act by the authority of the temporary conference at Chicago. Such a move on the part of Mr. Rembusch unquestionably tends to divide the strength of the exhibitors and to defeat the very object for which the Chicago meeting had been called, especially since it has been proved that the money and the means for circularizing exhibitors for the second "convention" has been furnished by one of the large manufacturing interests.

For ten years exhibitors have followed this same leadership, which has always been, sometimes directly and sometimes indirectly, under the influence of the producer. The result is that we stand today in the same unorganized and disorganized condition in which we found ourselves ten years ago.

Charges Attempt to Divide Exhibitors.

The calling of the second "convention" at Cleveland on the same days as the original convention called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America again brings up the spectre of the producer-exhibitor. Speaking not only for myself, but for the organized exhibitors of Kansas, I want to say that we regard the calling by Mr. Rembusch of a second convention at a different hotel, authorized by nobody but himself, as an attempt to divide exhibitors, which, however, we believe will fail completely.

Don't let us block the good work being done. At last we are on the right track. Don't let us play into producers' hands, but meet in one big national united gathering at the Hotel Winton in Cleveland, June 8 to 11.

M. VAN PRAAG.

H. B. Franklin's Statement.

H. B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, of Cleveland, and a member of the executive committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League, has sent out letters in which he urges the largest possible attendance of exhibitors at the convention to be held in the Hotel Winton.

"Leave home your ivories, booze, animosities, jealousies," he says. "Go to Cleveland prepared for work—good, hard, constructive work. Here is your opportunity to build a solid foundation for the future of your business, one that will withstand all onslaught."

William Brandt Invites Warring Factions to Meet

BECAUSE the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are to hold two separate conventions in Cleveland on June 8, and because the former organization is to have a preliminary meeting in New York City on June 3, William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York, has invited Sig Samuels, secretary of the former body, and Sam Bullock, secretary of the latter body, to appoint committees to meet in New York on June 3 in the interests of harmony.

Mr. Brandt hopes in this way to bring about a consolidation of the warring factions and a united convention in Cleveland on June 8. He invites the committees to become guests of his organization at a luncheon to be held at the Hotel Astor at 1 p. m., June 4.

"I Claim Sacred Right To Be Let Alone," Says Lawyer, Protesting Censorship Bill

EACH member of the Massachusetts Senate, which is considering the motion picture censorship bill, has received a letter from Frederic Cunningham, prominent Boston lawyer, protesting against the measure. "Vain efforts to make us good by law may finally succeed in stifling our race of free men and make slaves of us," he says, commenting on "further abridgement of personal rights and liberties."

Mr. Cunningham said in his letter: "As a lawyer who has practiced at the bar for forty-two years and as a plain American citizen, I want to enter my protest against any further abridgement of our personal rights and liberties, with particular reference at the present time to the bill for the establishment of a censorship of motion pictures.

"We don't want to be told any further than we have been what we shall eat, nor what we shall drink, nor what we shall wear, nor what we shall read, nor what we shall write, nor what we shall look at, nor what our children shall look at, nor how to bring up our children, nor how to conduct our own business.

"Those things have gone far enough. We have been passing laws in this community for the control of vice for nearly 300 years, and if we have not got enough of them on the statute books already we have not been very smart, and I am certainly no lawyer.

"If you could make people good by law we should have been successful long ago. What we want is virtue, the power to resist evil, not innocence; ignorance of evil is dangerous.

"A censorship of anything is thoroughly un-American; it starts with the assumption that a man is wrong until he has been proven right. Our American ideals and system of laws start with the assumption that a man is right until he is proved wrong.

"A censorship punishes the large majority of innocent persons in order to reach the small minority of vicious ones. There is no need of any such thing in our state today. There is plenty of law on the books to keep the state clean if public sentiment demands its enforcement.

"We are seeing today our liberties disappear one by one and are being regulated to death and beyond endurance. I claim the sacred right to be let alone.

"The small boy after a Thanksgiving dinner was asked if he wanted some more ice cream. He shook his head sadly and gasped 'too much is enough.' I say that to you. We must beware lest continued vain efforts to make us good by law may finally succeed in stifling our race of free men and make slaves of us."

William Fox Reports Plans Perfected for International Convention, May 24

THE sixth annual convention of Fox Film Corporation will occur at the Hotel Commodore, New York, beginning Monday, May 24. It will bring together the branch managers and district sales heads from offices of the firm in all parts of this country. Furthermore, it will bring together, for the first time in the life of the organization—as well as for the first time in the history of the motion picture industry—representatives from the firm's offices in all parts of the civilized world.

Cablegrams received from Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the corporation, promised his return from Europe in time to preside over the convention, and according to reports he will reach New York this week.

For the formal opening of the new Fox building on West Fifty-fifth street on May 24, the entire party of branch and district managers and special travelling representatives will be on hand.

Special prints are being prepared on forthcoming productions starring William Farnum, Pearl White, Shirley Mason, Tom Mix, Buck Jones and Vivian Rich, and on the first of the vehicles in which Eileen Percy is being starred by William Fox. These will be projected before the convention delegates at the new building, and the exploiting of them will be thoroughly discussed.

Announcements of plans for the coming season will be made by Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan. These will include the distribution of big special productions—some already completed and other still in the making—in both the East and West Coast studios under the direction of such well-known men as Richard Stanton, Charles J. Brabin, Hampton Del Ruth, J. Gordon Edwards and Harry Millarde.

One announcement is that each of the Fox exchanges located in the principal cities of the world will be equipped shortly to maintain an efficient exploitation department for the benefit of exhibitors.

Revolution of Exhibitors in Southwest Threatens Rule of Hulsey-Lynch Combine

DIVERTING the co-operative exhibitor strength of its entire membership to the aid of fellow independents in the Southwest, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., through its executive personnel, has launched what promises to be one of the most decisive campaigns in film history to maintain "a place in the sun" for independent theatre owners in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Their proffered aid accepted by a committee representing more than 300 independent exhibitors in the three states, officials of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., have precipitated an open break with E. H. Hulsey, owner of the original First National franchise for that territory, by opening a new exchange in Dallas, and pledging, through sub-franchise grants, the independently produced releases now contracted for by Associated First National Pictures to a chain of a million dollar theatres to be erected immediately in Dallas, Forth Worth, Houston, San Antonio and other important points by independent exhibitors now competing with Hulsey-Lynch controlled houses.

Two Factors Now in Southwest.

This, it is said, constitutes the most drastic and sweeping action ever taken by a national group of independent theatre owners in defense of individual exhibitor interests in any one territory, and it is pointed out by the committee of southwestern exhibitors that it is the first time that country-wide assistance from independent theatre owners has been rallied for the protection of showmen in a particular district.

It is expected that the action of Associated First National Pictures will divide the Southwest into two opposing groups of theatre owners. One will be the Hulsey-Lynch consolidation, owning and operating the theatre properties which were included in the merger of last winter, and depending, in the main, on the production sources controlled in the Southwest by S. A. Lynch for the major portion of the film supply for this chain of houses.

The large field of unorganized independent exhibitor opposition which to date has been more or less ineffectual in checking the increasing theatre acquisitions of the Hulsey-Lynch interests, now becomes a unit, with equal advantages in having a bona fide quarter from which to obtain continuous film service. This grouping of the independents with sub-franchises in Associated First National as the impelling force for co-operative action, creates the division which now gives the Southwest two factions.

The committee of exhibitors, consisting of J. A. Horton, of Port Arthur, Texas; Saul Harris, of Little Rock, Ark.; Tom Boland, of Oklahoma City; Walter Faerman, of Bryan, Texas; E. T. Peters, of Dallas; Ben Lewis, of El Paso; H. S. Cole, of Ranger, Texas; C. J. Mushelman, of Paris, Texas; and H. S. Ford, of Dye, Ford and Rogers, of Wichita Falls, and Amarillo, Texas, came to Dallas with authority from an aggregate of more than 300 independent exhibitors, representing a total of 500 theatres in the three states, to sanction, in their behalf, whatever plan of action resulted from the committee's conferences with Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National; H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer; J. D. Williams, manager, Sol Lesser, of Los Angeles, N. H. Gordon, of Boston, and Moe Mark, of New York, who, with Mr. Schwalbe, compose the executive committee.

Need for new and suitable theatres of sufficient capacity and luxuriousness of appointments to be the equal, if not the superior, of any others in the Southwest as the independently operated housing places for Associated First National attractions, was explained to the exhibitor committee by the New York officials.

Assured Permanent Film Source.

Upon assurance that new theatres of the magnitude proposed would be granted sub-franchises, the exhibitor committee pledged itself to start plans immediately for the construction of new houses in Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio and other important cities and towns in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. In each instance the new houses will be built and operated by independent exhibitors now conducting theatres in each of these centers. Associated First National members, it is said, will have no equity of any description in these properties beyond extending their co-operation through sub-franchise awards.

"The situation is remarkable in many respects," reads a statement from First National, "but the disposition of the independent exhibitors in the Southwest to fortify themselves with theatre holdings equal to any controlled by their organized opposition is more than sufficient evidence that they are entirely capable of holding their own if they have assurances of permanent sources for film, and these asurances have been made to them.

"Many of the leading independent exhibitors in the three states have withheld all plans for new theatres, or for improvements to present holdings, pending an adjustment of the First National matter. They realized, of course, that Mr. Hulsey as owner of the original First National franchise, would, as a matter of business, continue to book the Circuit's attractions into the Hulsey-Lynch houses in every city where they are represented, and that the rumored plans afoot for acquiring at least one theatre in every city and town of consequence in the three states, if carried out, would automatically eliminate First National and Paramount pictures from independent screens wherever they were competing with Hulsey-Lynch theatres.

"This problem, according to the committee of Southwestern exhibitors, was greater than may be realized by exhibitors in other territories where no parallel condition has existed. Mr. Hulsey did not join the other members of First National in signing the agreements for extending the exhibitor representation by membership in Associated First National to approximately 6,500 theatres, and because of this it was decided to give the main franchise in the latter organization into the keeping of a large group of independent exhibitors who have pledged themselves to provided theatre facilities adequate for all purposes."

At the request of the exhibitor committee, J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National, agreed to return to Dallas before the end of May to complete the organization of an exchange staff and to assist members of the committee in completing plans for the erection of their new theatres.

Samuel Goldwyn, Back from Europe, Plans Further Expansion with Rosy Prospects

BACK from two months in England and on the Continent, Samuel Goldwyn held a reception for newspaper folk at his office in Fifth avenue Tuesday noon, May 18. Mr. Goldwyn declared that picture production in England was surging forward, after the restraint of war curbs; that picture theatres are multiplying, regardless of the "luxury building" regulations; that American pictures were serving as efficient introduction of our native customs and habits to all nations of the world, and that America was never likely to be forced out of its supremacy in film production.

Mr. Goldwyn declared that the screen had undergone a great rejuvenation in the fancy of Britishers; that films were an amusement craze, and that even the Government itself had determined to use educational subjects in schools to more quickly impress the student with the lessons under consideration. Industrial films, said Mr. Goldwyn, are eagerly sought by the English public, the method of industrial procedure in America being of general interest.

Plans No Exhibiting Monopoly.

Only one day and a half ashore, Mr. Goldwyn "begged the question" when it came to the subject of the Capitol Theatre management. He said that Goldwyn's interests were allied with an influential group of capitalists whose entry into filmdom meant a great deal to the industry in general.

He said that Goldwyn had no intention to create any exhibition monopoly, but would see that its interests were protected in towns where they were "shut out." The printed story that vaudeville interests would control the Capitol was denied by Mr. Goldwyn with emphasis. The president of Goldwyn also denied that his position or interests in the corporation had been in the slightest disturbed, rumors to the contrary notwithstanding.

More Than Twenty Features Ready.

Asked about plans for the coming season, Mr. Goldwyn declared that the matter of "scope and plan" was still undetermined. He declared, however, that Goldwyn right now had more than twenty feature productions completed and ready to market at such time as might be later determined.

"It will be the middle of June," said Mr. Goldwyn, "before we will announce our plans. It will be six months before we begin making pictures in England as we have planned. It will be still further along before we get production under way in France. But in both of those countries we have formed corporations for the purpose of producing pictures under the American method, with English and French capital concerned in the respective concerns."

"Goldwyn is still growing," said Mr. Goldwyn. "It's my 'baby' and I am going to see that it continues to grow."

Congress Will Not Act This Session on Legislation Involving Daylight Saving

THERE will be no federal legislation at this session of Congress involving daylight saving. The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has declined to hold any extended hearings on the bills now pending and Chairman Esch announced last week that the committee, a majority of which is hostile to the proposal, does not want to listen to long arguments.

There has been some pressure on the committee for a hearing on bills that have been introduced this session providing for daylight saving in the first zone. That would cover the entire New England states and the greater part of the Middle Atlantic states. The motion picture men of these sections have not taken kindly to the proposal because of the losses they would sustain. During the war, for patriotic reasons, they made no protest against daylight saving and lost heavily because of the inability to do business with the first show of the evening and because the people devoted themselves to other things which left no time for the theatres.

In compliance with these requests, the committee decided to sandwich in a hearing at the first opportunity. This came the latter part of last week, but there was no time to send out a general notification of this intention, with the result that only the Congressional sponsors of the bills were present. Protest was made and this led to the statement by Chairman Esch outlined above and the added remark, in response to a request for a postponement until the following week, that if the hearing was not held as scheduled it could not be held at this session of Congress.

Those favoring this legislation declare it to be necessary in order to straighten out some of the confusion that has arisen as a result of some of the cities and towns adopting local ordinances providing for daylight saving and twisting up railroad connections.

Cincinnati School Officials Change Their Attitude on Films

A RADICAL departure from their previous attitude, the Cincinnati Board of Education has now given official approval to certain classes of motion pictures and is fostering special children's matinees on Saturdays. This is a reversal of the previous views of the Cincinnati school officials. Until this new movement, it was a demerit for any pupil who admitted attending a movie at night. The School Index, official organ of the schools, was not permitted to carry moving picture advertising and the general attitude was highly antagonistic.

A Community Moving Picture Council has been formed by the Federated Mothers' Clubs, sanctioned and sponsored by the Board of Education. This Council is giving a weekly Saturday morning matinee at the Orpheum Theatre, Walnut Hills, a suburb of Cincinnati. And the success of the performances so far is leading to plans for extending the matinees to other suburbs. Manager Fred Strief of the Cincinnati office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Manager Andy Hettesheimer of the Orpheum are co-operating with the women's committee in providing pictures. "Huck and Tom," "Tom Sawyer," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and other Paramount and Artcraft pictures are being booked, including the Briggs comedies.

Howells, Inc., Expands Its Foreign Distribution by Absorbing Firm of J. Frank Brockliss

DAVID P. HOWELLS has been elected president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., and under the terms of a deal recently consummated the business of the Brockliss corporation will hereafter be conducted by the Howells organization. Sidney Garrett, president of the Brockliss company has resigned to devote his entire time to production. While the identity of the Brockliss corporation will be continued, its business will be amalgamated with the business of David P. Howells.

J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., has been one of the important factors in the foreign distribution of motion pictures. The Brockliss corporation has maintained exchanges in London, Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, Newcastle, Birmingham, Glasgow, Cardiff and Dublin, and has had representatives in Paris, Turin, Barcelonia, Brussels, Copenhagen, Sydney, Capetown, Bombay and Tokio.

The executive offices of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., will be merged with the executive offices of David P. Howells, Inc., in Suite 1101-1102 729 Seventh avenue, New York, but for the immediate present the London office of J. Frank Brockliss will be maintained at 167 Wardour street, while the David P. Howells office will be continued at 29a Charing Cross Road, London.

Has Resident Heads in Big Foreign Cities.

The absorption of the Brockliss Company is an evidence of the expansion of the interests of David P. Howells in the field of international film distribution. The Howells company has just recently increased its office space on the eleventh floor of the Godfrey Building.

The Howells company maintains at the present time branch offices with resident managers in London, Paris and Stockholm, with representation in the principal cities of Europe, South America and the Orient. Horace T. Clarke of the Howells organization is now in Japan and Chester E. Sawyer is in Buenos Aires, while William Fait, Jr., has just returned from Mexico City.

In taking over the Brockliss company, the Howells organization now controls, in addition to the productions of the First National Exhibitors Circuit and Associated First National Pictures, Inc., world rights on a large part of the pictures distributed by the Hodkinson exchanges. Mr. Howells controls as well the Selznick productions, Metro Screen Classics and the Nazimova productions for the Far East.

Quick-Thinking Actor Escapes from the Snare of the Fowler and Shows a Way to Beat Cops

BULL MONTANA, Marshall Neilan's heavyweight actor, was about to leave his bank the other day after depositing part of his weekly stipend, when through the window he sees a traffic officer hunking the horn of his car. All of a sudden "Bull" realizes that he has parked his car in front of a fire-hydrant and that the officer is ready to take him to court and impose the heavy fine or jail according to the law of that community.

In a flash the quick thinking Mr. Montana is out of the bank via another entrance and calling up the Police Department. He reports that his car has been stolen, gives his license number and his studio address.

Four hours later his friend the cop, drives up to the studio with the car and turns it over to the owner, his chest expanding the while as he relates how he traced the "stolen" car to its lair.

Moral: Think before you pay your traffic fines.

Associated Exhibitors, Inc., goes on Record Against "Screen Spotting"

THAT the situation leading up to the forthcoming Cleveland convention is serious and demands definite action, is set forth by an official of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., in a statement just issued to the trade press. It is maintained that independent exhibitors are reiterating their endorsements of the co-operative exhibitor organization.

Interest attaches to such indorsements in that the general trend of thought is to the effect that co-operative organizations conducted on a basically sound and equitable plan will also prove weapons powerful enough to swing the balance of control of the situation into the hands of the independent exhibitors. This is declared to be a desirable consummation.

One of the plans of the Associated Exhibitors' platform that is attracting favorable comment is Associated's stand in regard to advertising on the screen. According to Associated's officers, no pictures carrying the Associated trade-mark will contain even the slightest hint of commercial advertising.

Declares Against Screen Adverts.

In the words of one of the exhibitor officers of Associated the question of advertising in films is much more vital to the exhibitor than is generally believed.

"Exhibitors have been used as tools by producers in scores of ways," said this officer, "and the matter of advertising, while by no means the biggest of these ways, has been one of the most annoying. Producers have been appropriating the publicity of our screens by injecting commercial advertising in pictures that are supposed to be pure entertainment. This sharp practice has netted the producer quite a neat sum.

"There will be no advertising in Associated pictures. It is obviously impossible for them to contain such matter, inasmuch as it is the men who present the pictures who control their making."

Numa Engages Reichenbach

Harry Reichenbach has been engaged by Numa Pictures Corporation to conduct a special exploitation campaign on "The Return of Tarzan," which will be distributed by Goldwyn as a special. One of his latest exploitation campaigns was waged in behalf of "The Virgin of Stamboul." Until recently Mr. Reichenbach conducted all exploitation for the Equity Pictures Corporation.

Fairbanks' "The Mollycoddle" Listed for Release on June 13

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS established a new record for the cost of production, eclipsing all high marks since the beginning of his screen career, when he finished the filming, this week, of "The Mollycoddle," his third United Artists' picture.

The expenditure on "The Mollycoddle," according to figures compiled by John Fairbanks, general manager, and Leeds Baxter, auditor, is greatly more than that spent on any previous production.

"The Mollycoddle" is now in the hands of the cutters, who are working night and day under the supervision of the star and Director Victor Fleming.

Hiram Abrams announces that this picture will be ready for release June 13.

Fairbanks has given the world many spectacular productions during the past four years, but, according to those who have viewed early screenings of "The Mollycoddle," this latest "Big Four" offering excels all others.

Wallace Beery makes his debut as a Fairbanks player and in a character in keeping with his particular line.

Among the others who have important parts are Betty Bouton, Adele Farrington, Charles Stevens, Lewis Hippe, Morris Hughes, Paul Burns, Albert MacQuarris and George Stewart.

"The Mollycoddle" is quite a departure from anything Fairbanks has ever done before. The story is his original idea built up on the themes of heredity and environment. The scenario was prepared by Tom Geraghty.

Billie Burke in Fitch Play

Marking a departure from the type of plays in which she has been appearing, the first picture which Billie Burke will make under her new contract for a series of Paramount Artcraft pictures will be "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," an adaptation of the comedy by Clyde Fitch, which, when it was first produced in 1902, was one of the season's greatest successes.

"The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," while replete with humor, is somewhat in a more serious vein than the stories which Miss Burke has heretofore appeared in for Paramount, and the star is looking forward to beginning work June 1.

The scenes of the play are laid in Paris during carnival time and are embellished with a wealth of the atmospheric detail.

Ralph O. Proctor in Middle West

Ralph O. Proctor, assistant general manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has left New York for a short trip in the Middle West. Mr. Proctor, who is making the trip in the interests of Associated, will hold important conferences with franchise holders and others.

Chicago Censorship Commission Offers Drastic Ordinance to Protect Children

AFTER a period of twenty months spent in investigation, the Chicago Censorship Commission met in the Council chamber of the City Hall, Friday afternoon, May 14, to discuss the report of its chairman, Timothy D. Hurley, and teh tentative ordinance which he has drawn up. During this time, Mr. Hurley asserts that he has considered the exhibition of moving pictures from many angles, and he has concluded that certain drastic measures should be taken to prevent the showing of objectionable films. In various consultations with producers, editors, doctors, lawyers, clergymen and school teachers he has discovered that he is not alone in his convictions.

"I do not consider that the commission has taken an unreasonable length of time in which to draw up a report that will be presented to the judiciary committee," Chairman Hurley said. "In England over one year and a half was devoted to just such a task as we have undertaken. In my mind it is a far bigger question than that of 'transportation,' 'electric lights,' 'liquor traffic' or any of the other matters that have absorbed so much time and attention from civic organizations."

Would Create New $18,000 Board.

Most important among Mr. Hurley's proposed ordinance changes is the creation of an entirely new board to be known as the Motion Picture Department, and to be vested with full power to act on the exhibition of films in Chicago. By this measure, the authority would be entirely removed from the police department. The new department would be composed of three members, two men and one woman, each of whom would receive a salary of $6,000 a year. Every picture shown in Chicago would have to bear the department's stamp of approval. The abolition of the pink permit system and the submission of all advertising signs to the board's approval are provided for in other sections of the ordinance.

"I have drawn up this ordinance without any arbitrary intentions," Mr. Hurley said. "It is subject to any changes or curtailment that the commission, as a whole, may decided upon. It was my expectation that it should be thoroughly discussed by the censorship commission first, before it is submitted to the judiciary committee and thence to the City Council.

Causes Neurasthenia in Young, He Says.

"The moving picture people are opposed to legal censorship. I have discovered this to be a certainty. But in talking over current movies with some of the producers themselves, I learned that they are unwilling to allow their own children to see much that is now presented on the screen. But how many children are there who are not fortunate enough to have discriminating parents! It is they who are endangered, mentally, physically and morally. I have a well-known physician's word for it that if a child is allowed to spend more than an hour and a half weekly at the movies, he will become neurasthenic. In Chicago, 1,000,000 children go to the movies. The importance of censoring films for their sakes is too evident to need discussion."

The commission adjourned after a unanimous decision to study the ordinance individually and come prepared, Friday, May 21, to discuss its proposals, chiefly the one relating to the creation of the new department.

Section 4, which is by far the most important of the twelve comprising the proposed ordinance, is given in full here, for the information of readers of Moving Picture World. Another is Section 5, which governs the issuance of permits.

The Important Sections.

Section 4—There is hereby established an executive department of the municipal government of the City of Chicago, which shall be known as the Department of Motion Pictures, and which shall be in charge of and under the supervision of three members to be appointed by the mayor, by and with the consent of the City Council. One of said members shall be a woman; one member shall be a person who has been directly and solely engaged in educational work for at least ten years, immediately preceding his appointment and one member who shall have been actively engaged in business or professional life for a period of ten years. Two members of said department shall constitute a quorum. No member of said department shall hold any other lucrative office of employment under the United States, the State of Illinois, or any municipal corporation, or political division thereof, and each member of the deartment shall devote the business hours of the day to the work of the department. Each member of said department, before entering upon the duties of the office, shall take the oath prescribed by the constitution of this state. At the first meeting of the members of the department, they shall select from among their number a chairman, who shall preside at all meetings of the department, and a vice-chairman who shall, in the absence of the chairman, preside at the meetings, and a secretary from among their number, who shall keep and preserve all records of the department, and of its acts and doings. The members of said department may be assisted from time to time in the work of the department by any person or persons assigned to the department by the civil service commissioners of the city.

It shall be the duty of the said Department of Motion Pictures to pass on all applications for permits for exhibition of motion pictures; to issue said permits or to reject all such applications, if the picture or series of pictures accompanying said application violates the provision of this ordinance.

Before any permit, as provided for in Section 1 hereof, is granted, an application in writing, shall be made therefor, and the films, plates, rolls or other like apparatus by or from which such pictures or series of pictures are produced, or the picture or series of pictures are shown or exhibited, shall be deposited with the Department of Motion Pictures, together with said application. Said Department of Motion Pictures shall inspect or cause to be inspected, such plates, films, rolls, or other like apparatus, or the said picture or series of pictures, and shall within five days find whether or not such picture or pictures comes within the prohibitory provisions of Section 5 of this ordinance, and what provisions, if any thereof, are violated. A written record shall be kept by the secretary of such findings, which record shall, at all times, be open to public inspection. In the event that two members of the said Department of Motion Pictures decide that such picture or series of pictures is in violation of the prohibitory provisions of Section 5, said department shall refuse to issue such permit. In case a permit is granted, it shall be in writing, and in such form as said Department of Motion Pictures may prescribe. In the event of the refusal of a permit, the applicant shall be given a copy of the findings of said Department of Motion Pictures.

Said Department shall inspect or cause to be inspected all banners, posters or other advertising matter to find whether or not the same comes within the prohibitory provisions of this ordinance, and what provisions, if any, thereof, are violated. In case said banners, posters or other advertising matter complies with the provisions of the ordinance, they shall be stamped with a label of the department as provided in Sections 3 and 7 of this ordinance. No such banners, posters, or other advertising matter shall be exhibited at the place where said motion picture is exhibited, unless the same is stamped by the Motion Picture Department, with a label of said Department, as provided for in said Section 7 of this ordinance.

Said Department shall create an advisory committee of persons who will advise with the department from time to time in reference to the films that will be exhibited. This committee so appointed shall have no power or authority, but act solely in an advisory capacity. Each member of said advisory committee shall serve without pay.

Each member of said Department of Motion Pictures shall receive an annual salary of $6,000.

Section 5—No permit shall be granted for the showing of any picture or series of pictures that is immoral, or obscene, sacriligious, salacious, unpatriotic, or holds up to scorn or ridicule any nation or the people thereof, or portrays riotous, disorderly or other unlawful scenes, or has a tendency to disturb the public peace, or debase the public morals.

Montreal Session of Engineers Largest in Numbers and in Importance to Trade

By F. H. RICHARDSON

WHEN at 10 o'clock on the morning of May 10 the president of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce arose to welcome the members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, assembled in regular semi-annual meeting, he faced the largest meeting in point of numbers and the best in point of volume and value to the industry of business transacted the society has ever held.

The address of the Chamber of Commerce president was brief but well considered. He spoke particularly of the possibilities of the motion picture in the bringing about of a better understanding between the nations and the peoples of nations.

The society now has a total of eighty-four members, representing every important branch of the industry. Several undertakings were acted upon favorably by the meeting, including a substantial raise in initiation fees and annual dues instituted at the Pittsburgh meeting.

Several telegrams from members unable to attend were read; also a letter from R. Greyerson, of the engineering department of the Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., who is an active member of the society, Mr. Greyerson remarked upon the possibility of forming a branch of the society in England, an idea which was well received.

W. H. States, an active member, now in Shanghai, wrote voicing his regrets at inability to be present.

A letter from the Incorporation Association of Kinematograph Manufacturers, of London, set forth the fact that that company was trying to accomplish a work similar to that of the society and suggested co-operation.

The concensus of opinion, as voiced by C. Francis Jenkins, past president, seemed to be that the society should and could be made international, but that the plan would have to be carefully worked out.

Discuss Associate Membership Plan.

After somewhat lengthy discussion it was decided to establish an associate membership, the same to accommodate those who, while not engineers in the strictest interpretation of the term, desire to work with and be affiliated with the society. Associate members will have no vote, nor are they eligible to hold office—the latter a blessing in disguise, since they will thus escape a heavy burden of work.

The papers presented were many, in fact too many for the time allotted; also they were of large value. The list follows:

"Educational Possibilities of the Movies," by B. E. Norrish.

"Teaching the Cinematographic Art in Schools," by C. L. Gregory.

"Film Tinting and Densities," by George A. Blair.

"Effect of Color on Audience," by Commitee on Optics.

Report of Educational Committee, which presented 387 questions as a guide for examiners of projectionists.

"Standards in Theatre Design to Safeguard from Fire and Panic," by W. T. Braun, in course of which the fact was brought out that 8,355 persons perished in theatre fires between 1797 and 1897. While we personally disagreed with one or two things in this paper, it was, as a whole, of much value.

Present Paper on Theatre Lighting.

"A New Method of Lighting Motion Picture Theatres," by M. Jones. The method proposed presents nothing basically new, though it is of good value in so far as it points out the possibilities of indirect lighting so arranged that the distribution is even as a whole but of decreasing density toward the screen. We believe by Mr. Jones' method the theatre may be quite well lighted without seriously depreciating the apparent contrast of the picture, but what the effect of such illumination will be from the viewpoint of the audience may prove to be quite another matter. In any event, the paper was interesting.

"The Ventilation of Motion Picture Theatres and Studios," by O. K. Deyer, provided much food for thought for those directly interested in theatre ventilation. It deeply interested the writer, who has no such concern except in so far as applies to the projection room.

"Projection Speed and Its Effects," by F. H. Richardson.

"The Eccentric Star Intermittent Movement," by W. B. Cook. This paper sought to establish the superior value of the eccentric star as against the regular type. Argument presented therein will be found interesting to projectionists and manufacturers, and is worthy of serious consideration.

Jenkins Explains "Continuous" Machine.

"Continuous Moving Picture Machine," by C. Francis Jenkins. This title is copied exactly from the printed program. The writer was criticised by the president of the society for suggesting there was ground for relative correctness of argument as to the "motion" picture and "moving" picture. We were disappointed in the paper because Mr. Jenkins had promised in a letter to give an actual demonstration of a successful continuous motion (or moving) picture projector. He explained the failure to deliver the goods by saying there was too much difficulty in getting the machine into and out of Canada. Mr. Jenkins showed us the optical member of the proposed projector, and his paper explained its working principle and the difficulties he had encountered in its working out.

M. C. Levee
Vice-President and general manager of the Robert Brunton Studios, Inc., Los Angeles.

"Applications of Mazda Lamps to Small Moving Picture Projection," by C. E. Egeler.

"New Developments and Methods of Compensating Mazda Lamp Filament Movement," by C. A. V. Halvorsen.

Discuss Generating Sets.

"Design of Gasoline Electric Sets for Motion Picture Theatres," by R. L. Lee In the course of this paper its author declares he has been in personal contact with the various types of generating sets used for projection work and believes a large amount of work will be done in the development of such sets in the future. A view with which we heartily agree, and which we have several times given voice to in past years. He also remarks that it may be presumed that "if there was any way under the sun to make a successful lamp (Mazda) for the universally used 110 volt service the lamp designers surely have done it, and not built them for 30 volts."

To Hold Next Meeting in Dayton.

The next meeting of the society will, by unanimous vote, be held in Dayton in September, at which time the general election of officers takes place.

The president, Mr. Campe, of Pittsburgh, is to be warmly complimented on the work his administration has accomplished, and the work of the papers committee, under the chairmanship of L. C. Porter, Harrison, N. J., was worthy of high praise.

Side Lights on the Meeting

W. H. Cudmore thoroughly enjoyed all the sessions, and, all by his lonesome, passed a unanimous vote declaring the meeting a complete success.

As chairman and the entire membership of an entertainment committee, George Perkins covered himself with glory. He was here, there and everywhere, both day and night, looking after the welfare and enjoyment of Montreal's engineer guests. We will also remark that while friend Perkins is a successful dealer in motion picture supplies he also is successful in guessing what the other feller holds in his hand. He is a great lover of indoor sports.

Settlement Out of Court Ending Suit of George Loane Tucker vs. Mayflower

THE Mayflower-Tucker suit is about to be settled out of court and George Loane Tucker will complete his contract with the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. This announcement has been made by Benjamin A. Prager, president of Mayflower, following a conference with Alfred Beekman, attorney for the Mayflower organization.

Negotiations for a settlement of the Tucker case have been under way for a considerable time and there have been many conferences in connection with it. The terms of the settlement were not stated, but Tucker is to resume work for Mayflower immediately. A new arrangement as to the distribution of profits on his future productions has been effected. News of Tucker's willingness to reach a compromise was contained in a telegram sent from Los Angeles several days ago.

The adjustment of the difficulty between Tucker and Mayflower enables one of the masters of the silent drama to resume production. Tucker, according to present plans, will continue to work on the coast. He will finish the titling and cutting of "Ladies Must Live," his second production under the Mayflower contract, and will then arrange plans for four more Mayflower pictures which will complete the contract.

The settlement of the Tucker suit represents the most important act of Benjamin A. Prager since becoming head of the Mayflower organization.

Rocky Mountain Screen Club Prepares for Its Convention

PREPARATIONS are booming for the convention, exposition and ball which the Rocky Mountain Screen Club of Denver will hold on June 17 and 18. Thousands of people from all over the country are expected to attend, and stars passing through Denver during the second week in June are urged to stop over

H. E. Huffman has been elected president, H. A. Kyler, vice-president and George A. Brown secretary and treasurer. The attendance at meetings and luncheons has been increased by the simple method of charging each member whether he attends or not, and using the money of those who do not attend to reduce the expenses of those who do. A theatre or film exchange has charge of each luncheon. A desk clock is the award for the largest attendance, kept until the record is beaten, and the final honor award is a gold signet ring given by the president.

Equity Gives Trade Showing.

Equity Pictures Corporation announce a private trade showing of Clara Kimball Young's latest production, "For the Soul of Rafael," to be held in the grand ballroom of the Astor Hotel Wednesday afternoon, May 26, at 3 o'clock. All members of the trade cordially invited.

London Studio of Famous Players-Lasky Finished After Innumerable Difficulties

AFTER six months of strenuous work and the overcoming of almost unsurmountable difficulties, the London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., is at last ready for the beginning of production activities. No announcement has been received as to the first story to be filmed, but it is expected that work will be begun in the near future.

The new studio in which Paramount Artcraft pictures will be filmed is hailed by London experts as one of the most complete and best equipped studios in the world. In size it compares very favorably with the largest American studios, sufficient room having been provided on two stages for the filming of five large productions at one time. Every modern convenience has been installed and the company of players which will start work shortly under the direction of Hugh Ford will find many features in studio equipment not duplicated on this side of the Atlantic.

Handicapped by Council Ruling.

The transformation of an old and dilapidated structure in Islington, which served for many years as the central power station of a large London electric power company, is generally acknowledged as accomplishing the almost impossible. The work of conversion was in charge of Major C. H. Bell, a prominent London engineer. This task was made doubly difficult when the London County Council ruled that the work of reconstruction should be conducted under the regulations required for theatre building instead of those applying to factories. This ruling was at variance with other decisions handed down by the council, it is said, and added a great burden to those already carried by the company.

It was impossible to find a contractor who would attempt the structural alterations within a specified time, and it was necessary for the Famous Players-Lasky Producers, Ltd., to undertake the work itself, under the supervision of Major Bell. The company found it necessary to engage in the contracting business on a large scale, many thousands of dollars being invested in supplies and equipment before the work of alteration could be started last fall.

It had been the intention of General Manager Milton E. Hoffman to have the studio ready for occupancy last fall, but the great difficulty in obtaining labor caused one delay after another. Had the company not undertaken the building work itself, the completion of the studio would still be many months distant.

Another baffling situation was encountered in obtaining electric power, as the public service corporations in the Islington district were not inclined to undertake the task of supplying power to a building which would consume more power than the entrie Islington tram system. One corporation finally agreed to accept the responsibility provided the company would connect up the studio with its cables. This made it necessary to lay one and one-half miles of street cable.

Hepworth Produces Nine Pictures Since Armistice Signing; Makes Seven Reel Comedy

CAPTAIN PAUL KIMBERLEY, director and manager of Hepworth Picture Plays, London, is visiting New York for a fortnight, stopping at the Hotel Manhattan. It is several years since the captain was in the United States. At that time he was with the Imperial Film Company, then distributing Thanhouser productions. The Imperial now is distributing Hepworth Films and Simplex projectors.

Captain Kimberley said that out of forty-one eligible Hepworth employes forty joined the colors. During the course of the war the company did fully a half of the government's film work. This volume of business was made possible by reason of the machine designed by Cecil M. Hepworth, an apparatus for developing, printing and drying film and the operation of which by girls was entirely feasible. In the mass of propaganda work the company was called on to do, it was necessary in some cases to make many prints from one negative. The record, made possible by the process referred to, was 346 prints.

The first of the nine subjects the Heyworth company has made since the signing of the armistice, "The Nature of the Beast," was produced and photographed by Mr. Hepworth himself. The company has completed "Alf's Button," a seven-reel comedy which it considers one of the biggest pictures ever screened in England. It is from an original story by W. A. Darlington, dramatic critic of the London Daily Telegraph. Featured are Leslie Henson, Alma Taylor and James Carew.

The comedy was put on for a trade showing on May 4. In one week bookings on the subject reached £6,150. The booking for "Alf's Button" now total £22,000, a near record price for pictures in the English market, the only ones exceeding that sum being a few of the unusual American productions. Of the pictures shown during the week of May 4 the comedy will be the only one to reach the screen before next spring and one not until October, 1921. "Alf's Button" will be released next October 4.

Captain Kimberley called attention to the fact that the English exhibitors now are in a position similar to that in which American showmen were four years ago. Then the Englishmen were on an open booking basis and the Americans on a closed. Today the Americans are working on the open booking plan and the Englishmen on the closed, in many instances being booked solidly eighteen months ahead.

Metro Is All Set for Convention of Its Field Men in New York May 26, 27, 28

METRO has completed all arrangements for the holding of the annual get-together convention of its district and branch managers and special representatives. The gathering will meet at the Hotel Astor on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 26, 27 and 28, for a discussion of the company's plans and to render reports on the year's business; while for the leisure hours of the visiting film salesmen, Metro has prepared an elaborate schedule of entertainment designed to appeal to every taste.

Metro's determination to assume and maintain the leadership of the industry this year is to be the keynote of the convention. The company's production policy and general expansion will also be outlined to the visiting exchange managers, and subjects such as the contemplated new booking arrangement and adjustment of the flat rental versus percentage system of releasing pictures will be threshed out in detail.

In all there will be twenty-eight Metro district and branch managers present; but as many of them will be accompanied by their wives and other members of their families, Harry J. Cohen and E. M. Saunders, respectively manager of the foreign department and general sales manager of the corporation, who head the committee of arrangements, have made plans for taking care of a visiting delegation of something like seventy-five persons.

Those Who Will Make Speeches.

The convention will be called to order on Wednesday morning, May 26, at 10 o'clock. At the opening session there will be addresses by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro; by William E. Atkinson, general manager, and Marcus Loew and David Bernstein. Mr. Loew will attend in his capacity as head of Loew's, Inc., recently affiliated with Metro in a business association for their mutual advancement. Mr. Loew has not yet met all of Metro's field salesmen and welcomes the opportunity to do so that the forthcoming convention presents. Mr. Bernstein, who is treasurer of Loew's, Inc., and close personal adviser of Mr. Loew's will accompany his chief and say a few words to the visiting salesmen.

Mr. Rowland will describe to the gathering the expansion plans that Metro has perfected. He will explain how Metro, while adhering to its rigid standards of excellence in screen productions, will make from fifty to sixty new productions de luxe, as the result of the simultaneous operation of two studios, one in the west and one in the east. Metro's expansion is to be in every direction, both as a producing and as a distributing organization.

Theatre Party at New Amsterdam.

Mr. Atkinson, who in his capacity as general manager of Metro, is in closest personal touch with the district and branch managers, will welcome them and discuss the results they have achieved in the way of increased film sales in the past year. The addresses by Messrs. Loew and Bernstein will be more in the way of introductions to the men than anything else.

The opening session of the convention will be followed by luncheon at the Astor. For the evening the committee of arrangements has planned a theatre party to the New Amsterdam, for the performance of Ed Wynn's Carnival.

Thursday morning the convention will assemble again at 10 o'clock. This will be a close business session. The Metro executives will take up the problems that confront the salesmen in their different fields and give helpful suggestions. On this occasion they are expected to outline in detail the new co-operative booking policy that has been under consideration for several weeks, but which has not yet been announced in detail. Also the Metro executives will go thoroughly into the question of flat rentals and percentage booking.

As recently stated by President Rowland, Metro is willing to let this moot matter adjust itself by mutual agreement between the distributing company and the individual exhibitor. In other words, as Mr. Rowland has declared, Metro has no ax to grind in this relation; it is agreeable to continue its system of flat rentals unless the exhibitor should see the wisdom of percentage booking and express his own preference for it.

To Have New Bonus System.

At Thursday's session Mr. Atkinson will take up the question of a new bonus system to spur the endeavors of the Metro salesmen throughout the country and in Canada. Last year bonuses were awarded to six salesmen; but this year the arrangement, it is expected, will be widened in scope, so that more men may share in the company's prosperity.

After luncheon at the Astor the afternoon of Thursday, May 27, has been set aside for a big outing, to Glenwood-on-the-Sound.

The concluding business session of the convention will be held Friday morning at ten o'clock in the Astor. It will be followed by a luncheon and in the evening by a banquet. The visiting salesmen will leave Saturday morning for their respective homes.

Men Who Are Coming.

The district and branch managers who will attend the convention are S. A. Shirley, district manager, Chicago; W. C. Bachmeyer, district manager, Cincinnati; H. Lustig, district manager, Los Angeles; and branch managers, C. E. Kessinch, Atlanta; E. A. Golden, Boston; Charles Stern, Bangor, Me.; H. W. Kahn, Buffalo; J. S. Grauman, Chicago; C. E. Almy, Cleveland; W W. Rowland, Cincinnati; L. Bickel, Dallas; Fred P. Brown, Denver; C. H. Townsend, Detroit; S. L. Haldeman, Kansas City; B. F. Rosenberg, Los Angeles; A. Fischer, Minneapolis; William Scully, New Haven; W. J. Conners, New York; C. J. Briant, New Orleans; S. MacIntyre, Omaha; Robert Lynch, Philadelphia; J. E. Davis, Pittsburgh; G. L. Cloward, Salt Lake City; Fred W. Voight, San Francisco; C. Werner, St. Louis; C. Stearn, Seattle; P. J. O'Loghlin, Toronto, and E. W. Fuller, Washington, D. C.

Griffith's "Way Down East" Will Be Given a Broadway Showing Early in August

IS D. W. Griffith going to produce another "Birth of a Nation?" According to reliable reports from the Griffith studios at Mamaroneck, N. Y., indications point to another super-picture in "Way Down East," work on which has been in progress for the past four months. It is a well-known fact that Griffith thought this story would be merely a character play when he started work on it, but he has discovered a drama of thrills in the Lottie Blair Parker tale of New England life.

"This is the first time in years I have felt free to take as much time as I wanted in completing a production," said Mr. Griffith to a representative of the Moving Picture World. "When I paid $175,000 for the rights to 'Way Down East,' I did not then realize the possibilities in it. I hope to make it a production worthy of the extra time and the really large sum of money I am spending in completing it."

Several prominent film men who have been the guests of Griffith at his Mamaroneck studios are surprised at the large scope of the work on this picture. From the vast care and expense the producer is investing in it there seems to be in the offing another "Birth" or "Hearts of the World." Thousands of supernumeraries are being employed, and the producer himself has traveled several hundreds of miles with his players securing suitable locations, going as far north as Canada for several of the snow scenes.

The completed cast now includes Lillian Gish, Richard Barthelmess, Burr McIntosh, Lowell Sherman, Mary Haye, Edgar Nelson, George Neville, Vivia Ogden, Creighton Hale and others of prominence.

"Way Down East" will be a Griffith "special," and is scheduled to open at a large Broadway theatre early in August.

Ontario Exhibitors Accuse Exchanges of Sharp Practices in Canceling Contracts

ONE of the most important questions to come before the regular May meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, of Ontario, which was held in the association headquarters, 34 Richmond street, east, on May 11, concerned the alleged practice of a number of exchanges in rejecting the signed booking contract of an exhibitor.

It was pointed out by B. Hudson, of the Aster Theatre, Toronto, that occasionally the chief official of an exchange at Toronto or New York refused to accept a contract for pictures after it had been signed by a representative of the exchange and the exhibitor. The allegation was also made that sometimes not only did an official of an exchange refuse to confirm a contract but that the temporary contract of one exhibitor was used to secure a better price from a competitor.

Seek Universal System of Procedure.

It was urged by Mr. Hudson that no exhibitor should actually sign a contract for service until the designated price had been approved by the head office of an exchange. This matter had been up for discussion on one or two previous occasions, but this time it was decided to take action. On the motion of Mr. Hudson, seconded by M. Gibertig, of the Bluebell Theatre, Toronto, the grievance committee was instructed to enter into negotiations with the Canadian Moving Picture Distributors' Association with a view to obtaining a universal system of contract procedure.

R. H. Cunningham, of the Unique Theatre, London, Ontario, complained that the Y. M. C. A. of London had arranged to operate an open-air moving picture show for picnics and other gatherings during the summer months. It was felt that this arrangement formed direct competition with the moving picture business, and it was decided to protest to Otter Elliott, of Toronto, chief inspector of theatres for Ontario.

Want Protection on Contracts.

H. Alexander, of the Park Theatre, Toronto, expressed regret over the decision of Toronto and other cities of Canada in adopting daylight saving time. He moved that the Toronto City Council be advised regarding the effect that daylight saving has upon the moving picture theatres, his motion being seconded by B. Hudson.

Announcement was made that the Toronto exchanges had notified all exhibitors of a raise in price to 7½ cents for all flat paper and a sharp discussion followed. One exhibitor declared that a serial which he had booked some time ago would now cost him $5 a week more because of this charge, and the opinion was expressed that exhibitors should be protected on contracts made before May 1, 1920.

Want Paper Charge Reduced.

It was moved by F. Guest, of the New Strand, Empire and Queen's theatres, Hamilton, and seconded by Major Arbuthnot, of the Moss Park Theatre, Toronto, that the grievance committee demand the protection of exhibitors on contracts made before May 1 with regard to mounted paper and that the new charge be reduced if possible.

The meeting was well attended by both local and out-of-town members. J. C. Brady, of the Madison Theatre, Toronto, president, occupied the chair.

Van Loan Sells Story to Talmadge

H. H. Van Loan announces that he has sold an original story to the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, for production in the near future. The announcement of this contract comes after a series of other interesting sales which Van Loan has concluded in the three weeks of his New York stay.

Dorothy Dalton Begins on New Play

Scarcely had Dorothy Dalton returned from a three weeks' location at Charles, S. C., for Avery Hopwood's "This Woman—This Man" than she began work on her third production under her new contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The title of this is "A Winter City Favorite," by Charles Belmont Davis, brother of the late Richard Harding Davis. The adaptation was made by Rosina Henley, who served in similar capacity for the Harley Knoles will direct. Philip Hatkin is the cameraman, and James Dealy is the assistant director.

Rothstein's Campaign Book on Equity Picture Full of Ideas for Exhibitors

NAT G. ROTHSTEIN has come to bat again with an advertising and publicity campaign book for Clara Kimball Young in "For the Soul of Rafael" that tops every previous effort he has made in this line. As advertising and publicity director for Equity Pictures, Rothstein is called upon for unusual things in connection with the exploitation and advertising of Equity's productions.

The specially illustrated stunt ideas are a feature of the book. Nat has left nothing to the imagination of the exhibitor, for by his unique drawings he has shown the theatre owner exactly how the described stunts should be staged, dressed and pulled off.

The completeness of his work is shown in the description of a prologue done in two color effect, drawings with running time of prologue, props, music, embellishments complete even to a special love poem to be recited by a speaker attired in authentic costume of the period of the play.

From a small one column newspaper ad with intervening sizes right up to a full page constitutes the newspaper campaign. A wealth of novel suggestions in teaser ads, and other forms of original newspaper display advertising offers exhibitors material that solves his exhibiting problem.

Efforts of this character have done much to raise the standard of exhibitor newspaper advertising to an artistic degree.

Not a single item has been omitted to bring home to the exhibitor the bigness of Clara Kimball Young in "For the Soul of Rafael," and no book ever prepared by Rothstein has ever contained as much genuine "red meat" as this his latest work.

Practicality is the keynote of the work throughout. Helps that really help. Advertisements that really advertise and stunts that are crowd getters are jampacked in this brochure.

Neilan Announces Another "Find" in Colleen Moore

MARSHALL NEILAN feels that he has another "find" in Colleen Moore, the actress who is now appearing opposite Wesley Barry, in the first Neilan production featuring the boy actor. Miss Moore has had considerable screen experience, having appeared before the camera with some of the most notable artists of motion pictures.

In Colleen Moore, Mr. Neilan found the exact type he had been seeking for the Wesley Barry picture. After the first scene the director became enthusiastic over the talents of the actress. "I consider Colleen Moore one of the big possibilities of the future," said he, in discussing her work. "Above all things she is just as natural a born artist as little Wesley Barry is."

Goldwyn Acquires Substantial Interest in Capitol; Bowes to be Executive Head

MESSMORE KENDALL, president of the Capitol Theatre, New York City, announces the consummation of negotiations by which Goldwyn Pictures Corporation acquires a substantial interest in the new theatre at Fifty-first street and Broadway, and the theatre interests become associated with Goldwyn and will be prominently identified with the management thereof. Edward Bowes, under whose management of the Capitol offered a lavish presentation of motion pictures with spectacle and musical accompaniment, is to enter a larger field as a director and executive of Goldwyn.

On the Board of Directors.

The board of directors of the theatre will in addition to the present members include the following: F. J. Godsol, Samuel Goldwyn, Eugene DuPont, Lee Shubert, Edgar Selwyn and others of the Goldwyn board. Mr. Kendall will continue as president.

F. J. Godsol, chairman of the executive committee of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, stated that the addition of Gen. T. Coleman DuPont, Col. William Braden, Messmore Kendall, Robert W. Chambers and Edward Bowes to its board of directors, which already includes such men as the DuPonts, of Wilmington; E. V. R. Thayer, president of the Chase National Bank; George W. Davison, president of the Central Union Trust Company; Edward A. Wise, president of the United Cigar Stores Company; Samuel Goldwyn, Lee Shubert, F. A. Gudger and M. and J. Hilder, will give to the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation a very formidable combination of brains, money and theatrical experience.

Secures Interest in Big Theatre.

By this affiliation, Goldwyn has secured an interest in the most spacious theatre in the country, affording the corporation the direction of motion picture presentations so as to set the highest standard in this form of entertainment. The deal is of great importance to the motion picture industry and is said to portend other big things to come.

The Capitol Theatre is among the most beautiful theatres devoted to the motion picture industry and is among the largest in the world with 5,400 seats, 2,700 of which are on the orchestra floor and an almost equal number in the balcony. Nothing that can contribute to the comfort and pleasure of the theatre patrons has been overlooked in the construction of this playhouse. Numerous Goldwyn pictures have already been presented at the Capitol, notably Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside," which was one of the first presentations, and another Rex Beach Goldwyn feature, "The Silver Horde," which has been the attraction during the past week.

Educational Signs Contract to Release All Future Two-Reel Christie Comedies

BEGINNING with the next production, which is nearing release at the Los Angeles studios, all two-reel Christie Comedies will hereafter be released through the twenty-two exchanges of Educational Films Corporation.

The contract, which has just been signed by E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational, and Charles H. Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company, is said to involve the largest sum ever concerned in a two-reel comedy agreement. The amount to be spent in production alone within the next year is said to run into a sum that ranks among the largest investments of any of the producing companies.

According to the agreement, Al Christie, who has been responsible for some of the greatest comedy successes, is to personally supervise all of the productions and actually direct as many as possible. The entire distribution for the United States and Canada is to be in the hands of Educational, the first of the pictures to be released shortly after the opening of its new exchange system, which has just been announced.

Contract Concerns Only Two-Reelers.

Two-reel comedies only are concerned in the contract and none but the new pictures are to be released by Educational. The product already shown will continue to be booked through the present avenues, so that each of the productions to be handled by Educational will merit the brand name, New Christie Comedies. Immediately after making the agreement with Educational in New York City, Mr. Christie hurried back to the West Coast to complete enlarged plans with his brother.

Production of the first two comedies to be released by Educational are now under way and the ample facilities of the Christie studios assure that the schedule will be promptly met. As a matter of fact, with the recent additions the Chrsitie plant is one of the most complete on the Pacific Coast and the array of actors regularly on the payroll is a large one.

It is probable that Bobby Vernon and Fay Tincher will be the featured players in the first two Educational-released offerings. The third will have an "all star" cast. Some of the names appearing in recent releases evidence the character of the available players: Eddie Barry, Jimmie Harrison, Neal Burns, Teddy Sampson, Vera Steadman, Helen Darling, Charlotte Merriam, Earl Rodney and a number of others, including a large chorus of prize beauties.

Plan More Elaborate Production.

In a recent interview Al Christie pointed out that it has been the policy of the company to supply both stories and laughs, and it is that type of comedies that has appealed so strongly to the exhibitors generally. This will be carried out as a general plan, except that it will be the policy to have even larger casts and more elaborate sets in the future.

The addition of the Christie Comedies fits in well with the other two-reel releases of Educational-Chester Comedies, in which animals and children are largely featured, the first of which, "Four Times Foiled," attracted much attention recently at the Rialto, Rivoli and Loew theatres; the "Torchy" Comedies, taken from the famous stories by Sewell Ford and which center around the red-headed office boy; and the Mermaid Comedies, directed by Jack White of Sennett and Fox Sunshine fame, which run more to the slap-stick and beautiful girl ideas.

Hodes Resigns from Universal

Hal Hodes, editor of Universal's News Screen Magazine, has resigned and will sever his connection with the big film company on May 29, next. He plans to enter a new phase of the film industry. He is not ready to make his plans public.

Hodes is a familiar figure in the motion picture world. He has been associated with Universal for the last seven years. Previous to entering the moving picture field, he was a newspaper man, and also had served in the Navy for several years.

In accepting his resignation, Universal officials expressed deep regret that he had made up his mind to go elsewhere. His successor in the management of the New Screen Magazine has not been selected.

Kunsky Secures Grand Circus Park Site for Erection of Great Capitol Theatre

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of negotiations completed last week whereby John H. Kunsky secures one of the largest and most important land parcels in the Grand Circus Park business section, the "new heart" of Detroit. The plot consists of business property embracing almost the entire block bounded by John R. street, Madison, Broadway and Grand Circus Park, and will be utilized as the site of the new Capitol Theatre, planned to be the largest playhouse in that section of the country and one of the largest in the United States, seating approximately 4,350.

The Capitol will have entrances and exits both on Broadway and Madison, while the Madison frontage will be taken up by a ten-story office and store building and the Madison frontage will be occupied by a six-story structure, the theatre building proper lying in between. The office buildings in both instances will be faced with white tile and terra cotta, while it is planned to utilize the Madison avenue frontage with an exclusive office building for physicians and dentists.

Auditorium of Great Size.

One of the outstanding features will be the size of the auditorium. The ceiling will consist of a central dome from which will hang one of the finest lighting fixtures in this country, while the lounges, promenades, retiring room and grand staircase will, it is said, have few equals in the country. Soft color effects will predominate in the decoration scheme. The great lobby, which will lead to the main foyer, will extend the complete length of the auditorium. It will be furnished luxuriously.

The walls will be of dark walnut and rise to a ceiling of the richest ornamentation. From off the Italian staircase will be the promenade and mezzanine floor, while a well will be placed in the center of it that the music may filter through the rooms leading off the mezzanine. Thick carpets of special design and quality will be found throughout the theatre, while the furniture and the richly colored hangings will be specially manufactured. The entire lighting system will be controlled by a dimmer system that the most artistic color blending may result.

Stage for Traveling Shows.

The stage will be one of the largest and best equipped in the United States and will accommodate any traveling dramatic productions, opera and the like. The organ to be installed is promised to exceed any in size yet installed in Detroit theatres.

While the kind of entertainment is not disclosed at this time, it is understood that feature motion pictures and musical novelties will be presented, much on the same order as Mr. Kunsky's Madison and Adams theatres. The erection of the new Capitol will mark the advent of the third large theatre on Grand Circus Park, all of which are controlled and operated by Mr. Kunsky and his associate, George W. Trendle, who will be chief executive.

William S. Hart Tells Why He Prefers Stories Written Expressly for Screen

WILLIAM S. HART, producer of special pictures for Paramount-Artcraft, whose photodrama, "The Toll Gate," is being heralded as an example of quality in production, has declared that he prefers, for his own type of picture at least, the original story written expressly for the screen.

"The most successful stage play or novel," he said, "in many instances must be so altered and so much must be eliminated or added before it is at all satisfactory for the screen, that I prefer originals which have been constructed with the sole idea of making them suitable to visualization.

"As in the case of pictures which I have evolved and which I will produce in the near future, I conceived 'The Toll Gate' and wrote it with the one idea in view of presenting situations and episodes that could be properly enacted for the screen. Every situation must develop logically from what has gone before and must dovetail into what is to come. Obviously if a thing has to be altered there is grave danger of becoming illogical, but if we start with a certain premise—that of making a picture play—we will avoid the conditions which make a thing seem forced or strained.

"One of the biggest factors in the success of a writer for the pictures is experience. It applies equally, perhaps, to anyone who writes for any medium. But somehow, to have seen a thing actually, with one's own eyes, impresses it. Furthermore, once having seen a thing actually transpire it is, of course, plain that it can be pictured by the camera. The selective ability is important, too. So much that we see and read and hear is of no importance, but the trained observer can pick out the big moment in any situation, instinctively and sometimes in an apparently trivial episode, he gets an idea for a big theme.

"Of course, I know the West. It has been my hobby, and more—almost my life, itself, for many years. So when I write of the West, I am writing from my innermost soul. I am no literary expert, but I claim that I can tell what I know better than some finished writer who is writing about something that is unfamiliar to him."

Sessue Hayakawa Talks of His Future Productions While Visiting New York

SESSUE HAYAKAWA has taken advantage of a short lapse of time between the last picture of his old Robertson-Cole contract and the new one upon which he shortly will start to work to visit the East on a tour of recreation and rest. It follows a period of hard work on the pictures which have been released in the past few months.

Hayakawa is making New York his headquarters. He is registered at the Biltmore and for a week has been attending the theatre, seeing the new motion pictures, touring the city and enjoying himself generally.

He dropped in, of course, at the executive offices of Robertson-Cole, 1600 Broadway, to greet A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, and other officials of the company. To them he expressed his eagernes to get started on the new series of pictures, and voiced the thanks which he already had sent on by mail for the freedom which is to be allowed him in the coming series of productions.

"That's How I Knocked Him Out."
Percival telling Elaine Hammerstein how he did it in Selznick's "Moments."

To Make Four Pictures a Year.

"I am going at the new pictures with the greatest enthusiasm of my career," says Hayakawa. "In these productions the limitations of time and money which at times were felt in the pictures which I have made up to the present will be eliminated. There are to be only four of the new productions a year, allowing proper leisure for the selection of stories, for the preparation of the scenario, for casting and for the many details which have been forced into too short a time.

"We are selecting the best stories which the market affords. Each of them will be one of great appeal to Americans, and at the same time of international appeal. Several will be themes which I have had in mind for a number of years, but never have had the opportunity of producing because of the need of making pictures quickly, and with a minimum of expense. I am now so generously financed that there will be no limitations of money whatever.

World Will be Market for Theme.

"The world will be our market for themes, and for artistic backgrounds, which will be put into my pictures much more strongly than ever. As to the acting which will go into the new series, I will say that it will be the best I ever done."

Unwise to Treat the Screen as Something to Be Avoided

(From the New York Evening Journal.)

THE other day a learned judge, rebuking two foolish young boys for running off with an automobile, said that they must go to church regularly, and that they must not go to moving picture shows for a certain length of time.

A hundred years ago a judge equally wise under the same circumstances might have sentenced the two boys "not to read a book" for a certain length of time.

It isn't wise to hold up the church as a punishment; it doesn't arouse very much respect for the church.

And it is not wise to treat the moving picture, which is an educational, imagination-stimulating force, as though it were something to be avoided.

"Big Four" Arranges for Release of One Picture a Month Beginning September 1

EXHIBITORS will welcome the announcement made this week by Hiram Abrams, which lines up United Artists Corporation's productions for the year beginning September 1 on a definite schedule, under which the "Big Four" will release at least one production on the first of every month.

Mr. Abrams has received assurances from Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith individually, that their pictures will come to the United Artists Corporation with sufficient regularity to assure a steady release to the theatres of the country.

It is assumed, of course, that, as during the past year, United Artists Corporation will also release occasional big pictures made by independent producers, but it is contemplated that these outside pictures will be in addition to the one-a-month schedule of productions to be made by the United Artists themselves.

"I am very much gratified to be able to announce to the exhibitors of the country that Miss Pickford, Mr. Chaplin, Mr. Fairbanks and Mr. Griffith have given me positive assurance that from the first of September on, we will be in a position to release one of their big productions on the first of each month to the theatres of the country," said Mr. Abrams.

"Under this arrangement, as far in advance as the exhibitor wishes to work on his bookings, he will always know that the first of every month means a new release from United Artists' Corporation. In planning ahead, theatremen will know that by keeping their dates open, they can provide for a minimum of twelve important offerings of the year from United Artists Corporation.

"We are reproducing in the advertising sections of the trade papers this week the telegrams which I received from our artists, and those wires speak for themselves.

Pickfords Postpone European Trip.

"I am glad that it was possible for me to induce Miss Pickford and Mr. Fairbanks to defer their trip to Europe in order to avoid the delays that the unsettled communication conditions between this country and Europe would have brought about.

"Miss Pickford particularly has long cherished the desire to make some pictures abroad, and I know and appreciate the personal sacrifice she is making by postponing the trip, now that her plans have all been made to go to the other side. Later on I hope that we will have for release some pictures that she will make abroad, but right now months of delay might occur between the making and the releasing of such pictures and exhibitors all over are asking for more of our product for immediate delivery. Therefore, the plans of Miss Pickford and Mr. Fairbanks have been set aside and they are going to stay hard at work on new productions here in America.

Will Have Released Eight Pictures.

"Despite the difficulties and handicaps attendant on the launching of an organization such as ours, with unexpired contracts to fulfill on the part of the members of our organization, I feel that we have done very well during the year which will end on August 30. By that time we will have released eight pictures: Douglas Fairbanks in 'His Majesty, the American'; D. W. Griffith's 'Broken Blossoms'; Douglas Fairbanks in 'When the Clouds Roll By'; Mary Pickford in 'Pollyanna'; Mack Sennett's 'Down on the Farm'; Doris Keane in 'Romance'; Douglas Fairbanks in 'The Mollycoddle'; Mary Pickford in 'Suds.'

"During the coming year, with all of our artists engaged on productions for release through this organization, I am confident that we will be able to book to exhibitors a steady month-to-month offering of pictures that will represent the utmost in box-office attractiveness.

"We hope, also, to market through this organization, such other big productions as may be seeking an independent outlet to the screens of the country.

"We are more than grateful for the encouragement and co-operation we have received so far from the exhibitors in our attempt to place our product before the people of the country on an independent basis.

"We are seeking only to build an open and free market, realizing that to hold such a market, any product must stand on its own merits. Our success in the past year, which makes possible the big plans that we have ahead, is proof positive that product of merit and an open market alone will make possible the desired progress for producer and exhibitor."

Hodkinson Enlists Many from Outside Industries in Adding to His Present Selling Force

THE increases in the Hodkinson selling staff which have been announced two weeks ago are now practically completed. The selling force has been increased fifty per cent.

Speaking of this enlargement of the selling staff of his organization, Mr. Hodkinson stated: "I have had a rush of applications since my intention of adding to my selling organization became known. There was some excellent material offered from within the industry. Some of these men have been placed. I also received a strikingly large number of applications from outside the ranks of the industry. All of these latter were men who had been connected with the selling forces of prominent and successful national concerns.

"I was glad to avail myself of some of this outside material, which I think is much needed in the industry, not only in the selling organizations, but through all the branches and departments generally. There is no field of human endeavor which holds out a greater and speedier reward for genuine ability and ambition than the motion picture field of today.

"The enlargement of our selling staff has been made necessary by the constant and gratifying growth of business which has come into our organization. We expect to conduct a lively summer campaign mainly with a view of helping the exhibitor over the inevitable bad spots during the hot weather."

The Members of "The Big Four" and Their Chief Executive.

Realart Signs Its Fifth Star, A Woman; Will Disclose Her Identity Next Week

REALART has signed a new star, its fifth. The announcement gave no clue as to the identity of the person except to say that as in previous cases the choice was again a young woman. A full description of the new Realartist and the character of the productions in which she will appear is promised for next week.

Rumors have been current for some time that Morris Kohn, president of Realart, was on a quiet hunt for new star material. It was understood that several names of established stars were under consideration by him. This report is spiked by the announcement that the young lady chosen reaches stardom for the first time under Realart.

J. S. Woody, general manager of the company, declared that the policy of developing its own stars had been so successful in the cases of Constance Binney and Wanda Hawley that it was determined to repeat the method. An extensive publicity and advertising campaign has been prepared to launch the new star.

In all the trade papers this week a colored insert appears carrying sketches of the new star in various poses. Only meagre information was given concerning her, but it was believed she would be generally recognized from the poses, demonstrating, as in the case of Wanda Hawley, that the new star is well known and popular.

A New Type, Says Woody.

"While we are not prepared to announce the young woman's name at present," said General Manager Woody, "we can promise that she will fill an entirely new niche in the Realart program. She is an entirely different type from those already signed and will be presented in a line of productions different from anything we are now offering.

"Once more Realart has decided to create a star. Although it was possible to go into the competitive market and obtain so-called established stars, we decided it would be more advantageous both for ourselves and our exhibitors to obtain new and fresh talent to develop in line with Realart standards.

"Obtaining, as we have, a young lady who has been prominently featured as leading woman in some of the best productions of recent years, the exhibitor is offered a tangible and definite box-office asset upon which to introduce the new star to his patrons. He has a strong and substantial foundation upon which to base his plunge.

Star System Here to Stay.

"The star system is only in its infancy. It stands just about as much chance of disappearing from the motion picture industry as it does from the universe. Far from being in a moribund condition, it is one of the healthiest infants alive. It is based on the natural public tendency to make heroes and heroines and worship them. No matter how much credit the producer or the director deserves for their parts in making a production, the public will never grant them one-half the interest they attach to the star.

"Disappointing as this may be to a number of capable and well-meaning people, it is true, and any exhibitor in the country will tell you so. He isn't putting the name of stars over his theatre just to help out the electric light companies. He is out to gather in the thousands of people who know that particular personality."

Winifred Westover in Fox Film

In engaging the principals to support Buck Jones in "Firebrand Trevison," his third starring production for the firm, William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, has succeeded in securing Winifred Westover to appear as the cowboy star's leading woman.

This is the last American picture in which Winifred Westover will figure for some time, at least. Upon the completion of her work opposite Buck Jones in "Firebrand Trevison" she will come from California to New York and sail for Sweden. Upon arrival in Sweden she will start work at once in her first starring production to be made in that country.

Hope Hampton Leaves for Hawaii

Hope Hampton, Metro star, has gone to make her second picture in Hollywood and Hawaii. Some of the story of this production, which was especially written for her by H. H. Van Loan, centers around the beach of Waikiki, Hilo and other points in the Hawaiian group; and in her endeavor to have these scenes authentic, Miss Hampton and her company will go to the spot for their exteriors.

New York Capitol Books "Shore Acres" and "Old Lady 31" on Successive Weeks

TWO Metro special productions as the feature pictures for two successive weeks have been booked at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, by Managing Director Bowes. The first, "Shore Acres," with an all-star cast headed by Alice Lake, was the feature of the bill for the week beginning Sunday, May 16, to be followed the week of May 23 by "Old Lady 31," starring Emma Dunn.

A short while ago the Capitol for the second time played two Metros in succession and the results at the box office were so satisfactory as to prejudice Mr. Bowes in favor of the elaborate Metro specials as money-getters. The last two booked have been hailed by critics and public as fine examples of productions.

In "Shore Acres" Alice Lake is featured in the role of Helen Berry, the picture being an adaptation by Arthur J. Zellner of James A. Herne's stage drama, known to theatregoers of three generations. It was directed by Rex Ingram, under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general. One of the sequences depicting a furious storm at sea and the wreck of a sailing vessel is said to be the acme of realism and expert photography.

In the cast with Miss Lake are Robert Walker, Edward Connelly, Frank Brownlee, Joseph Kilgour and Franklyn Garland, a brother of Hamlin Garland, the author.

"Old Lady 31," with Emma Dunn in her famous stage role of Angie which she created in Lee Kugel's stage production of the play by Rachel Crothers, is a whimsical story of love in the autumn of life. Henry Harmon, who also appeared in the stage version of "Old Lady 31," is cast in his original part of Capt. Abe Rose, Angy's marine husband, who takes up his abode in an institution for indigent old women and is known as "Old Lady 31."

Others in the cast are Antrim Short, Winifred Westover, Graham Pettie, Clara Knott, Carrie Clark Ward, Sadie Gordon, Martha Mattox, May Wells and Lawrence Underwood. Rachel Crothers' play was scenarioized by June Mathis, head of the Metro scenario staff. John E. Ince directed the picture.

Underburdening the Soul on the Subject of Free Publicity in the Newspapers

By HARRY T. BRUNDIDGE

A YEAR ago the managing editor of a St. Louis newspaper, looking up from a piece of copy that I had just given him, with the request that, if possible, he use it, smiled and asked: "If you were the managing editor and I was the publicity man, and you gave me this to print, would you print it?" I was a bit taken back. I took the sheet from him, glanced over it again and admitted that, were I in his place, I'd throw it in the waste basket.

"That's exactly what I'm going to do," he said, and without the usual formality he crumpled it and threw it away.

"What is the matter with you fellows?" he asked. "The public is interested in productions and players. But of all the dod-rotted bunk that is offered for publication, you fellows give it to us. Most of you are practical newspapermen. But the minute you go out of the business, you are not publicity men—you're damned, worthless, bothersome, press agents.

Get Everything But News.

"You all try to put a motion picture theatre in the same category as a circus. You figure that because you spend money for advertising you are entitled to some free matter. But you are dead wrong. A city is visited by a circus about four days out of the 365; it is news when it comes to town. We have motion picture shows in three figures on every one of the 365 days; they cease to be news. However, there is gobs of readable stuff that we are always glad to print. But we don't get any of it."

The more I studied his remarks the more fully I realized the import of them. The more I studied the papers of the leading cities of the United States, the more convinced I became that what he said was true. In Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, New York and Baltimore, I heard the same story from the managing editors.

In Boston I asked a managing editor what was wrong with the press matter of theatres.

Copy Readers Know.

"It's the bunk," he exclaimed. "Press stories, whether advance notices, reviews or 'specials,' are all the same. They are full of adjectives and nothing else. They belong in the advertising columns."

I asked the copy-readers—the boys who have to make the stuff readable. Copy readers are the greatest tourists in the newspaper game; they ought to know something about conditions. One man, who has worked from coast to coast and from Seattle to Key West and San Diego to Portland, Maine, declared copy from the movie theatre press men was the worst stuff that comes over the desk.

I continued this investigation at odd times and in various places for several months. I went into every phase of it. And I reached a few conclusions. They were very simple ones, but I believe if they were followed by every publicity man in the business, big and little, greater results would be obtained. Here are a few:

A Few Simple Conclusions.

Study the style of each newspaper you deal with.

Strike an average of the number of lines usually given a production by each paper, and write copy accordingly. Above all, don't write a book.

Never give a newspaper a carbon copy. It hurts the feelings of the man who gets it. He figures that you gave the original to the "best" paper—the one you have the most trouble with.

Study the press sheet. Read the trade journals.

Be forever on the lookout for unusual stories—and pictures.

Write clean copy.

If one paper turns down a story, try another. If you get it printed it will make the first man wonder if he overlooked a bet and may make him easier to handle the next time.

Don't write "press stuff"—write news.

Don't try to be a "good fellow," be a business man.

Don't wish complimentary tickets on everybody in the office; make them hard to get.

Keep an eye out for real news, not movie news, and give the big boss a tip on a big story now and then.

Get Your Stuff in Early.

Don't rush into an office with a request that a story be used the same day. Get your stuff in early. Time-copy, material that can be set on those occasions when the composing room is howling for fodder for the linotypes, is always in demand. If the news editor has a readable story on his desk at such times, it is pretty apt to be sent to the copy reader. And one story in type on the stone has a ten to one better chance of tasting ink than a yarn turned in during edition hours.

"Old stuff," the average publicity man will assert, upon reading the foregoing. But how many practice it?

Ever since my chat with the managing editor mentioned in the opening paragraph, I have been on the lookout for unusual pictures and readable stories. Now, it is rather difficult to show a newspaperman where there is any news in a "still" from some production. But, nevertheless, there are few sets of stills that do not contain at least one "news" picture.

Getting Stills Printed.

For example, I was exploiting an Anita Stewart production. Everybody knows what her pretty face looks like and I could find no legitimate excuse for offering a "still" to the paper until I came across a picture of her in a boy's bathing suit. The public knew what she looked like in a beautiful gown, but it knew not what the gown concealed. Needless to say, I got the picture printed.

When Her Ship Came In

Mary Miles Minter spent a day on the rocks. Seen in "Peggy Rebels," an American production.

This also proved true with a photograph of Miss Constance Talmadge and a photograph I discovered of her, in which she wore only a piece of silk, soon found itself gracing the picture page of a daily. Later I found a striking photo of her garbed in the "vamp" costume she wore in "In Search of a Sinner." It was so outlandish that two St. Louis papers printed it with the caption, "Connie as a Vamp."

Don't Play Up Name of Film.

Then there was a beautiful picture of Marjorie Daw. It was bare from here to there and there was no difficulty in getting it printed. Every publicity man should remember that there is at least one paper in town that likes such stuff.

The question of what comprises a story worthy of publication is an interesting one, but bear in mind one thing. It is unwise, and not at all necessary, to start a story with the name of the production you are exploiting. If you write the story around the star, the production is not essential, or at the most, a side issue. A story about a star, in which the name of a production is not mentioned, does not smack of "publicity" and a paper is not ashamed to use it.

I have found that few First National press sheets are printed that do not contain at least one story that can be used as a "feature." I do not mean the advance notices, reviews and the material that newspapers accord each theatre every week. I mean special "news" stories.

Valuable Space Given to Interviews.

For example in exploiting Marshall Neilan's mirthquake, "Don't Ever Marry," I succeeded in placing on the woman's page of a St. Louis paper an interview with Matt Moore in which he outlined his views of married life and declared against the marriage of one screen star to another, citing the experiences of Tom, Owen and Joe, his three brothers. This story ran in excess of 1,000 words and carried a double column head at the top of the page.

The fact that Moore had the leading role in the new Neilan production, "Don't Ever Marry," was mentioned, but the fact that "Don't Ever Marry" was running at the New Grand Central and West End Lyric was omitted. However, every reader who turned to the next page saw in very large type, "Matt Moore and Marjorie Daw in 'Don't Ever Marry.'"

Paving the way for the coming of Constance Talmadge in "The Love Expert" and Norma Talmadge in "The Woman Gives," I succeeded in getting published on the woman's page of one of the papers an interview with "Peg," their mother, which was cut from the press sheet and put back on copy paper.

Petty Jealousies Hurt "Game."

There is one other thing worth mentioning: jealousy.

I find that publicity men, through petty jealousies, are making the "game" harder and harder. If one succeeds in putting over a story, the others call upon the managing editor, complain, demand an equal break and threaten to withdraw their advertising if they don't get "something just as good."

They fail to realize that it is not pull or favoritism that gets results for the other fellow, but plain hard work.

Ready for Target Practice.

Help Americanization Week by Showing These Trailers on Your Theatre Screen

FOLLOWING are the epigrammatic utterances of famous Americans which have been compiled by the Americanism Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry for use by exhibitors during Americanization Week, which runs from May 29 to June 5. It is asked that trailers be made of one or more of these utterances and that the phrase "This is Americanization Week; keep your flags flying until June 5," be attached to them:

"When every man . . . feels that he is a participator in the government of affairs . . . he will let the heart be torn out of his body sooner than his power be wrested from him."—Thomas Jefferson.

"The true prosperity and greatness of a nation is to be found in the elevation and education of its laborers."—Ulysses S. Grant.

"The Constitution of the United States is the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man."—Gladstone.

"Let us have faith that right makes might; and in that faith, to the end, let us do our duty as we understand it."—A. Lincoln.

"We here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people and for the people shall not perish from the earth."—Lincoln.

"In a government bottomed on the will of all, the life and liberty of every citizen becomes the interest of all."—Thomas Jefferson.

Decorate Your House with Flags.

"Laws made by common consent must not be trampled upon by individuals."—Jefferson.

"Let this be the distinctive mark of an American, that in cases of commotion he enlists himself under no man's banner, inquires for no man's name, but repairs to the standard of the laws. Do this and you need never fear anarchy or tyranny. Your government will be perpetual."—Jefferson.

"While the laws shall be obeyed all will be safe."—Jefferson.

"The will of the people is the only legitimate foundation of any government."—Jefferson.

"Such is the moral construction of the world that no national crime passes unpunished in the long run."—Jefferson.

"Let it be remembered that the Constitution of the United States is not unalterable."—Daniel Webster.

"We all know that civil institutions are established for the public benefit and that when they cease to answer the ends of their existence they may be changed."—Daniel Webster.

"The people have wisely provided in the Constitution itself a proper, suitable mode and tribunal for settling questions of constitutional law."—Daniel Webster.

Feature Patriotic Music.

"The principle of free government adheres in American soil. It is imbedded in it—immovable as its mountains."—Daniel Webster.

"Let our object be our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country, and by the blessing of God may that country become . . . a vast and splendid monument of wisdom, of peace and of liberty . . . forever."—Daniel Webster.

"Education is the true corrective of abuses of power."—Thomas Jefferson.

"If a nation expects to be ignorant and free, in a state of civilization, it expects what never was and never will be. No other sure foundation can be devised for the preservation of freedom and happiness than education."—Thomas Jefferson.

"Above all things, I hope the education of the common people will be attended to; convinced of their good sense, we may rely with the most security for the preservation of a due degree of liberty."—Thomas Jefferson.

Carpentier Picture Premiere Will Run Full Week in Big Hotel Astor Ballroom

GEORGES CARPENTIER, champion boxer, war hero, actor and social favorite, as central figure in "The Wonder Man," will be given a great premiere. For at least a week beginning Saturday evening, May 29, the new picture, which was made at the Solax Studio, Fort Lee, and which is being distributed by Robertson-Cole, will be shown in the ballroom of Hotel Astor, New York City.

This is said to be the first time in the history of motion pictures that a run of this length has been attempted in this hotel which stands at the center of New York's theatrical district.

These showings will be given under the auspices of the American Legion of New York County, which has appointed a committee to take charge of them and to cooperate with Robertson-Cole in arranging for the affair. It was chiefly because of the high regard in which Carpentier is held by members of the American Legion that this organization decided to sponser his first motion picture.

The New York County Legion intends disposing of tickets through all of its posts. Society women have volunteered to sell tickets from booths in New York hotels. Already there is a big demand for tickets. One big banking firm, in which there is a post of the American Legion, ordered 500. A dry goods house asked for 200 and one Legion post put in a request for 150.

The seating capacity of the ballroom of the hotel is 2,000. There will be eight night showings, extending from May 29 to June 5, and at least two matinees. Governor Edwards of New Jersey and Governor Smith of New York will occupy boxes on the opening night, as will representatives of the army and navy.

Barthelmess Is Not Engaged

Richard Barthelmess, the young Griffith star, late of "Broken Blossoms" and "The Idol Dancer," is not engaged to marry. Several newspaper stories have appeared, each one evidently selecting their own candidate for the future Mrs. Barthelmess.

Albert L. Grey, general manager for the Griffith interests, declared there was no truth whatever in any of the reports. The fact that Miss Mary Haye, for many years a close friend of the young actor, recently secured an engagement with D. W. Griffith for his "Way Down East," led to the coupling of her name with Mr. Barthelmess.

Associated Exhibitors Expand

Rapid expansion of business and increasing additions to office personnel has necessitated the taking over of additional office space by Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Space has been obtained on the ninth floor of the office building at No. 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York. The new offices are at present being put into shape for early occupancy.

The executives of the Association will remain in the offices on the eighth floor of the same building.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Wuxtry! Deplorable Dearth of Leading Women is Forecasted Along West Coast

By GIEBLER

QUITE a little news this week. The odious non-parking law has been repealed, and members of the Colony that have cars but no chauffeurs can leave their machines at the curb for forty-five minutes while they buy things in the downtown shops, or have their hair cut, curled or touched up in the downtown beauty parlors. And those who do have chauffeurs are not compelled to add to the H. C. of Upkeep by having the drivers make rings around the block while they are attending to business.

Thomas Forman, Jr., son of the well-known screen player, Tom Forman, has arrived at the home of his parents for an extended visit. Little Tom, being only one week old at this writing, has not said whether or not he will go into the movies.

Robert McKim, the justly celebrated villain, and Mrs. McKim are entertaining a little rascal that was left at their home by a long-legged bird last week.,

Leading Woman Shortage Forecasted.

There hasn't been a girl baby born in the Colony for a long time. There is going to be an awful shortage of leading ladies in the movies one of these days if this keeps up. Something ought to be done about it.

Mercita Esmonde, who has been appearing opposite William Gillette in "Dear Brutus" on the legitimate stage in New York for many months, has come out to the Coast to pay a visit to her husband, Harry Northrup, the villain.

Doug and Mary have postponed their trip to Europe, and Nevada has served papers on Mary and Owen Moore for an action that will probe into the divorce recently granted to them. Somebody in Nevada evidently wants to run for office on the pure divorce law platform.

An official named Peek at Long Beach took a peek at the one-piece bathing suits on the beach and became so piqued that he started to reform things, and the comedy companies will have to cut Long Beach off their location lists from now on, or get in a peck of trouble with Mr. Peek.

George and Mrs. McManus Arrive.

James Cruze, of the Famous Players-Lasky studio, who is taking his first vacation in four years, prevents us from pulling a gag about him cruising around by sticking to the studio and watching the other directors work.

George McManus, creator of "Bringing Up Father," and Mrs. McManus have come to town and are occupying the royal suite at the Alex Hotel, which proves that there is lots of "jack" in drawing funny pictures for the papers. Johnny Ray, who is Jiggs; Margaret Fitzroy, Maggie, and Laura La-Plante, daughter, in the "Bringing Up Father" comedies being made at Christie's, and Al Christie and Pat Dowling met George and the Missus at the station and welcomed them to Filmland. And I went out to the studio the next day and told George that he could consider it unanimous. George and I come from the same town in Missouri, and as I've often said, what would the movies do without Missourians?

With Jack Wheeler as Guide.

I went out to the Kosmik studios this week, got better acquainted with L. C. "Jack" Wheeler, who is associated with George Kleine in the Kosmik organization and is out here superintending the making of "The Hope Diamond Mystery," and watched Stuart Paton directing a thrilling episode of the serial.

Mr. Wheeler is an interesting person. He was in the secret service of the government before he entered the film game as editor of the Selig Tribune about four weeks ago; was stationed at the White House during two administrations, and knows Bill Taft and the King of Siam and lots of other famous folk.

While I was talking to Wheeler, William Lord Wright, who looks after the editorial work for Kosmik, came along.

"Bill," I said, "Mr. Wheeler tells me that the company is working over on the big stage. Take me over there, I feel a sort of Kosmik urge to rubber something thrilling."

The Famous Hope Diamond.

Mr. Wright paused long enough for me to laugh heartily at the excellent wheeze I had just pulled, and led me over to the stage, where a whooping big set representing a Hindoo temple was all ready to shoot.

At one end of the temple a long flight of marble stairs led up to where a Hindoo idol sat in solemn grandeur with a diamond as big as an English walnut, an exact replica of the famous Hope diamond, blazing on her chest. There was a lot of natives knocking their heads on the floor at the foot of the stairs, and Grace Darmond, the star of the serial, looking like two million dollars in her bronze make-up as a nautch girl, kneeling at the foot of the stairs.

Boris Karoloff, the head priest of the temple, dismissed the worshippers of the goddess and followed them off; then George Cheseboro, wearing a long cloak, a sword, a plumed hat and the other haberdashery of a French cavalier of the sixteenth century, came in the scene.

Goes Sir Walter Raleigh One Better.

George had designs on the big diamond and didn't see Grace huddled like a little brown mouse at the foot of the stairs until he got to the top. Then he came down again—Grace rose to meet him, and he took off his long velvet cloak and wrapped it about her. Which, if you will look up the Ladies' Home Journal for September, 1589, and glance at the latest styles for nautch girls, you will understand that it was the proper thing for a cavalier to do if he didn't want his lady friend to catch the "flu" or something.

Grace and George climbed to the idol again. Grace touched a spot on the wall, a secret panel opened. George went up to the idol and yanked at the ornament containing the big diamond on the idol's chest. And at that moment hell broke loose around there.

There was an explosion like sixteen simultaneous blowouts, and a mass of smoke and fire and flames and fumes rushed up from the floor and all around the idol's feet. Talk about burglar alarms. Everybody that's got a private cellar ought to get Stuart Paton to put in one of those systems.

Not Enough Bumped Heads.

The alarm brought Boris Karoloff back on the scene and he tackled George. They staged a dandy fight, but George got the best of it and sent Boris tumbling down the steps. Then George got the diamond and he and Grace beat it out through the secret panel.

I thought it was all over, but it wasn't. Stuart Paton said the action was pretty good, but not quite good enough. I don't know what was wrong with it. It made a hit with me. Maybe Karoloff's head didn't make a loud enough thump when he fell on the stairs, or maybe there was not enough fire, smoke and flames in the burglar alarm—at any rate, they got ready to do it over. And in the meantime Bill Thornly, the cameraman, took a picture of several of us standing at the foot of the idol's stairway before we could stop him.

Cheseboro Supplies Antique Atmosphere.

It's a pretty good picture, only it's not very technical because George Cheseboro was smoking a cigar. Grace Darmond told George that cigars weren't made in the sixteenth century, but George said this one was, and Grace said that if age added strength to cigars, she believed he was right.

"The Hope Diamond Mystery" looks like big stuff. The action I saw Stuart Paton doping out was only part of the prologue, showing how the diamond, which, according to legend, once ornamented an East Indian idol, was stolen by an adventurer and became a hoodoo of bad luck to everyone who owned it thereafter because of a curse put upon the stone by the priests of the temple.

After the prologue the story comes down to modern times, and Grace Darmond as a girl of today, but a reincarnation of the nautch girl of four hundred years ago, and George Cheseboro, a descendant of the French cavalier, are kept hitting the high spots in adventures that end only in the fifteenth episode, when everybody is made happy and the curse is removed by the jinxed gem being placed back on the breast of the goddess.

May Yohe, Author, Has Part.

There is a fine cast. In addition to Miss Darmond, the star, George Cheseboro, the leading man, and Boris Karoloff, the high priest, there are Carmen Phillips, Harry Carter, who was brought all the way from New York to play the heavy, a villainous Chinaman, William Marion, William Buckley, Captain Clayton, Ethel Shannon and May Yohe, who is also the author of the story from which the scenario is taken.

The action ranges from India in the sixteenth century to modern Europe and America, and goes back to India, then all over the world. Of course no one is better qualified to write the story of the celebrated Hope Diamond than May Yohe—no one who has ever had a better chance of finding out if there really is a jinx on the gem than she, because May Yohe used to wear the famous stone along with the other jewels of the famous Hope collection to "swarries" and swell parties in London when she was Lady Francis Hope, the intimate of royalty, the toast of the town for her beauty, wit and vivacity.

I don't know how much of her own story she has put into the Hope Diamond Mystery, but I imagine that May Yohe could dig back in her memories and find material for half a dozen serials.

Hart Refuses Generous Offer to Give Part Time to Stage

ALTHOUGH he was offered a small fortune to return to the stage for a single season, it has become known that William S. Hart, star in Paramount Pictures, has just declined an offer tendered him by Al H. Woods, the New York theatrical producer.

Mr. Woods sent a special emissary, Rufus Le Maire, to Los Angeles in an effort to persuade Mr. Hart to accept his offer. It is understood that the Woods offer amounted to $15,000 a week, with a guarantee of forty weeks. Advices from Los Angeles are that Mr. Woods extended the film star his choice of a percentage of the gross receipts for the season, a big salary guarantee with a percentage of profits, or any combination of salary and percentage of receipts.

With a play all written especially for Mr. Hart, Woods argued that nothing need prevent the Paramount star from producing motion pictures while playing on the stage. Mr. Hart, however, refused. He pointed out that his production plans were so vast that he could not afford to give the time to rehearsing and appearing in a play.

Before going into motion pictures Mr. Hart had established a country-wide reputation as an actor of rare ability. In attempting to sign him to a stage contract, Mr. Woods was not trying to get a person possessed of no experience on the speaking stage.

Brady Wishes Producers to Help Americanization Week

WILLIAM A. BRADY, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has requested the producing and distributing members to co-operate with the Americanization Committee, of which Franklin K. Lane is chairman, in the observance of Americanization week, which is the week beginning May 29. A special effort will be made to book for that week pictures dealing with Americanization.

There will be co-operation in all branches of the industry; and the publicity, advertising and exploitation departments are getting busy. President Brady is certain the industry will put the same energy into the Americanization movement as it did in the Liberty Loan drives and the other patriotic work during the war.

Head of Lynch Enterprises Buys Oldest Florida Daily

S. A. LYNCH, head of the Lynch Enterprises, Atlanta, Ga., which act as agents for the Famous Players-Lasky Film Company in the southeastern territory, has branched out into the newspaper business by purchasing the Florida Metropolis, published in Jacksonville. The Metropolis is one of the oldest and most influential afternoon papers in the state.

Just what plans Mr. Lynch will put into effect have not yet been announced, but the sale has caused wide comment and some surprise, as the Lynch enterprises had not previously had any newspaper holdings, although interested in other lines. The Lynch enterprises operate the Alcazar, Grand and Prince Theatres in Tampa, and several theatres in Jacksonville, as well as other theatres throughout the southeast.

Film Men Write Letters That Encourage M. P. T. Association

THE M. P. T. Association, with the co-operation of the M. P. T. League for Better Pictures, claims a basis of public approval and support for its existence. There is a hope expressed by the president of the association to benefit the class and quality of picture production by influences directed toward the producer of films.

It is planned to have individual films indorsed by the association and league, without any purposes to censor features. An emblem has been chosen to, ultimately, find its way to the screen as an indorsement of films bearing the insignia.

Now comes from the association copies of three letters that have been signed by picture men—Hiram Abrams and Joe Brandt, producers, and one from Sam Bullock, executive secretary of the Northern Ohio Exhibitors' Association. Copies of these letters have been received by Moving Picture World, and the originals are on file with George A. Maul, secretary of the association and league.

Kosmik Films to Expand

L. C. WHEELER, one of the officials of the Kosmik Films, Inc., is responsible for the statement that the Kosmik people intend to build a studio on the West Coast after their current serial, "The Hope Diamond Mystery," is completed, and will, besides making other serials, produce feature dramas also. Kosmik is now negotiating for other stars and capable directors for these future productions. A number of stories have also been purchased for these pictures.

Hayakawa to Build Studio.

Upon his return from New York early in June, Sessue Hayakawa plans to begin the construction of a studio on Melrose avenue near the site of the Brunton plant, where the future Sessue Hayakawa Feature Plays will be made. The buildings of the new studio are to be ultra modern in structure, and the architectural features will combine both the Spanish and the Japanese. The administration building is to be set back on a lawn, and Japanese gardens will occupy the places between the stages. Until his own studio is completed, Hayakawa will work at the old Griffith studio on Sunset Boulevard.

Niblos to Form Company.

Fred Niblo and his wife, Enid Bennett, who have been identified with Thomas H. Ince productions for several years, have just let it become known that they are about to enter the independent production field, Miss Bennett to be starred in feature productions and Mr. Niblo to make all-star pictures which will be known as Fred Niblo Productions.

To Resume Making of Big Features.

Preparations to renew production of features are rapidly going forward at the studios of the National Film Corporation of America in Hollywood. C. A. Willat, National's new general manager, announces that the new National features will be screened from book adaptations exclusively, with two proven "box office" stars in the principal roles. A definite releasing program, as well as a schedule for production, will be mapped out fully before active production commences.

Veiller Back from New York.

Bayard Veiller, of Metro's ecenario department, has returned from a trip to New York, where he went to secure the services of noted writers to turn out stories for production at Metro studios. On the list he brought back with him were the names of Irvin Cobb, Henry Rowland, Arthur Somers Roche, George Kibbe Turner, Arthur Stringer, Don Byrne and Lucian Chamberlain. These writers are expected to arrive in Los Angeles about June 1 to make their headquarters at Metro while learning the technique of screen play writing.

Cartoonist McManus in Town.

George McManus, famous cartoonist and creator of the "Bringing Up Father" series, has arrived in Los Angeles and was met at the station by Johnny Ray, Margaret Fitzroy and other members of the cast of the "Jiggs in Society" film comedies that have been made at the Christie studio recently. Director Reggie Morris was on hand with a cameraman, and obtained about 500 feet of "welcome" film, which will be filed away in the Christie studio library. Mr. McManus will remain in Filmland several weeks, and will confer with the director of the "Jiggs" comedies upon new situations for future pictures.

Metro Visitors.

Harry Lustig, inter-mountain and Pacific Coast exchange manager for Metro Pictures Corporation, and Fred Voight, manager of the San Francisco exchange, were visitors at the Metro studio in Hollywood.

Geraghty to Direct in East.

Frank Geraghty, assistant director of the recent J. Warren Kerrigan pictures, has left for New York, where he will direct a series of twenty-four pictures for the American Pictures Associates, a new film syndicate headed by William Howard Taft.

New Theatre for Anaheim.

A new theatre is soon to be erected on Central street in Anaheim, Cal., for Head & Ingram, who already operate two theatres in that town. The new building, which will be three stories in height, will be 54 by 150 feet, and will be constructed of terra cotta and glazed brick. The first floor will have two store rooms besides the theatre, and the rest of the building will be given over to offices. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of 1,100, and the stage will be equipped for both vaudeville and moving pictures. Including the $20,000 pipe organ which is to be installed in the theatre, the building will cost approximately $75,000.

Admit Service Men Free.

Soldiers, sailors and marines, active and discharged, who wear a gold chevron on their right sleeve, will be admitted free of charge at the Superba Theatre hereafter, by order of the management. The policy went into effect during the fourth week's showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul."

New Laboratory Head.

Ray H. Klaffkee, formerly with Universal and Fox, has been appointed head of the Metro studio photographic and laboratory departments.

Metroites Go East.

Winchell Smith, playwright and film producer, and June Mathis, scenarioist, of the Metro studios, have left for New York. Mr. Smith will produce "The Wheel," a new play, on the speaking stage before he returns to the west coast, and Miss Mathis will spend about three months in the eastern Metro studio.

Bankers Visit Christie Studio.

Three hundred bankers of Southern California, during a convention held in Los Angeles, were guests at the Christie studio recently and were entertained by watching five of the Christie directors working on scenes for coming comedies, and then looking at a recent Christie release, "Petticoats and Pants," which was run off on the studio screen for their benefit. George McManus, who is here from the East, made a speech, Bobby Vernon sang a song, and Gus Leonard did a vaudeville sketch.

Leave for Australia.

Dudley Blanchard, formerly in charge of the cutting room of the National studio, and Gert Glennon, a National cameraman, sailed for Australia May 18 with the Wilfred Lucas party, who came here not long ago to engage players and technical film men for the "Snowy" Baker Productions in Australia. Blanchard will be cutter and Glennon will co-direct with Wilfred Lucas on the Australian films.

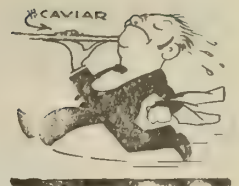
Futurist Miner's Lamp—Cherry Valley Idea.

Cherry Valley, Alice, Has Got to Have Its Caviar



They Eat It Up Now, Alice. It's Their Favorite Relish.

By WILLIAM J. REILLY.

DEAR ALICE:—Well Alice, I suppose you've heard before about this composer, Henry Wallingforth Shakespeare, assaulting the front door of the Hall of Fame by getting off the remark about "caviar to the general."

Of course, Alice, he intended no deflections on the generals who during the late muss eked out their existence on caviar and Patti de Foy Grah while their doughboys dined luxuriantly on canned goldfish and corned willy.

A Rare Entree, Alice.

What H. W. Shakespeare meant, Alice, was that caviar came to the general ("general public" Alice, is the World's Almanac translation) about as frequent as orange juice to punch at a Sinn Fein jubilee.

But speaking about caviar, Alice, you know us people associated in the production of pictures like to say that we got a drama that's caviar to the general. You know—caters to limousine trade only, admission to the 9 o'clock show by engraved invitation, and all that dress shirt stuff.

Well, out in Cherry Valley, P. A., Alice, there's an exhibitor the exchanges address as John Gecoma, Valley Theatre. John often remarked that it was funny that it was funny they named it Cherry Valley when it didn't raise cherries at all, the kind of boys who showed the Kaiser what was meant by reverse English on "Der Tag."

No Politics About Him.

Now John's what you call a democratic American. Alice, one of these fellows who eat their dinner in the middle of the day, shake your hand like they meant it and read the boxing news regular. But John said to himself not so many Tuesdays ago, "I gotta get me a prospector's outfit and go after this caviar trade. Cherry Valley's getting fed up on this ordinary super-feature stuff. What they want now is the extraordinary-extra-super-special. I'm gona bring some caviar to the general. I don't care for generals myself personally, but I feel it's about time to cater to the Five Hundred."

He spoke, Alice, in the upper truth register, as we say in operatic circles, which in the English of Maeterlinck means with more horse sense than poetry.

They All Play Five Hundred.

For when anybody goes after the Five Hundred of Cherry Valley, they go after the whole works. For Mr. McAdoo's last census lists Cherry Valley as a beautiful little community convenient to Pittsburgh and possessing every advantage from natural gas to flourishing barber shops—also a population of 497. Five hundred, Alice is the round figures permitted by the Department of Interior Decoration for civic boosting purposes.

So when Mr. Gecoma spoke out his decision to cater to the Five Hundred of Cherry Valley he talked like John D. Rockafeller laying in plans for a hard winter in gas prices.

And further reasoning as to what picture would bat 1.000 in the caviar league and work in harmony with the sentiments and homely, honest feelings of the Five Hundred, Mr. Gecoma reasoned as follows:

"My constituency is made up of mining families. If I can get a film that just oozes of mining atmosphere, with succulent sub-titles here and there about such familiar things as mules, rock men, cages, miners' boots, lanterns, dynamite and the like, why I'll just have to get an extra hand to park the limousines and carry home the loose change, that's all."

Took Metro to Do It.

And so he perused and meditated, Alice, until one day the cover ad on Moving Picture World hit him in the eye like the brick hit that Cherry Valley Heine who happened to overlook the colors going by in the Victory Parade. The words that spoke to him with such ventriloquence and power, Alice, were "The Red Lantern." He wired J. E. Davis, the Metro exchange boss in Pittsburgh with such haste that he forgot to mention whether he'd play it percentage or take it like he used to take his likker—straight.

For in his imagination, Alice, he called up "The Red Lantern" as it would be on his screen—the lanterns on the miners' hats winkin' in the murky gloom (he could just see that title now)—brave miners robbin' the pillars and the cage droppin' down into the bowels of the earth bearin' its precious load of human freight and the villain also.

Not a Laundry Drama, Though.

I hate to picture his feelings, Alice, when he read further into Jack Meador's ad layout and found that "The Red Lantern" was a Chinese drama, and Chinese were never popular in Cherry Valley since Wang Koo lost the Chief of Police's best red shirt.

But hope, clinging eternally like it does to human breasts and sob poetry, said to John: "Somewhere in this picture there must be a lantern that will stand as a glorification of the miner's lamp—when Senator Lodge is elected president maybe what lamp styles will be years hence Cherry Valley's gotta look into the future."

Well Alice, Cherry Valley looked. The Five Hundred took to that "Red Lantern" picture like a reservation Indian to advocates of 2.75 beer. They caught on right away to the spirit of the thing as interpreted by the alert-minded Mr. Gecoma, they saw the miner's lamp which guided their footsteps and their rough-manicured hands at their toil in the mines lifted up and glorified so to speak. Especially by Nazimova in her great scene and costume at the Feast of the Red Lantern.

Alice, He Sure Cleaned Up.

I wish I had the Revenue Department's figure, Alice, to show you how they came to see that picture which is one of those Fewer and Greater productions on the Metro Menu. The Five Hundred is strong for Nazimova, and I want to tell you some of them even went so far as to say she must be popular even in Johnstown, Pa. And I understand they've inaugurated a Feast of the Miner's Lamp as a yearly institution.

BILL.

Shea's Hippodrome Among Many Theatres Booking Second Series of Harold Lloyds

HEADED by Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, an imposing array of contracts on the second series of Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies was received by Pathe during the past week. Eight of the largest motion picture theatres in the country are included in the list. In several of these houses the young comedian's name will be blazoned in electric lights for the first time. The prominence he has attained by his series of two-reelers, which wound up with "An Eastern Westerner" makes him an unmistakably high-class box office attraction in the best theatres.

"Jim" Clemmer, one of the live wire exhibitors of the Northwest, has again taken the Lloyds for his house in Seattle. Mr. Clemmer featured the first Lloyds with tremendous success and he lost no time tying up the second series.

Five Days in Buffalo.

Paul Gustanovic, managing director of the Strand and Orpheum theatres in Cleveland, has billed the Lloyds for his two theatres. The Strand in Canton and Akron have also booked the new series, as have the Liberty of Youngstown and the Casino in Chester, two of the best conducted houses in their territory.

The Lloyds will enjoy five days' booking at Shea's Hippodrome. These comedies will offer Manager Harold Franklin wide avenues for the live exploitation he gives every feature playing his house.

During the last month Lloyd has received an ovation from newspaper critics everywhere through his work in "Haunted Spooks" and "An Eastern Westerner." These comments were earned by the young comedian, who surpassed his best efforts in these pictures.

Steve Mahoney, motion picture editor of the Salt Lake Telegram, was exuberant over "Haunted Spoks," as is indicated by the following criticism of the bill at the exclusive Paramount-Empress Theatre:

What Paper Critic Said.

"When the crowds poured from the Paramount-Empress Theatre last night there was a chorus of voices in all parts of the theatre exclaiming, 'Why I knew him when he played one-reelers—when he was Lonesome Luke—when the only place they showed his pictures was at Mehesy's Nickelodeon—when he was nobody at all—when he worked for Bebe Daniels.

"All that is just a sign that someone has arrived. When a person in a crowd says 'I knew him when—' you can rest assured that they are speaking of someone who has perched upon the top rung—or is very near the top—of the ladder of success.

"It is hard to tell just what has brought Lloyd up in popularity from his crudely made single reel comedies. Probably it was the high ideals he set which he gradually worked for, but could not fully attain in his hastily made single reelers. Probably it was just opportunity—or a fickle turn of the public's fancy.

"But the fact remains that he is entirely pleasing. He gets as many laughs as any comedian who ever shadowed a screen. And the laughs aren't coarse—nor are they muffled or ill-tasting because of the smear of a screen custard pie or a splash of a dripping ice cream cornucopia. They are cleancut, wholesome, pleasant laughs. There is no blush about them, no coarseness, no unpleasant after-taste."

Delivers Speech on Picture Publicity

Leon H. Grandjean, publicity manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans, delivered a talk on Motion Picture Publicity before the New Orleans Advertising Club recently. Mr. Grandjean talked for more than an hour on the fifteen different methods used by the Saengers to create good-will for their chain of theatres—as well as packed houses. The fifty advertising experts present all agreed at the close of the meeting that they "never knew there was so much to motion picture publicity."

Robbins Joins Metro Writing Staff

Marc Robbins, motion picture writer and actor, has joined the Metro scenario department at the company's west coast studios in Hollywood. Mr. Robbins has been affiliated with the picture industry for seven years and in that time has gained a wide knowledge of its many requirements. Before going into motion pictures Mr. Robbins was an actor and stage director on the speaking stage for twenty-five years.

Pathe Lists Blackton's "Passers By" and Max Linder Film for June Release

FEATURES, both adaptations of stage successes, are included among the June releases of Pathe. Aside from this fact, the release of "The Little Cafe" on June 6 will mark the return to the screen of the popular comedian, Max Linder, who, having served France during the great war, is now resuming work on the screen.

J. Stuart Blackton has contributed perhaps his finest effort in "Passers By," a version of C. Haddon Chambers' stage triumph, which for years won fame and fortune for its author and for several prominent actors, both in the United States and abroad. It is booked for issue on June 20 and is sixth in the order of Blackton releases through Pathe, its predecessors being "The Moonshine Trail," "Dawn," "My Husband's Other Wife," "Respectable by Proxy" and "The Blood Barrier."

Rawlinson Is New Pathe Star.

A new Pathe star will be introduced in "Passers By" in the person of Herbert Rawlinson, one of the best known and most popular players appearing before the camera. He has been starred in other Blackton productions, but in none that have been released through Pathe. Appearing with him is a highly specialized cast. Tom Lewis, W. J. Ferguson and Dick Lee, three fine character actors, are cast prominently.

Tom Lewis Plays "Cabby."

Mr. Lewis, who is one of the bright stars on the Keith vaudeville circuit, considered it especial good fortune to appear in this picture as the "Cabby" because of his respect for the ability of Mr. Blackton and for the author, C. Haddon Chambers.

W. J. Ferguson, one of the oldest character actors on the American stage, was winning fame anew in "The Little Whopper," which played for a year at the Casino Theatre, New York, when he was called into the studio by Mr. Blackton. His delineation of the butler in "Passers By" is said to be a notable tribute to his art.

While "Passers By" is a drama with more than the average share of human interest, "The Little Cafe" is of a much lighter vein, being a comedy of the type that holds a general appeal for all classes of audience.

As a stage attraction "The Little Cafe" was routed in every principal city in the country, under the direction of Klaw and Erlanger. In taking it over the country, the theatrical syndicate starred some of the stage's favorite comedians in the role enacted before the camera by Linder. Supporting Linder is Wanda Lyon.

The Trio Are Framing "The Law of the Yukon" in the Scene at the Left in This Realart Release.

The story of the Frozen North, which was made by Mayflower. The "vamp" in the center takes a look at the heroine and then turns around in scene three and endeavors to win the hero.

A RIOT OF ROLLICKING FUN!

HAROLD LLOYD

in AN EASTERN WESTERNER

A TWO REEL COMEDY

Listen!

Harold Lloyd is a giant in filmdom to-day.

His comedies are generally billed bigger than the feature, because they pull bigger than the feature.

Just read a few of the comments on the last Lloyd comedy, "Haunted Spooks":

"One of the funniest and cleverest comedies yet registered."
—Morning Telegraph.

"A word of blessing for 'Haunted Spooks.' Hilarious enough to cause even a medium to cease for the time being to take ghosts seriously."—N. Y. Sun.

"Astonishingly fresh and diverting."—N. Y. Tribune.

"The audience roared. It's the funniest comedy of the season."
—N. Y. Evening Sun.

"Lloyd made a hit."—N. Y. Globe.

"Brightest spot on the Strand program this week. 'Haunted Spooks' brought down the house."—Wid's.

"Contains a flock of snikkers. An object lesson to comedy producers."—Variety.

"Brightest spot on the Rivoli program. Comedy in the real sense."—Variety.

"The man who discovered Harold Lloyd deserves a vote of thanks. If you never heard laughter come in gales you will when you see his latest comedy."
—Minneapolis Tribune.

"'Haunted Spooks' attains the supreme heights of comedy. Not an inch of wasted film. Every scene counts as a laugh. The gags are startling, original and sidesplitting Lloyd is a big league comedian, his company is big league and whoever does the directing is big league."—Wid's.

Doris Keane Repeats Her Stage Triumph in Fine Screen Version of "Romance"

By EDWARD WEITZEL

THE stage version of "Romance" was first produced in 1913 and the play has been acted almost continuously ever since. That means that the Edward Sheldon drama is nearly seven years old. It also means that during the time it has held the stage moving pictures have developed from a crude, inartistic attempt at story telling to the finely constructed medium of today. During these seven years the stage has had plays of a much higher intellectual quality, realistic dramas that were without gloss or glamor and smartly written comedies that poked fun at poor, old-fashioned romance. But they have not lasted long, seldom longer than one season. And now that the screen version of the Sheldon play is finished and among the United Artists Corporation's releases, Doris Keane has gone back to London to resume the run of the original play.

Perhaps there is something in romance, after all!

A Tense Human Drama.

There is little of the spirit of today in "Romance." Its story is of the New York of fifty years ago, but it has the fragrance and the beauty of the social graces of its time and its men and women are flesh and blood, with the curious mixture of strength and weakness belonging to the normal human being.

As a stage play it proved its claim to being a conflict of human wills by the grip of its suspense and the absence of anything to detract from the main path of its story. The screen play is no less absorbing and free from that enemy of all good drama known as padding. Its people move in an environment that is always truthfully reflected, but it does not rely on any of the first aids to a poor plot, and no attempt is made to divert attention from its story by throwing in elaborate but unnecessary scenic effects or melodramatic action of the same character.

Starting with a prologue, "Romance" introduces the venerable Bishop of St. Giles, dreaming by the fireplace in the parlor of his home in lower Fifth avenue. Fifty years before, when the fashionable life of the city clustered about Washington Square, and the Academy of Music at Fourteenth street and Irving Place was its musical center, the Bishop, then the youthful rector of St. Giles, had a love affair with Rita Cavallini, an Italian opera singer who had set the town buzzing with admiration for her talent and her beauty. His grandson comes in to announce his engagement, and to save the young man from error in his affair of the heart, the Bishop tells him of how a pure love ennobled the woman who started by amusing herself with the infatuation of an ardent but simple-hearted clergyman and made her strong enough to renounce her own happiness for his sake.

Follows Closely to Original Play.

The reopening of this long closed chapter in Bishop Armstrong's life occupies the greater portion of the story, the screen version following closely the construction of the original play. In fact, it is doubtful if any acted drama has ever been so faithfully reproduced on the screen. As a test of the wisdom of not recasting the material and altering the plot of a well-written play, "Romance," in film form, vindicates the judgment of its makers.

While living up to its title during the whole course of its action, it has but little respect for convention. Had it been written and produced during the period it depicts it would have been hailed as one of the first of the realistic dramas. When it is shown that the polished leader of society, Cornelius Van Tuyl, is the protector of Madame Cavallini, using the word in its derogatory sense, at the time he gives a reception in her honor at his own home and invites the four hundred of the day to be present, not forgetting the rector of St. Giles, one may be forgiven for any degree of mental shock. We are supposed to be very daring in this twentieth year of the twentieth century and to discuss subjects in public that were tabooed in private when crinoline was in fashion, but the calm way the dignified Van Tuyl risks his reputation and the resentment of his friends by his affair with the opera singer dims the luster of Pinaro's most audacious man of the world.

Cavallini Saves the Rector.

There have been several well-known plays in which a minister has become infatuated with a woman of the stage. "The Christian" is a famous example. But none of these plays has been as truthful and as free from overdoses of mock sentiment. Cavallini is a woman who has sinned and she is made to reveal all her weakness of character as well as her charm of manner, and the strength of her devotion when she realizes the purity of the passion she has inspired in the young clergyman.

The rector of St. Giles never attempts to deceive himself. Intoxicated by the beauty and unfamiliar witchery of the Italian singer, he does not rest until he tells her of his love. When he learns of her relation with Van Tuyl and goes to her apartment at the Brevoort that he may warn her of her danger from Divine wrath, his honesty of purpose cannot be questioned. But he overestimates his strength. Realizing he is losing her forever, the rector gives way to his physical nature and begs Rita to become his for the moment. She recalls him to his real self by telling that it is for him to say the sort of a woman she is to become. He asks her forgiveness for his own sin in tempting her, and she goes back to her own country and enters a religious retreat. The end of the story finds the rector married to the sister of Cornelius Van Tuyl.

Splendid Performance by Doris Keane.

Doris Keane's performance of Rita Cavallini is a fascinating character study of the warmth and less welcome impulses of a woman of the Latin race, reared in poverty, who achieves great renown in one of the few careers then open to her sex. The star's finest stroke is her method of indicating the soul of the opera singer, that is ready to respond when the right influence appeals to it. Her expressive face finds in the screen a perfect mirror for her splendid emotional power, and she has succeeded in catching the tricks of the silent stage wonderfully well in so short a space of time.

Basil Sydney plays the young rector and the aged bishop with fine sincerity and is an impressive figure at all times. Norman Trevor makes Cornelius Van Tpyl thoroughly convincing, which is praise of the highest order. Director Chet Withey has worked in harmony with his subject, and the author of "Romance" owes him a vote of thanks for sticking so close to the written drama.

Baptists Rap Moving Pictures

Moving pictures are placed in the same category as lax laws as a cause of divorce by the Southern Baptist convention recently held in Washington. In its report the committee on temperance and social services denounces the moving pictures now produced as being a primary cause of the large number of unhappy marriages.

"Nearly every film upon the screen contains somewhere some evil suggestion," it is declared. "Many of the films are based on the 'eternal triangle,' and the suggestion of disregard, if not open breach, of the marital relation."

"I Have Come to Cheer You. To Bring You Happiness. To Tell You of My Love."
So says Basil Sydney to Doris Keane, the star in "Romance," a tense, human-interest drama of love, made by United Artists.

Louis Reichert

Louis Reichert Is Appointed Realart Head in Washington

LOUIS REICHERT has been appointed Washington manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, succeeding William H. Rippard. Since February, 1920, Mr. Reichert has been assistant to Harry W. Willard, Realart's Chicago manager.

Reichert has been in the motion picture industry for more than fourteen years. He was first connected with Thomas A. Edison, Inc., as office manager of the foreign department. From there he went to the General Film Company as purchasing agent, which position he held for two years, when he was promoted to the position of assistant general manager.

He was connected with the General Film Company in the latter capacity for four years and then accepted the position of San Francisco manager for Metro Pictures Corporation, where he remained for five years until joining Realart last February.

Picture Directors' Body Entertain Their Wives

AN unusually pleasant evening was spent at the club rooms of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, 234 West Fifty-fifth street, New York City, on Tuesday evening, May 17, when women were for the first time allowed the privilege of social intercourse with its members on the hallowed ground of fraternal association.

One of the events of the evening was the exhibition of scenes photographed at the Motion Picture Directors' Ball. These pictures which included solo dances which had been performed at the ball, as well as closeups of the dancers, and prominent screen artists who were present, were much appreciated by the guests. Color pictures demonstrating a new color method invented by J. Searle Dawley were also shown. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. J. Searle Dawley, Mr. and Mrs. George Irving, Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Seay, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Simpson, Mr. and Mrs. James Vincent, Robert Vignola, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Borzage, Mr. and Mrs. C. Jay Williams, Harry McRae Webster, John Joseph Harvey, Peggy Shanor, Alma Frances, Valentine Grant, Juanita Hansen, Irene Tams, and last but not least in the enjoyment of the evening, W. F. Haddock, who made an admirable master of ceremonies. Lillian R. Gale was the hostess of the evening, and looked well to the comfort of the guests.

"Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" Wins Place on Criterion Theatre Program

WITH its first co-operation with a motion picture company, the National Geographic Society, one of the most important scientific bodies in the world, has assumed a position among the electric signs of Broadway. This came last week when "The Valley Of Ten Thousand Smokes," which is being distributed by Educational Films Corporation, became one of the features of the bill at the Criterion Theatre. It has been given an indefinite booking.

Behind the appearance of this picture at the Criterion there is a story that shows how rapidly work is done in motion picture circles. Dr. Riesenfeld happened to see "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" on Friday, May 14, after his advertising for the week had already been made up. However, he declared that this was one of the most wonderful motion pictures he had seen and decided that nothing would interfere with its taking a place on the Criterion bill immediately.

His publicity department was put to work making the correction in such advertisements as had not "closed," but another difficulty remained because only the working print was available in New York. This was solved by Educational dispatching one of its staff men to its laboratories in Wilkesbarre, Pa., Friday afternoon. He returned with the completed print late Saturday night and took it immediately to the Riesenfeld offices, where the accompanying music was completed. It was shown on Sunday.

A National Reservation.

While "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" sounds like the work of some clever motion picture title writer, as a matter of fact it is the official title given a wonderful section of Alaska country in the vicinity of Mount Katmai where there occurred several years ago one of the greatest eruptions in all history. So important has this section been considered that it has been made a national reservation by proclamation of President Wilson. However, so far as known it has not been visited by any white persons except the various expeditions sent out by the National Geographic Society as a part of their world-wide plan of scientific investigation.

The name of the picture comes from the fact that the Mt. Katmai eruption created in the adjoining valley literally millions of openings in the earth emitting smoke, known as fumaroles, and from many of these the smoke ascends to a height of 500 feet. Such an unusual freak of nature is it that though a person a few feet from one of these fumaroles may be suffering from the intense cold, the heat from one of the openings is so intense as to make bacon literally jump from a frying pan, an incident shown in the pictures.

"A Splendid Hazard" Deals With Napoleon's Intimate Life

THE phenomenal success of "Moliere" and John Drinkwater's "Abraham Lincoln," coupled with the planned production of a play dealing with the life of General Lee and a revival of "Disraeli" is believed by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation to presage an unparalleled vogue for stage and screen plays exploiting historic figures.

Anticipating this trend many months ago, Mayflower purchased the screen rights to Harold MacGrath's novel, "A Splendid Hazard," which Allan Dwan has adapted to the screen. The MacGrath novel deals with an intimate and little known episode in the life of Napoleon.

No figure in history, says the Mayflower statement, is more picturesque or more dominant than Napoleon Bonaparte—soldier, idealist and romanticist. A philanderer and a man of violent passions, his private life was fraught with clandestine escapades in which beautiful women figured largely.

"With the possible exception of Abraham Lincoln," says Allan Dwan, "very little has been done in the way of reproducing on screen or stage intimate phases of famous men's lives. In the early days of screen history, the market was flooded with quasi-historical films, colorless and highly conventional.

That there exists a ready market for entertainment of this kind is conclusively proved by the success of the stage plays founded on these lines, and the lively interest manifested by exhibitors in "A Splendid Hazard," which will be released by the First National Exhibitor's Circuit, according to Mayflower.

Three More Stanley Theatres.

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of America, has announced that the corporation has taken over from Michael Stiefel three of the largest and best known motion picture theatres in Northeast Philadelphia.

The theatres are the Iris, at Kensington and Allegheny avenues, the Lafayette, at Kinsington avenue near Cambria street, and the Star, at Kensington avenue near Lehigh.

Grauman Uses Local News Angle to Interest in "Why Change Your Wife?"

GETTING away from the typical Grauman layout the Rialto, Los Angeles, picks up a local angle to get interest for De Mille's "Why Change Your Wife?" It uses a frame in which the design is not too pronounced to detract from the text, and hooks up with the statement of a local judge that 4,100 divorce cases had been filed in the Los Angeles courts in a single year. No wonder that "Why Change Your Wife?" is held over for a Pretty Pathe Scene and Tableau Poster

KEEPING up to the artistic standard they have set, the Pathe Exchange has issued a very pretty poster for "Rio Grande," the Edwin Carewe production of the Augustus Thomas play. In the reproduction the figures do not show as clearly as they do

Trimmed Ads on Account of a Strike

H. A. Albright, of the American Butte, writes that he has had to cut down his advertising on account of the strike of the miners and that he is doing practically nothing until things get moving again. He has cut down his space, cut out excessive lobby work and is marking time. But lately he looked over a page layout, looked over the signature again and adopted it in place of the one he had been using. It is much more characteristic, and so better, yet we like the idea of making the signature a trade mark.

Booms Semon All Over the House Front

CLEARLY the Tudor Theatre, Atlanta, seems to think that there is ticket selling value to Larry Semon. They got up a very nice looking cut-out from a 24-sheet for "The Boomerang," and then hid the rest of the house front behind a set of painted signs, though they left the way to the box office clear. The past year has witnessed a decided change in the attitude of managers toward the comedies. They are at last realizing that a good story and often more hard coin.

People want to laugh—they always have—but for years they were educated to regard the five-reeler as the test of merit in a show and then followed this lead. To-day the comedy made a little better than the average is just as well worth booming as the drama, and is far more apt to sell. The Tudor management seems to know this.

Possibly This Is Not Exactly Correct

Advertising Constance Talmadge, Johnny Mack, of the Hill Theatre, Newark, gets things slightly mixed when he announces "Her costume in a vanity box, she swims by the light of the moon." Our understanding of "Two Weeks" is that Miss Talmadge took the costume out of the vanity box and put it on before she went into the water—but we're willing to bet that Mr. Mack's version packed them in.

Hooked in With the Theatre

THE Courier-Times, Tyler, Texas, worked in with the Palace Theatre in booming "Pollyanna" lately. The theatre gave the newspaper a special performance to which the clergy and school teachers were invited. This was a matinee starting at half past four, for the benefit of the teachers, and the public was not admitted until the first night show the opening day of the three day run. Getting the newspaper to sponsor the performance got plenty of newspaper mention at small cost and gave the added value of the newspaper's co-operation.

Gets Out a Calendar for Nine Day Month

Although he plays only a couple of days a week, generally Thursdays and Saturdays, and has but nine playing dates in April,

What Others Have Done Points the Way for You

Tom Cannon, of the Majestic, Greenfield, Tenn., gets out a monthly calendar with the playing dates in red and three undersheets giving the details. It is a pretty job, too, the top sheets being cream, with the last sheet cut slightly larger, a contrasting brown. His scale is 10 and 20 and 30 with a fifty cent top for "Eyes of the World," which he ran for two days. Oddly enough he has his thirty cents top for Thursdays and the twenty cent price for Saturday showings.

St. Louis Theatre Combination Employes Hook-up Scheme to Get Inexpensive Spaces

CONTINUING their scheme of using combination spaces for advertising displays, the Paramount string in St. Louis is getting plenty of space at a smaller cost than did each house running its own advertisement. In the samples shown the spaces are six columns wide and from sixteen to eighteen inches. The greater portion of the space is devoted to the Kings and Royal, which combine to play the first run. The advance is twelve inches across six columns, while the today is an additional inch. The Pershing plays a lone hand, but the Shenandoah, Grand-Florissant, Juanita and Lindell combine in a single space for the four houses, with the bill running a half week. With the exception of the Lindell, the houses take their names from the streets on which they are located, the Grand-Florrisant carrying the names of both streets. With Cleveland falling into line with double runs and other houses working in conjunction now and then, the idea seems to be spreading.

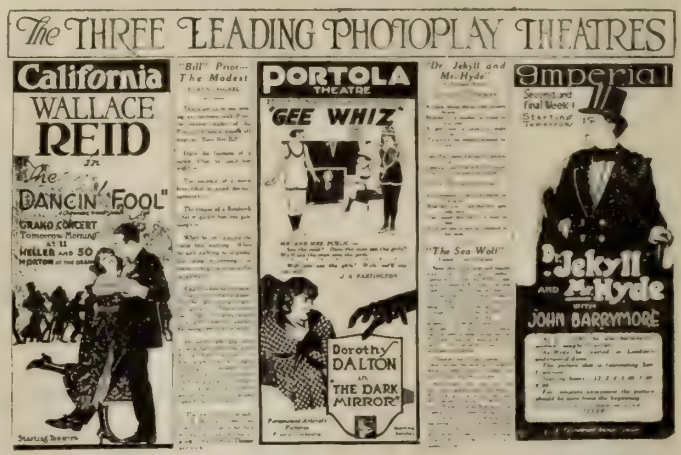
Nick Ayer's New Idea to Get Distinction Without Paying Too Much for Advertising

NICK AYER recently sent in a display for the three houses managed by Roth and Partington, in which each house got its prominence through staggering the spaces and permitting the heads to be stepped. He shows something else again in this cross page space, which does not rise as high, and yet gives each house an equal chance.



Three House Ads Which Are Split with Press Notices.

The use of two columns of readers splits the advertisement into sections and gives equal prominence to the three heads. At the same time less space is taken than where the ads have to be stepped, and each house gets an equal chance instead of the cream going to the advertisement rising highest in the scheme. It is a good idea and should interest other combinations.

Pathe Posters Still Keep Up to Standard

PATHE 24-sheets still keep up to standard, though because of the color scheme this stand for "The Miracle of Money" does not photograph as well as some. In the original the coloring is bright and contrasty and the general effect is excellent. The story does not lend itself well to pictured action, but the artist has succeeded in getting a pose which arouses curiosity, which is the next best point to vivid action. One wonders what the two women on the left have to do with the scene on the right, and is apt to go in order to find out.

Used a Divorce Contest and Won

The Birmingham Enterprises hooked the Birmingham News to an essay contest on the divorce question to boom "Why Change Your Wife" and cleaned up a good business on the De Mille production. The paper carried a story each day and played up the divorce angle in its own advertisements. Divorce is always an interesting subject for thought to married people, and by playing on this angle the widest appeal was made.

Of course, contests grow stale if they are overworked, but about every three months, if you can find something snappy to argue about, it will serve as a powerful business bringer at a cost of only a few ticket or cash prizes. Most managers seem to favor the ticket prize idea, but cash sounds better and surely six or more pure reading notices are worth fifteen or twenty dollars.

Can Jiggs Get in Society? Just Look Below

Phil Gersdorf Invents Something New in the Way of an Electrical Timer

JUST because this cut shows an advertisement for "Alarm Clock Andy" don't make the mistake of supposing that it is not worth your reading, for to advertise this Paramount attraction Phil Gersdorf has hit upon something so simple that now we know about it, the wonder is that no one thought of it before.

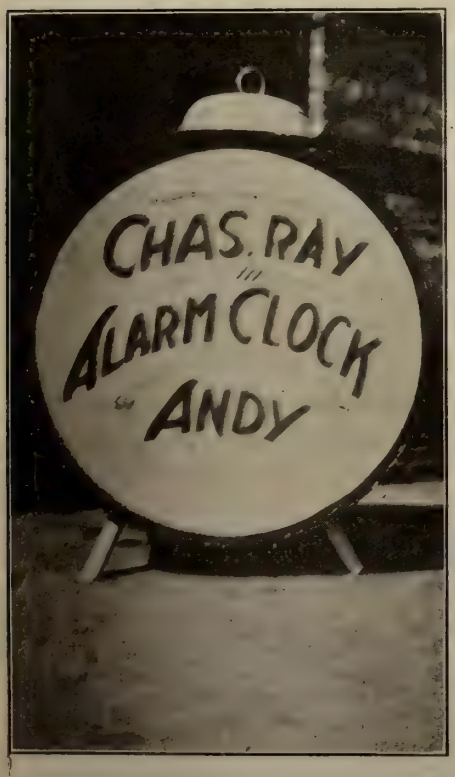
If you have not yet used this Charles Ray picture it is a whale of an idea. If you have already run that feature, it is a whale of an idea to use for some other picture, though it was Andy who brought Mr. Gersdorf's thinker to evolve this stunt.

It is a bit late for "Alarm Clock Andy" but this is because Gersdorf's hustle brought to Jacksonville the pre-release of several of the big films that he might stunt these for the benefit of others, and he was a bit late in getting around to this subject. Gersdorf has worked some capital stunts for the Lynch houses in Jacksonville.

Here's the Idea.

Of course an alarm clock is the best bet for the title, and Gersdorf wanted a big one. He rigged one from a discarded bass drum frame, a dishpan and what seems to be a curtain ring.

You can't very well rig an intermittent movement to a dishpan, so he got a large electric gong and set it in back of the faked clock. Then he ran the wires up to his private office and hooked up the dry cells.



How the Bass Drum Alarm Clock Looks.

On his desk was an oscillating fan; the sort which sweeps the room in an angle of nearly 180 degrees. Mr. Gersdorf had the electrician attach one end of the wire to the frame of the fan and fix the other so that at each oscillation the contact was made and the bell would ring for the second or two that the fan stays at rest while the shifting gear climbs.

The Rest was Easy.

After that the fan needed no watching. Each time the breeze-maker swung over to the left the bell rang downstairs—and downstairs was one of the busiest corners in Jacksonville. Even in May fans are useful in Florida, so there was no extra expense, but even where there is the few cents for current for the fan is more than offset by the value of the stunt.

If a more frequent ringing is desired, the wires can be split into a Y and so run that a contact is made at each sweep of the fan instead of only at one side. This can be done by splicing a short length to the two wires; making certain that the contact of the two strands is perfect.

The bell, of course, does not have to be attached to a clock, nor does it even have to be a bell. Any device actuated by electricity can be used and where you have no flasher it can even be used for this purpose with entire success.

Just Make a Note.

We do not believe that Mr. Gersdorf realizes what he has dug up. He was looking for a stunt for one film—and found it, but he has hit upon a scheme capable of a wide adaptation, and it will pay to remember that an oscillating fan can be used for more than one purpose.

Like a lot of other useful stunts, it just happened to be used, but now that Mr. Gersdorf has led the way, it will continue to be used, for it can perform a myriad of functions. Mr. Gersdorf has offered many good suggestions for particular films, but this is something more permanent.

Nothing is better for attracting transient trade, in particular, than an intermittent noise or movement maker. See what you can rig up to use this idea and let us know.

Keep Old Stunts Around for They May Fit Other Titles

SOME time ago Goldwyn produced "Sis Hopkins" and made use of Sis' famous slate. A number of exhibitors made up slates of various sizes. Some of them destroyed the stunt when it had been used. Some were able to use the same slates for "Daddy Longlegs" and now Vitagraph reports that many exhibitors are using a slate for Larry Semon's "School Days." The only way to work a stunt is to put it down cellar or up in the attic after it has been used, for the same idea can be worked with other titles. More than this, most props are capable of being worked over into something else in a pinch, and by storing old advertising stunts it will soon be found that the prop room will give an idea for almost any title needed.

Here's One Happy Press Agent

If you want to see a happy exploitation man, hustle around and look at Charles E. Moyer of the United Artists. The Victory Theatre, Kokomo, Ind., used all his press stuff in its campaign for "Down on the Farm." It used every blamed bit of it. Regular 100 per cent. stuff. There have been 90 per cent. press campaigns, but this is 100 per cent. full, and the Victory ran a rather long line of stuff, at that. No wonder Moyer smiles—even with some smiles costing what they do these days. His are the other sort.

ALTHOUGH the back to the overalls movement is dying out in the large cities, the idea is still being turned over, and this copy for a throwaway, sent in by J. H. Reiners, of the Grand and Colonial theatres, Camden, N. J., is good enough to get over if the idea is not too dead in your town.

Used Exchange Windows Just to Keep Others from Asking

TURNER and Dahnken, who have the First National franchise for the San Francisco territory, have lately discovered that they had one of the best stands in the city and did not know it.

Their exchange faces the Franciscan Church of St. Boniface, one of the largest and best attended churches in San Francisco. They were annoyed by people coming in with requests that window space be given concerts, church events and the hundred and one affairs which are chiefly advertised by window cards. They didn't like to say "No," and they hated to say "Yes," because it mussed up the nice plush curtains.

Then a great light shone upon Jack Brower, the assistant manager. If that window was so desirable in its appeal to the congregation of St. Boniface, it might be a good idea to use the window for First National attractions, and now there is a bi-weekly change of pictures in the double window and Sunday mornings the church goers flock across the street to see what's new in filmdom.

There is a moral in this. Perhaps you, too, have a good stand so close to home that you do not appreciate it. Look around and see if you are not passing up some good bets. It will pay you.

Advertising Two Deep May Solve Print-Paper Problem

WITH white paper costing what bond paper used to, and with the newspapers limiting the amount of advertising a man can buy, perhaps a revival of the surcharged advertisement may be one solution. To advertise Pauline Frederick in "The Woman in Room 13" the Columbia, Phoenix, Ariz., bought 500 copies of the local paper. A day in advance these five hundred were run off on the red form and these blanks were the first sent through the press the following day. They were rushed to hotels, barber shops, pool rooms and other places of congregation for free distribution. Transparent ink was used and the black was printed over the red, so the gigantic "Who was 'The Woman in Room 13.' See at the Columbia Theatre today, tomorrow, Friday and Saturday" did not impair the usefulness of the sheet as a newspaper in the least. The idea is at least suggestive to those who find their present activities cramped.

Planned Simple Contest for a Vitagraph Serial

USING an old stunt to get interest in the Vitagraph serial, "The Silent Avenger" worked well for the Hiltonia Theatre, Hilton, N. Y. The idea is not new, but its adaptation to serial launching appears to be.

The theatre offered prizes for the largest lists of words formed from the letters contained in the title. Proper names and words not found in the dictionary were barred and a tie gave equal prizes to the two or more who were tied for the place. The contest was divided into two classes, for children under twelve and all over twelve, and the three prizes in each class were admission to all fifteen episodes, to the first ten and the first five episodes respectively. A local educator was made the judge to ensure fairness and it was difficult to find a family not collaborating in the contest.

Newspapers Advertise Their Cartoons When on the Film

HOOKING up the newspapers using the Jiggs cartoons of the "Bringing Up Father" series seems to be a popular stunt. The Kansas City Post worked in with the Liberty to the limit. The Post uses the McManus stuff and advertised two special showings the Saturday before the opening, the first starting at eight o'clock in the morning. This is pretty early for a matinee, but seats were free for the coupon run by the newspaper and the house was crowded as soon as the doors were opened. The dramatic feature was also shown. A second showing was given at a quarter past nine, which closed in plenty of time to permit the house to be cleaned for the regular performance. Of course the Post blew the lid off the publicity to boom its own cartoons and the comparatively few who saw the morning performances did not hurt the business the week following. They simply turned to and helped boom.

Doreen's Naughty Dancing Helps Put Over Sex Big

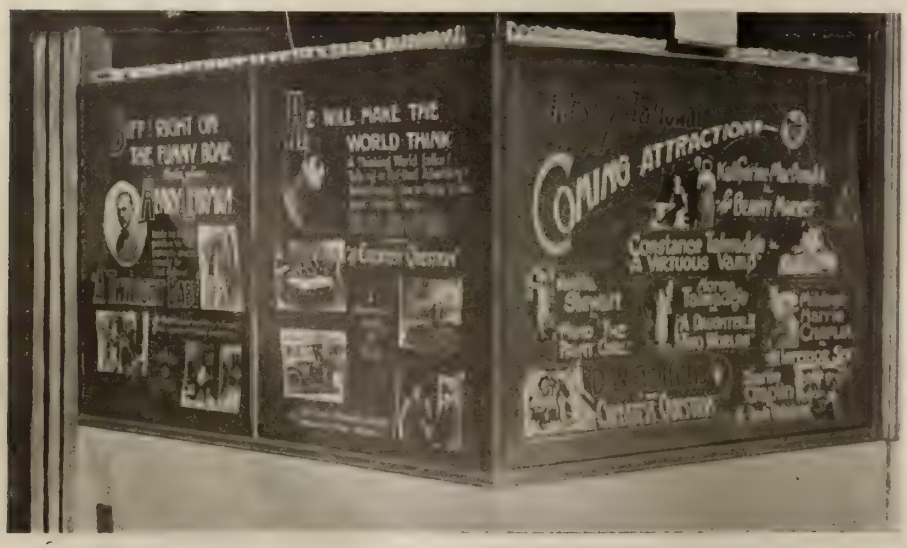
USING a dancer as a prelude attraction got 32,380 admissions out of Louisville patrons for Joseph L. Steurle, of the Walnut. The house seats only one thousand, and to get them all in extra Saturday performances were necessary, but they all crowded in to see the Spider dance, and Doreen was not as wicked as she was painted in the lobby, but gingery enough. The dancer started out last fall with George Schade, of Sandusky, doing a dance for "Sahara," and every time there is a new Glaum picture she seems to get some more jobs, mostly playing around Ohio. Of course, the "Spider dance from 'Sex,'" sounds like something fiercely wicked, so you can't blame the Kentucky colonels for wanting to have a look.

These Stunts Won Space for Others; Try Them Yourself

MAKING the front page was the result of this stunt worked by Jack Pegler, of the Mayflower, and Ken Findley, of the Broadway, Richmond. The exploitation man for "The Luck of the Irish" bet Findley that there were more than 1,500 kids in Richmond with Irish surnames. To prove the point Findley was supposed to give a free ticket to every child with an Irish name. They let the news leak out to the newspapers. Several thousand kids stormed the theatre and the front page stories followed.

Another of Pegler's recent stunts was an adoptation of the buried treasure stunt. He hid tickets in the woods, gave the Boy Scouts tips on the locations and sat back. The Scouts got lessons in woodcraft and the tickets and "The Deep Purple" got press stories.

If there is a man, woman or child within your playing radius who does not know your house, give a free ticket and make it unanimous.



These Windows Looked So Good to Other People

That eventually the First National Exchange in San Francisco decided that charity began at home. Now they change twice a week and find they have one of the best stands in the city.

Take "The Virgin of Stamboul" for a Ride

Old Stunt Cleaned Broadway As It Does Down on the Farm

USING the old misspelled words cleaned up Broadway just as it does in the tallest kind of timber, and it goes to show that the good old stunts are working just as hard today as they ever did.

Probably you have gathered from The Rambler's page that Broadway is largely given to electric signs. And about nine-tenths of the signs are for pictures and about nine-tenths of the picture signs carry the Selznick name. You can stand at Broadway and Forty-sixth street and count nine huge signs and you can walk across the street face about and spot half a dozen more.

One of the signs recently carried the names of "Ougene" O'Brien and "Oven" Moore. It was done on purpose and with malice aforethought, and for two or three days they had to have a special telephone operator to thank the well intentioned persons who called up to tell the Selznick forces of the error and two typists knocked out notes of thanks in reply to valued favors of the preceding day of the same general tenor.

Then the signs were corrected and the Selznick press agents smiled largely. There is no patent or copyright on the scheme and you can do precisely the same stunt and will probably get the same results. Why not try it? Just because a stunt has whiskers is no reason why it should not be able to get the money still.

Took Virgin of Stamboul for a Ride in a Stage

ADAPTING the street car with the dummy passengers, the management of the Grand Opera House, Cincinnati, loaded the cast of "The Virgin of Stamboul" into the horse drawn bus which in an ancient day was used to haul the ball players out to the park.

The driver was robed in oriental costume and his paper passengers did not seem to mind their conveyance in the least; certainly no one went on a strike for an auto with rubber tires. The stunt cut two ways, for in addition to the novelty, the resurrection of old bus brought reminiscent smiles to the faces of all the old timers.

That street car stunt seems to have been widely used, and it is as simple as it is effective, but the use of a stage broadens the field and permits the idea to be employed on streets where there are no car lines.

Unusual New York Exploitation Secured for the Goldwyn-Beach "Silver Horde"

GENERALLY a picture shown in New York trusts to newspaper advertising and perhaps one stunt, but the exploitation for the Goldwyn-Beach production, "The Silver Horde," which opened at the Capitol for a week, moving down to the Broadway for an additional two weeks, differed from a smaller town stunt only in its thoroughness.

Newspaper work was not neglected, but this was backed up by other stuff generally supposed to be impractical in New York because of the size of the metropolis.

Preceeding the Capitol opening two of the Sunday papers carried 1,410 line advertisements, while 100 lines were given the other papers and four Saturday papers.

How to Advertise

About every so often someone tions on how to advertise. Some favor breaks into print with full instruc-circusing the show and others, with equal fervor plead for dignity and conservatism.

There is only one rule for advertising. Gain your patron's faith. Apart from this no man may tell you how you should advertise your house. You must learn for yourself the best method of apporaching your patrons; the patrons you have and those whose patronage you desire.

Some clienteles must be approached with a dignified plea. Others must fairly be screamed into your house. It's up to you to find out, through study, what works best in your house, always remembering Lincoln's most famous statement that you can fool all people some of the time, but not all people all the time.

Window Stunts.

Unique window designs were planned in leading stores along Broadway. This consisted of a frame cut out to show a net behind which glittering salmon writhed or quivered according to the intensity of the air current which reached them from concealed fans. The fish were hung on springs and a surprisingly lifelike effect was gained. They were highly burnished and their gleaming sides caught the play of lights to fine effect. In some windows flashers were used to change the lights and give colored effects.

These frames, following the New York run, will be distributed to the Goldwyn exchanges for use in their several territories. The cut does not give an adequate idea of the effect, since the only photographs available are amateur work, but the three windows shown give a general idea of their placement.

Smoking Up.

The week prior to the opening some 2,000 11x22 signs were placed both within and without the branches of the many stores of the United Cigar Stores. These carried a cut of the author, his endorsement of a certain brand of cigars and of course a mention of the play. Being placed both inside of the window and on the outside of the glass, they could not be overlooked.

Several hundred stickers were pasted on the glass dashes of taxacabs and a checker a week later reported that from several points it developed that about one taxi out of six still carried the signs.

Fifty thousand booklets were used for general distribution and general window cards were put out all over the city as well as in many suburban stores within the commuting radius.

Paper Posted.

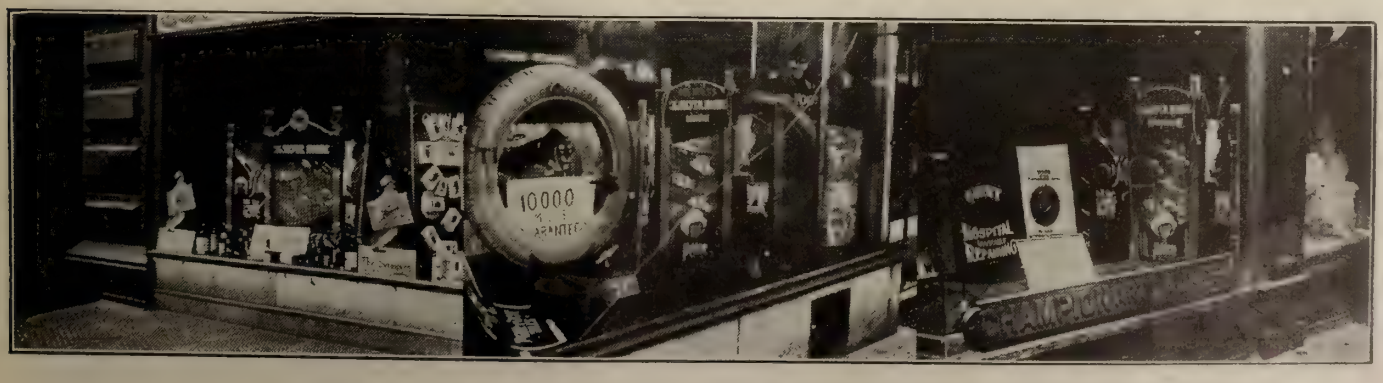
The same thing held good of the lithographic paper, which was sent to the nearby towns as well as into the outlying districts of the city proper. Stands could be seen in every section and even with the press of commercial and theatrical signs and paintings the play stood out.

The Saturday of the first week of the run 5,000 evening papers were obtained, surcharged with a red ink announcement of the removal, and distributed in the theatre district.

Window Artist at Work.

In addition to all this a choice window was secured where each day an artist painted pictures of Beach, Myrtle Stedman and Betty Blythe. This stunt was worked between three and five in the afternoon and between seven and eight in the evening.

Taken in all it was one of the most comprehensive campaigns New York has seen.



There Is Something Fishy About the Goldwyn Exploitation for "The Silver Horde."
If you don't believe it, put a magnifying glass on the cut and in each of these three windows you'll see the fish, mounted on springs so they do the shimmy. The windows are on Broadway, which is perhaps the reason they shimmy.

If Every Show Is Biggest, Nothing Is Big

Used Kindly Faced Cow to Tell Newark That "Down on the Farm" Was in Town

ADVERTISING for a cow—gentle and kind faced—to act as press agent for the Newark Theatre was the way J. B. McNally, of that Jersey house, launched his campaign for "Down on the Farm."

The advertisement specified that the milk was to be the property of the theatre, from which it will be seen that Mr. McNally was overlooking no bets. The advertisement was displayed in the classified department of the daily papers and brought no end of Jersey cows, even though some of them were other breeds. Of course they were Jersey cows, hailing as they did from Newark.

Building Up the Farm.

Building up on the cow, Mr. McNally dressed the house front with corn shocks and other fruit, and had a pen built on the sidewalk which housed a choice collection of stock including pigs, chickens, a donkey and other county fair exhibits.

The coop was roughly framed to be in keeping, and it attracted attention all day, long, so that the people had to be shooed away to let the photographer get a shot. Mr. McNally does not tell what he got for the patent medicine advertisement on the top of the pen, but surely he did not overlook this bet. Any man who would take the milk from a kindly faced cow—

And a Team.

Then a rube couple were hired to drive through the streets with a bannered wagon drawn by a mule and a horse—a large horse and the smallest mule to be found. This was on the street all day with the couple—a man and a woman—helping things along.

After all that he did not do much except to dress his house people in the sort of clothes people are supposed to wear out in the country, but he did see to it that the orchestra picked the proper selections to help along the truly rural atmosphere.

Mr. McNally is an old showman. He was for years with H. R. Jacobs and he knows what the inside of a bill car looks like. He knows that the more you do the more you get, so he went the limit and cleaned up the same.

Any one of these stunts might have made business, but he wanted all of the business he could get. He wanted the additional advertisement of a waiting queue in front of the house, and he knew that to get all that was possible, he had to do his share.

He knew, too, that this picture needed to be jazzed to get it over. He was willing to spend additional money to get more money in, so he started early with his appeal for a gentle faced cow, and he kept it up until the cow went back to her owner at the end of the run and Mrs. McNally had to tell the regular milkman to leave the bottles again.

And it paid. That's the main point.

"Dancin' Fool" on the Street Sent People Into the House

BOOMING "The Dancin' Fool" at the California, San Francisco, a street worker was employed to rube the streets and dance halls. He carried no other advertising than a cane pennant on which was inscribed the title of the play and which he unfurled when his agile footwork had captured a crowd. He was a really good dancer and his street work drew crowds, but he made his biggest clean-up in the public dance halls, where he would give an exhibition and then complete a couple of circuits of the floor with his banner displayed. John F. Howard, local exploitation man of the Paramount, devised the stunt and supervised putting it over.

It's About Time YOU Kicked In!

"Pigs Is Pigs" Except When They Are a Ballyhoo.

The Newark Theatre used pigs and other live stock, including a real (New) Jersey cow, to persuade the folks that "Down on the Farm" was worth seeing. The team at the right is part of the outfit.

Put Serial Over Strong by Hooking-up the Boy Scouts

BECAUSE of strong opposition, W. W. Kofeldt, of the Republican Distributing Corp., had to get a hustle on to launch "The Whirlwind" for the Liberty, Tacoma.

The opposition had crowded the windows and had hogged the boards, but there were some bets still open and Kofeldt felt that it was up to him to get Charles Hutchinson properly introduced.

The sadly overworked Boy Scouts were a good bet. They were offered tickets to sell on a commission basis. This not only brought good publicity in the local scout organs, but the daily papers were willing to help the scouts clean up and gave them more space than any theatre had the right to expect.

It also got permission for four hundred windows to be stenciled with white paint. Three men went out and the magic of the Boy Scouts got them all the glass they could work.

The street car companies were next tackled. They were afraid to sell their fenders, as they had a contract with a car advertising company, but it was shown that the contract applied only to the interiors of the cars, and presently upward of a hundred banners blossomed on the fenders.

"The Whirlwind" does most of his whirlwinding on a motorcycle, so the next move was to hook up with a local motorcycle agency, which put four riders on the streets with banners jointly advertising the serial and the wheels. They kept right on the job until the first episode had been put over so strong that the Manager David is not worried about the other fourteen chapters.

Time Your Big Campaigns to Give Patrons a Rest

SOME managers make a grave error in forcing their shows. In an endeavor to bring in all the money in sight within a month or two they work a succession of big campaigns so close together that they defeat their own ends.

Drives should be spaced according to the recuperative powers of your patrons. Some houses cannot handle profitably more than one drive a month, where others can stand a big feature every two weeks or ten days, but it is better to err on the side of safety than to circus to such an extent that presently it becomes necessary to campaign big for every picture.

Almost any picture can be sold by circus methods. Sometimes a poor picture can actually be put over without a comeback. You may succeed in persuading the patrons that the picture really is good.

As a rule, however, to sell a poor picture by sensation is retroactive. The picture itself will make money, but this money and many times more will be lost on the pictures which come after. It is better to keep the explosive style for the biggest stuff, and then, when you do want to work for a big clean-up, you can feel reasonably certain of getting the money.

Time your spurts so that when you do make a special effort you can clean up unusual crowds. Circus advertising is like the super-feature. At one time super-feature meant something. Now even "ultra special super-feature" does not mean much to the management. You know how you feel about these trade advertisements. Turn it around and you will realize how your own patrons feel about your house advertising when it becomes excessive.

Try Toy Balloon for Lighting Window Shows

Ran on Storage Batteries When Light Plant Failed

SOMEHOW it seems as though things always went wrong at the worst possible times. Down in Sumpter, S. C., the Confederate veterans held a re-union May 5 and 6 and the town was crowded.

And right then the electric light plant lay down on the job and quit for the two days when business was at its best. Candles or auto headlighters could be used for the auditorium, but it was not feasible to project a picture. The other houses shut down, but Mrs. S. E. Miller, of the Lyric, hustled out for a conference with a storage battery concern.

For two days she ran the lamp on storage current and got as pretty a picture as the local light service ever offered, and did a plus—capacity business the two big days of the year while her opposition just sat around and used language.

Vari-Colored Toy Balloons Greatly Aid Window Work

USING toy balloons greatly helped the display of the Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Cal., on "On With the Dance." Poster cutouts and balloons were used in drug store windows with displays of beautifiers, in the phonograph warerooms and in front of the house, where it was worked up with streamers. They were used in assorted colors and a strip of batten across the lobby from which depended the balloons and serpentines. The cost was small, yet the effect was fully as good as that in many lobbies where large sums were paid for decoration. The car before the house shows a masked dancer also used to exploit this production. Balloons will brighten any display.

Don't be too proud to use plan book suggestions. The stuff is original in your town, and if it sells seats it's good.

Don't measure your success by the amount of space you buy. Use sold tickets for the yardstick.

You can cut down big town stuff to fit your town. You can enlarge upon small town stuff to make it fit your city. It's all a matter of proportion. This stuff is for you to use; not merely to read.

Hook-up Double Deckers May Be Good, But Think of a Photogravure Special!

DOUBLE deck hold-up pages are so common that they no longer qualify for mention. Eight and ten-page specials are the run in the cities, and even with the paper shortage the small towns can turn out a double deck every now and then.

Feeling that something new had to be done, Oscar A. Doob, Paramount exploitation man in Cincinnati, went out and did it. He got the front page of the photogravure section of the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune for "Huckleberry Finn" and it was run as an offering of the paper—which it was—which gave it more value than a tie-up with the Strand, where the picture was to play.

Knew He Could.

It could not be done with the average production, but Mr. Doob figured out that the Twain story was a classic. He knew that the pictures would interest for their illustrative value to the story, and that they would be welcomed as such by the bulk of the readers. The main point was to sell the idea.

Hod to Sell These.

He had to sell Harry Brown, the general manager; Nain Grute, the Sunday editor and Circulation Manager Easton before he could put it over, but the day the picture opened at the Strand the front page carried a line sketch of Mark Twain and seven scenes from the play, each appropriately captioned.

The only hint of an advertisement was the credit line to the company for the use of the photographs.

Making Them Work.

Several hundred extra pages were run off for Doob and Monday morning each school teacher in the lower grades received a copy of the sheet with a note to the effect that she might like to show the pictures to her class. This letter was signed by the circulation manager and bore no hint of the showing at the Strand.

The children knew where the film was showing. They devoured the pictures and were more than ever determined to persuade their parents to let them see the film.

Helped the Paper.

And as a net result the paper gained approval, the Strand did a large business and the picture was advertised all over the section covered by the Cincinnati Sunday papers, which is no small territory.

It just goes to show that there is advertising and advertising, and that sometimes the best advertising is not all plastered over with "Town Hall. Tonight."

A single mention of the Strand would have hurt the effect. As it stood it appeared to be the newspaper's tribute to an immortal story. The film angle seemed to be merely incidental to this. And hundreds of copies of the paper were preserved, to serve as constant reminders of the Commercial-Tribune.

Wurlitzer Stores Plan Big Book-up with De Mille Film

ACCORDING to announcement, Robert Heaton, advertising manager of the chain of twenty-two Wurlitzer music stores in as many cities, will hook up his stores with the phonograph angle of "Why Change Your Wife?"

The phonograph figures prominently in the play, for two records are employed to mark the wife's change of heart in the matter of musical selections—and other things. In the early scenes her preference is for a sadly sobby composition, while later she turns to jazz. As a side angle the other woman has in her record cabinet the jazz disc the wife at first despises, and this contributes to the husband's fall.

Mr. Heaton plans lavish use of the stills featuring these scenes and will also do independent newspaper advertising when the film strikes a house in the vicinity of one of his stores.

With a safety razor, a blade sharpener and a dancing doll also prominently featured, it begins to look as though "Why Change Your Wife?" would not lack for boo-ups.

More Than One Feature Has Been Put Over with Hot Air.

But this hot air is caged in toy balloons and gives life and color to windows and lobbies, as the Hippodrome, Bakersfield, Calif., discovered when it sought to get the crowds for "On With the Dance." Try the scheme some time.

"Plenty of Paper"

Is often a snare and a delusion, but with four ones, three threes, a pair of sixes and a twenty-four, "Up in Mary's Attic" should sell even to an asylum for the blind.

And they see the four of a kind and the trio and raise it with 11x14 colored lobby photos, 30x40 and 40x60 paintings, slides, cutouts, broadsides, programs, campaign books and local tie ups. All you need to supply is the house and the signature on the dotted line.

G. O. H. Plays Summer Films.

THE Grand Opera House swings into line with its first of the summer season feature shows. Keith's will inaugurate its summer picture season May 23, doing away with the summer vaudeville, which always had held forth at the Keith house in other years.

Children's "Mat." Makes a Hit.

The success of the children's matinee Saturday morning at the Orpheum has won the favorable attention of the Cincinnati Board of Education and the plan will soon extend to several suburbs. The matinees are under the auspices of the Community Motion Picture Council.

Two Items on Film Exchanges.

Room 309 in the Broadway Film Building has been leased by the B. & B. Film Corporation of New York, which, it is said, will open a branch here in the near future.

The Robertson-Cole Distributing Company is the newest tenant of the Film Building, at Pioneer street and Broadway. The company has leased 2,100 square feet of floor space on the third floor for five years.

Race Film for Race Meet.

Ned Hastings is not overlooking any bets for his summer picture shows at Keith's. He has booked "Eyes of Youth" for the opener, Sunday, May 23, and will show "In Old Kentucky" during the Latonia meeting.

Film Managers Meet.

Members of the Cincinnati Film Managers' Exchange met April 28 at their quarters in the Chamber of Commerce for the purpose of adjusting questions concerning the film service in several sections of the Cincinnati territory. A generally healthy condition was reported, and the further elimination of film "bicycling" was noted. A report that the film censorship bill, recently introduced in the Kentucky legislature at Frankfort, had been defeated was met with general approval. The bill as drafted would seriously have inconvenienced the local exchanges, which furnish the service for that territory.

Smith Building Another Theatre.

Ground has been broken for the erection of a new moving picture theatre on Fairfield avenue, Bellevue, Ky., which will be built for Peter Smith, who conducts the Avenel Theatre. It will be 60 by 158 feet, and will cost in excess of $100,000. The plans call for an arrangement of the large windows in such a manner that practically open air performances may be given in summer.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association is now distributing an advertising reel called "The Lure of Historic Lake Erie."

It was made for publicity purposes by the owners of the "Seeanbee," a lake steamer that plies between Cleveland and Buffalo.

The Exhibitors' League has been an active champion of the "make 'em pay for advertising films." This one, according to their announcement, is being distributed free to exhibitors. It shows scenes on Lake Erie from Cleveland to Niagara Falls.

Merry "Jekyll and Hyde" War.

There is a merry war on in Cleveland over the two different productions of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Since the Euclid Theatre started to run the Barrymore version the one with Sheldon Lewis has been booked all over town. This will be a barrier to the distributers of the Barrymore picture, in that they will suffer a loss, as the Euclid will play it for two or three weeks, and when it is then shown in other parts of Cleveland it will be following the Lewis picture.

Golden Gate Gleanings

WORK has been commenced on the enlargement of the Coliseum Theatre, at Ninth avenue and Clement street, and when this is completed this house will be one of the largest suburban theatres in the country, with a seating capacity of about 3,000. The main auditorium will be lengthened by twenty-five feet and the balcony will be extended, the work costing in the neighborhood of $100,000.

Stars Visit San Francisco.

William Farnum and a company have arrived here for a stay of several weeks to make scenes for "The Scuttlers," a story of the sea. Accompanying the star are J. Gordan-Edwards, director-general of the Fox Film Corporation, and Nat Salmon, business manager.

Priscilla Dean and Wheeler Oakman were recent arrivals to make stage appearances at the Strand Theatre in conjunction with the showing of "The Virgin of Stmboul." Manager Guy Smith arranged a very attractive prologue for this production.

Jack Pickford and a company of Goldwyn players are here to film scenes for "The Man Who Had Everything." Others in the company include Lionel Barrymore, Miss Shannon Day and Priscilla Bonner.

Others of the film firmament who are visiting San Francisco are Mahlon Hamilton, who played the title role in "Daddy Long-Legs"; Franklyn Farnum and Billy Rhodes.

To Increase Capital.

The Pacific Photo Products Company, which maintains a supply depot at 86 Third street, San Francisco, Cal., has called a meeting of stockholders for July 2 to consider increasing the capital from $100,000 to $200,000. H. G. de Roos is secretary.

Double Features at Central Park.

MANAGER ELMER C. WINEGAR of the Central Park Theatre is giving his patrons some bargain programs these days. There are two big features on the bill every night, and they are usually the best to be obtained. Patrons seem to like the policy, because seats are at a premium most of the time at this popular neighborhood house. Mr. Winegar is beginning to "build that cool feeling" at the Central Park by turning the theatre into a veritable summer garden.

Buffalo's First Three Week Run.

Manager Samuel Carver has the honor of putting on Buffalo's first three week run of a motion picture. The production is "Why Change Your Wife?" which opened Sunday, May 16, after a series of page and half-page advertisements.

Kaplan Visits Becker.

Sam Kaplan, of the Precision Machine Company, Inc., of New York, visited Al Becker, of the Becker Theatre Supply Company, May 13 for a conference on Simplex machines, which now "cover Buffalo theatres like a blanket," according to Becker. Mr. Becker was host to Mr. Kaplan and a few friends at a banquet in Buffalo Consistory in the evening.

"Auction of Souls" Closes Out.

"Auction of Souls," which has been touring the Western New York territory with personal appearances of Aurora Mardiganian, was suddenly returned to New York on Saturday, May 15, following orders received by P. H. Smith, local First National manager, from the home office.

The picture had been showing for the week at the Emperie Theatre. On the morning of May 13 the Buffalo Express carried a column story telling of Miss Mardiganian's asking police protection at the hotel where she was stoping. She is alleged to have reported to the police that the promoters of her campaign had threatened to put her in jail if she did not appear on the stage four times daily instead of three, which it is alleged was the number called for in her contract.

Policewoman Lillian Morrison stayed with the girl in the Hotel Statler all one night. The final chapter of the affair was the shooting of the entire outfit back to New York on Saturday, May 15. The picture had been shown in many of the towns in the territory, with Miss Mardiganian as the big attraction.

Maritime Provinces

Censors Must View Comedies.

J. B. O'Connor, of Halifax Board of Censors, has received word that all comedies must be viewed and judged by him before being shown in Nova Scotia. Up to now it has been the custom to take the rulings of the New Brunswick Board of Censors, or at least the rulings of any two boards in Canada.

Will Film Salmon Fisheries.

Morris Ackerman is in St. John in the interests of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, Cleveland, Ohio, and he has with him a moving picture outfit which will operate on Cain's River to illustrate May salmon fishing in New Brunswick. He is the guest of J. Fraser Gregory, of St. John, a well-known lumberman, from whose properties he is already getting some pictures of lumbering. Harry Allam, the well-known guide, will accompany Mr. Ackerman and party to the woods, with a party of six from Cleveland, Ohio, including Malcolm McBride, a former Yale football captain, all of whom will appear in the pictures.

Among Busy Film Exchangemen

Cleveland

Changes in the Exchanges.

Cleveland exchanges underwent a number of changes during the second week in May, several managers resigning and others taking their places. Manager C. A. Thompson of the Republic resigned. He went to New York, where it is understood that he has been offered a bigger position.

Manager Webster of Select and Selznick pictures has been transferred to another exchange. In the meantime the two offices are in charge of District Manager Hyman.

Cleveland Personals.

B. E. Wilkes, formerly of the Paramount in South Carolina, has come to Cleveland and is now on the road for the Robertson-Cole exchange.

Philadelphia

The Fox Film Exchange has moved into larger and more convenient quarters. Owing to the rapidly growing business Mr. Denbow, the manager, found that their old quarters was entirely too small to meet their requirements and were compelled to move to 1315-1317 Vine street, where they will have twice the capacity. M. T. Powers Lerehoer arrived from the New York home office last week to assume his duties here as assistant manager.

Pittsburgh

F. I. L. M. Ready for Elections.

At the last meeting of the F. I. L. M. Club of Pittsburgh the annual nominations for officers were made, the election of whom will take place at the regular meeting, May 25. L. F. Levison, of Select and Republic, who has officiated as president for the last four terms, refused absolutely to continue, as did also J. E. Davis, of Metro, who has been treasurer since the inception of the organization.

The members nominated for the presidency are Herman Stern, of Universal, and F. W. Redfield, of Vitagraph. Both men are admirable candidates and friends of both will use every effort to elect their man. Nat Barach, of Goldwyn, was nominated for treasurer, after which the nominations were closed. Nat accordingly will have no opposition and will go in with flying colors.

Fox Mystifies Filmdom.

William Fox was in Pittsburgh May 8, accompanied by his general theatre manager, John Zanft. The two were seen on Fifth avenue Saturday night and speculation is rife among the film men as to the object of his visit. While "the boss" called at the local Fox exchange, he remained but a short time. That the look-in at the exchange was not the object of his visit here is a foregone conclusion.

Pittsburgh Film Personals.

Paul C. Sahner is now on the road for the local Vitagraph exchange.

Julius M. Kopp is the newest addition to the sales force of the Pittsburgh branch of the Select Pictures Corporation.

M. D. Crandall, of the Crandall Film Service, has just returned from an extensive trip through the State of Ohio, where he was promoting the Walthall film "The Confession."

Salesman Ben Goldstein, of the Fox exchange, has had his last name changed to Gould.

Yeggs Tackle Quality Office.

Burglars attempted to force an entrance into the Quality Film Corporation's offices recently, but were apparently frightened away.

"Smiling Jim" Again Located.

"Smiling Jim" Kelly is again in Pittsburgh and is connected with the National Pictures Theatres, Inc.

"Tillie" Comedy Still Popular.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance" has started out very auspiciously in this territory. The three-day engagement at the Mishler Theatre, Altoona, Pa., was so successful that it is likely a repeat engagement will be made.

Al. G. Fields "Knew Him When."

Sam M. Pearl is the new owner of the Climax Theatre, Pittsburgh, formerly owned by James G. McFarland. Mr. Pearl was formerly a vaudeville actor, his partner being the now famous minstrel, Al. G. Fields.

Buffalo

"Eddie" Hayes Resigns.

"Eddie" Hayes, who has been with Robertson-Cole for two years as Buffalo manager, has resigned his position and E. A. Crane, former manager of the Detroit Hodkinson office, has succeeded him. Mr. Hayes is a veteran in the local film field, having started as assistant manager of the old General Film Company when Joseph Schuchert was manager. Mr. Hayes' resignation took effect May 15. He expects to stay in Buffalo and will announce his plans next week.

Join F. P.-L. Sales Staff.

Realart Corporation's Convention Brings Field Force Together for First Time

THE managers of Realart Pictures Corporation held their first conference and get-together at the Hotel Astor this week. It was the first opportunity which the company's field force has had to become acquainted and the occasion was made a fitting one for the importance of the event.

The advance guard for the convention arrived Saturday, May 15, when Oren F. Woody, Los Angeles manager, and Ben F. Simpson, San Francisco manager, arrived in New York from their transcontinental jaunt. Others arrived later in the day, but the majority came on Sunday and early Monday morning. A large number brought their wives and families and several made the trip by automobile.

The managers registered at the Hotel Astor on Monday morning and then went in a body to 469 Fifth avenue, where they inspected the home offices in the Winfield Building and met the officials of the company. They journeyed back to the Hotel Astor for luncheon, following which the business sessions were started.

Discuss Wanda Hawley Campaign.

The first two sessions of the meeting were given over to a discussion of the results obtained from the company's Wanda Hawley selling campaign. The succeeding days were devoted to reports from the various managers on the conditions in the field. The men have recently returned from trips about their territories and reported on exhibitor opinion on the live subjects of the day as they encountered it at that time.

On Monday evening the field men attended a performance of "Irene" at the Vanderbilt Theatre. Wednesday evening they attended "The Gold Diggers" at the Lyceum and on Friday night, after a dinner at the Astor, they saw a performance of "The Midnight Frolic." The other nights of the week were left open for the men.

Prepared Beautiful Booklet.

An attractive booklet was prepared for the conference. It was devoted entirely to the officials and managers of the company in a personal way and was attractively prepared. In addition to the photographs of the various officials it contained some live and personal data on the individuals that compose the organization.

The following attended the meetings: Melville E. Maxwell, special representative; Joseph L. Marentette, Atlanta; Walter E. Scates, Boston; Henry E. Wilkinson, Buffalo; Harry W. Willard, Chicago; Mark Goldman, Cincinnati; James B. Reilly, Cleveland; Diaz Callahan, Dallas; Bert R. Latz, Denver; Ralph B. Quive; Detroit; John N. McMeekin, Kansas City; Oren F. Woody, Los Angeles; Henry L. Hollander, Minneapolis; Lester Adler, New York City; Truly B. Wildman, New Orleans; Cornelius G. Kingsley, Omaha; J. E. Hennessy, Philadelphia; Harry E. Lotz, Pittsburgh; Ben F. Simpson, San Francisco; Albert W. Eden, Seattle; Floyd H. Lewis, St. Louis; and Louis Reichert, Washington, D. C.

Modern Methods of Construction Make Famous Players-Lasky Studio Complete

THE result not of one man's work but of a combination of specialists in motion picture production and engineers in construction, lighting, heating and ventilation, the new Famous Players-Lasky studio at Long Island City now nearing completion, is declared to be unique among structures of its kind. One of the most important considerations is the layout of the studio so that the various departments will work together in harmony. The main studio floor is covered by a dome roof which does away with the necessity of supports from the ground leaving a clear space for the construction of sets.

Co-Ordinate Departments Grouped.

Grouped around the floor are the departments necessary to the actual making of the picture. The art and decoration department is located here.

The carpenter shop and the assembly room, are separated from the stage by doors of such size to permit the moving in and out of completed sets. The doors will prevent the noise made in constructing sets from reaching the stage and interrupting the players.

"Ramps" Lead to Both Stages.

Across from the carpenter shop is the scene dock. Here also are the cameraman's lockers. In each corner of the front entrance to the studio are the general manager's offices and the cashier and casting department.

At the rear of the building there has been constructed a graduated "ramps" leading from each side street down to a platform. They are for the use of trucks loading and unloading, and are accessible to either the upper or lower stages.

The lower stage is the same size as the main stage. The supports for the main stage are placed at intervals that allow for the construction of smaller sets. Surrounding the lower stage are the lighting, heating and ventilating plants. The restaurant will be on this floor, also the property and paint rooms.

The offices, dressing rooms and departments surround the entire four sides of the main stage. On the mezzanine floor are the executive offices of Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky and a board room. The private offices for director, cutting, assembling and projection rooms are on this floor.

Dressing Suites Furnished for Stars.

The still department, which is equipped for turning out ten thousand stills a day, occupies the entire rear floor. The scene dock and the carpenter shop continue to this floor.

On the second floor is the scenario department and the library. Suites of reception room, secretaries' room, dressing room, bath and several large closets, have been provided for each star. Those playing leading roles will also have separate rooms with bath.

Smaller dressing rooms and rooms for extras are also on this floor. The rear of the entire floor will be devoted to the wardrobe department convenient to the dressing rooms. The purchasing department will occupy the front of this floor and there will be a number of private offices and additional cutting, assembling and projection rooms.

Miniature Theatre for Screenings.

On the main studio floor will be a miniature theatre designed for the use of executives and for special showing of featured pictures. The seating capacity will be about fifty on the orchestra floor and a balcony has been provided for any overflow. There will be provision for a small orchestra.

The rear of the studio opens upon a lot upon which exterior sets will be built. Two tanks in the main studio floor have been provided for water scenes.

Three New Pictures of Adele Blood.
These views show the famous stage actress just before she started on "The Riddle: Woman" for Associated Exhibitors, to be released through Pathe.

"Suds," Mary Pickford's Next Picture, in Hands of Printer

"SUDS," Mary Pickford's latest United Artists' production is now complete and in the hands of the printer. Hiram Abram, of United Artists, announces that this production will be released June 27.

With the exception of a brief retrospect, Miss Pickford is seen as a poor, woebegone slavey in a hand laundry in the slums of London. This poor little drudge, jealous and heartbroken because all the other girls in the laundry have sweethearts, evolves a romance around the owner of a shirt which has been left at the laundry and is not called for until several months later.

The story throughout is a laughable comedy drama, although at times it borders on tragedy. The picture was directed by Jack Dillon from the screen adaptation of Charles Frohman's stage production, "'Op o' Me Thumb" in which Maude Adams appeared at the Empire Theatre in New York. New photographic effects were secured.

Richard Storey Joins Ince

Richard Storey, brother of Edith Storey, who is well remembered by exhibitors and the public as one of the first celebrities of the silver sheet, has joined the Thomas H. Ince staff as assistant director to John Griffith Wray. Storey assumed his new duties this week, coming to the Ince lot from Vitagraph and Metro, where he served as first assistant to several well known directors.

First Three National Picture Theatres Productions Prove Strong Attractions

SINCE the inception of National Picture Theatres, Inc., and its initial release, "Just A Wife," adapted from the play by Eugene Walter, there has followed in the wake of its appearance in motion picture theatres throughout the country a wave of approval that has struck the pinnacle of faith in the amicable combination of exhibitor-producer, according to Lewis J. Selznick, president of National Pictures.

This approval has been doubly attested by exhibitors in "Blind Youth," the second National Pictures release on March 15, and "The Invisible Divorce," released on April 15. With three big productions backed by exhibitor and public approval, and which gives the exhibitor a voice in selecting the picture which was to be made before actual production was started, it is declared that in this joint combination nothing but high quality commercial pictures must naturally follow.

Pictures With Commercial Value.

"National Pictures aim at perfection in the true sense of the word," said Mr. Selznick. "Perfection in production and perfection for the box office. If we give our franchise holders throughout the country precisely what they say they want, and this want is revealed by the box office receipts, it follows that we are giving them high quality pictures with commercial value.

"Just A Wife" tells the story of a man who married merely to secure a woman of social standing.

The cast contains the names of Roy Sewart, who plays the leading male role, Leatrice Joy, the leading woman, Kathlyn Williams, Albert Van and William Leon West. Howard Hickman directed, and Katherine Reed adapted the story for the screen.

"Blind Youth" from Stage Play.

"Blind Youth," the second National Theatre offering, released on March 15, is a screen version of the Broadway stage success of the same name by Lou Tellegan and Willard Mack, both authors of renown. It tells the story of an artist's adventures in New York and Paris.

Included in the cast are Walter McGrail, Leatrice Joy, Ora Carewe, Clara Horton, Colin Kennedy, Joseph Swickford, Buddy Post, Claire McDowell, Leo White and Helen Howard. The production was directed by Ted Sloman, and picturized by Katherine Reed.

"The Invisible Divorce," the third production released on April 15, from the pen of Leila Burton Wells, gives a new angle of the ever present divorce question.

In the cast are included the names of Walter McGrail, Leatrice Joy, Walter Miller, Grace Darmond and others.

Betty Bouton in New York

Betty Bouton, leading woman in Marshall Neilan's newest film comedy, "Don't Ever Marry," has arrived in New York from California. Shortly after finishing work in "Don't Ever Marry," Miss Bouton became Mrs. Arthur Jackson. This is contrary to the action on the part of the young woman who recently, after viewing the picture, wrote Mr. Neilan that after three years of indecision she had come to the conclusion marriage is not as bright as it appears to be. Miss Bourton is a New Yorker and this is her first visit here in several years.

Confidence in Producer Essential to Development of Industry, Says Woody

AS nearly everybody knows who ever tried it you can't fill a cup of coffee more than full. That's why civilized society demands a saucer. And in the same way exhibitors are now using saucers in their business since producers began handing out something more than a demi tasse in fair dailing and service along with their pictures."

So spoke J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, in commenting on the fact that during the company's Wanda Hawley campaign practically all of the leading exhibitors of the country booked "Miss Hobbs," the new star's first picture, on the strength of Realart's promise of a notable production.

Exhibitors' letters to Mr. Woody revealed a new line of confidence between exhibitor and producer. They indicated that where a producer by consistent honest business practices had won the confidence and trust of his customers, the latter were ready to reciprocate.

"Exceptional caution was a necessity in the days of uncertain production standards," continued Mr. Woody. "Those days are now, happily, past. Then the exhibitor was forced to protect himself, not only against unscrupulous methods but against ignorance and unstabilizing factors.

"Realart was organized to represent new standards and methods. That they are not only good but profitable policy is evidenced by our success in the last six months. In the Wanda Hawley campaign we made a test of this. And we have received a most gratifying answer.

"First of all conforming to our established policy, we offered Wanda Hawley's first picture to our old customers without attempting to stir up competition. Their vote of confidence in Realart has won.

"The offer was made on the theory that Realart should take all the risk in introducing the new star. We made no attempt to sew exhibitors up to a long contract.

"In any event they have been quite willing to sign for this picture on our unsupported word that it would be a creditable production. The mere request that they do this was a severe test of their faith in Realart. It has proved that if exhibitors can be convinced of the honesty of a producer, they will trust him as they would any other friend."

Ore-Col Is Now Producing Will Payne's "Black Sheep"

WILL PAYNE'S "Black Sheep," which ran as a serial in a popular weekly magazine and was published in book form under the title of "The Scarred Chin," is being produced as a special feature by the Ore-Col Film Corporation at the Enwood Studio, Denver. It is being given a lavish production, Director John B. O'Brien having engaged a well-balanced cast.

Covering an area of 18,000 feet on the studio floor is one set representing two weeks' labor, day and night, it was originated by George G. Grenier, technical director, who made the scenic productions, "Cleopatra" and "The Tale of Two Cities" for William Fox.

A. D. Frost, president and general manager, promises details of "Black Sheep" later on. When asked about it recently he did a Joe Cannon with the Havana in his mouth, and merely said: "We are out to make somthing worth while."

Would You Call Jack Mulhall a White Hope in the Center Picture? We Hope You Hope He Is Not

Lots of things to hope for in "The Hope," produced by Metro. Now that we've worn out the word "hope" by using it again we will have to let these pretty views of the picture speak for themselves.

Latest Pioneer Unit Now Opens in Dallas

The Parker Film Company began business last week at its new exchange, at 1810 Commerce street, Dallas, Texas, under the management of Tom N. Parker. This exchange, which is the latest addition to the Pioneer Distribution System, is in the heart of the city.

The first Pioneer production to be shown will be "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," with Sheldon Lewis, which is said to be enjoying success in first run houses in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. It is expected that "Bubbles," with Mary Anderson, will be the second release, to be folowed shortly by Marie Doro in "Midnight Gambols."

Matthias Radin Will Visit Exchanges on Sales Trip for Johnny Dooley Film

FOLLOWING the announcement of the completion of "Skinning Skinners," the five-part feature comedy, in which Johnny Dooley plays the stellar role, comes word that Matthias Radin, head of Radin Pictures, the company controlling the rights of distribution, will make a tour of the principal exchange centers of the country to dispose of territorial franchises. A print of "Skinning Skinners" will be shipped to the various cities visited for prospective buyers.

It is expected that Mr. Radin will be away from New York for three weeks, and will visit Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland.

Johnny Dooley recently appeared in the majority of the cities mentioned, having played one of the principal parts in the "Ziegfeld Follies" company which just completed a tour of this section of the country, and he is gaining prestige with movie patrons through the two-part comedies lately released.

While on this trip Radin will also sell territory on the Frank Mayo feature, "Thru Eyes of Men," and the burlesque news reel, "The Weakly Indigestion," by A. Lincoln Miller, also controlled by his company of the same name.

Unique Invention Utilized to Secure Submarine Scenes for Kellerman Film

THE Annette Kellerman feature, "What Women Love," being produced by Sol Lesser, is described as a comedy-drama of today, in which the star is shown not only in water scenes, but as a normal, healthy American girl, fond of athletics.

A unique feature of this production is the under-water scenes, which are secured by the use of what is described as a photographic bell, invented by A. B. Barringer, by means of which clear and sharp under-water scenes are obtained.

The bell is so constructed that it will work to any depth up to 200 feet, which is the pump capacity. The chamber is supplied with air by a three-cylinder high pressure pump, operated by hand. It is so adjusted that it may be moved about on the bottom just as the camera is moved about a stage, the weight under water being about 70 pounds, as compared with 1,800 pounds on the surface.

The camera angle is adapted to what is claimed to be the widest angle lens known. A special submarine lens is connected to the water so that it gives a penetration of over one hundred feet and registers a clear motion picture at that distance. There is also a microphone connection between the cameraman in the bell and the director at the surface, which is said to make under-water sea work almost as simple as a studio camera.

Strong Plot Unfolded in "Kentucky Colonel"

"The National Film Corporation feature production, 'Kentucky Colonel,' which is now ready for release, depends for its biggest punch on its exceptionally strong plot," says Joe Brandt, director general of National.

This picture was adapted from Opie Read's novel of the same name. While a love theme runs throughout, the climax is reached when the colonel and his bosom friend meet in a duel. The unmasking of the scoundrel who sowed the seeds of suspicion leads to the happy ending.

Director William A. Seiter, it is claimed, has made good use of the capable supporting cast, which includes Elinor Field, Joseph J. Dowling as the Colonel, Frederic Vroom, Francis McDonald and Lloyd Bacon.

"Kentucky Colonel" is the first of the series of "All-American" pictures which National will produce. The second will be started shortly. Mr. Seiter will also direct this.

Jossey of Arrow Returns from Tour; Found Exchanges in Prosperous Shape

ARROW FILM CORPORATION reports that a number of sales have been recently consummated on the following features: "Love's Protege," "Daughter of the Don," "Woman's Man" and "Before the White Man Came." Special Representative J. S. Jossey has just returned from a three months' trip through the country and is enthusiastic over the flourishing condition in which he found state rights exchanges.

"I do not know when I have seen the independent exchange man in such a happy frame of mind," says Mr. Jossey. "They are all alive to the oportunity to play their pictures in the best theatres and are having no trouble in booking productions, provided they have a fair average of pictures, and there are quite a number of excellent productions being distributed through independent channels."

Mr. Jossey's trip took him as far west as Minneapolis and south through Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, Georgia and District of Columbia. On the Ora Carew production, "Love's Protege," President Shallenberger, of Arrow, reports that territory is selling rapidly. Arthur G. White, of the Empire State Film Company, has just bought the New York and Northern New Jersey rights, and about three-quarters of the United States have been disposed of. Mr. White was for a number of years New York exchange manager for Paramount.

"This is only one of a number of good pictures which can be shown again and again," says Joe Brandt. It will be ready for release about June 1, at which time new posters, advertising matter, press sheets and publicity and slides will be available.

Marion Kohn Champions "Slap-Stick" Films, Says Majority of Houses Demand This Kind

MARION H. KOHN, head of the Marion H. Kohn Productions, has championed "slapstick" in comedies. "Slapstick comedy, when clean and wholesome, always did get laughs and always will. There are scores of the middle class theatres which demand excitement and rough tactics in comedies.

"When one of the picture 'palaces' shows a reissue of an old slapstick comedy the house roars with hearty laughs just as it used to. Slapstick in comedy appeals to the boy in all of us. The public will always regard a good slapstick comedy with favor.

"That is why the Kohn Productions have decided to feature Polly Moran, the reputed 'Queen of the Slapstick,' in a series of pictures. The middle class theatres are clamoring for them. Many of the 'palaces' are booking them. That is reason enough for making them."

CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

JAMES S. McQUADE

Ascher Brothers Now Control Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee

IN my Chicago letter in the issue of January 31, this year, it was announced that the Merrill Theatre, Grand avenue and Third street, Milwaukee, and the seven-story office building in which it is located, had been transferred January 15 last from the Badger State Investment Company to Jacob Handelsman, William Hershberg and Abe Gumbiner, all of Chicago.

The Badger State Investment Company had assumed charge of the property five years before, on a ninety-nine-year lease, and the three Chicagoans came into possession of the unexpired term of the leasehold, namely, ninety-four years. It was given out that the transfer involved a purchase price of $500,000.

Later on, Jacob Handelsman purchased the interests of Hershberg and Gumbiner in the unexpired leasehold.

About April 26 the Ascher Brothers of Chicago acquired the leasehold from Mr. Handelsman and took possession of the Merrill Theatre and building on May 1. The consideration has not been given out, but it is understood that the terms of the transfer yielded Mr. Handelsman a handsome profit.

S. L. Rothapfel, national director of presentations for Goldwyn, came on from New York May 1 and has been in charge of the Merrill since that date, making several improvements in the decorations, the introduction of a dimming light system and the enlargement of the orchestra from nine pieces to twenty-five.

The Merrill was opened Wednesday evening, May 12, Mr. Rothapfel being in charge of the opening presentation. The selected opening feature was "Jubilo," Goldwyn's Will Rogers' success, and a special musical number by a large, mixed chorus was one of the big hits of the occasion.

The Merrill is a beautiful theatre, with a seating capacity of 1,500, and ranks as the foremost house in Milwaukee. The former manager, E. C. Bostwick, who has won many laurels by his efficiency and modern methods, will make a pleasure trip to the Pacific Coast in the near future with his family.

Mrs. Sidney Drew Intends to Try Her Art at Tragedy

MRS. SIDNEY DREW is going in for serious acting next fall, she announced the other day while at the Essanay Studio, where she is directing "The Unconventional Maida Greenwood." This is the fourth of a series of five pictures adapted from Julian Street's "After Thirty," which are being distributed through Pathe.

"I am anxious to do something very, very tragic," she smiled, "and I think that if I spend this summer getting thin, I'll be in trim for such a role.

"We all have our pet theories," she continued, "and we aren't satisfied until we try them out. One of mine is that an actress never has tested her full dramatic strength until she has her own studio and her own organization as a working background. So, early in the fall, I shall have a studio built in New York and I expect to get improved results."

Mrs. Drew, whose capacity for work is apparently unlimited, will write her own scenarios for these serious photo-dramas and will direct them, as she has done previously with comedies. While in Chicago she is busily engaged in studio work in the day and at scenario writing during the evenings.

Three of this series, which she is now directing, "The Charming Mrs. Chase," "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton" and "The Emotional Miss Vaughn," were produced in New York and already have been released. The fifth and last, "The Dangerous Mrs. Davenport," will be completed in Chicago by June 1. The last two are being produced in Chicago because John Cumberland, the star, is here playing the lead in "The Girl in the Limousine," at the Woods Theatre. Eleanor Custis, a recent "find" of Mrs. Drew's, is playing the feminine lead in the series.

The Roosevelt Under Way.

The wrecking of the old buildings on the site of the Ascher Brothers new theatre, the Roosevelt, on the west side of State street, just north of Washington, was begun last week. It is expected that this beautiful house will be in readiness for opening late in December.

Douglas Rothacker's Record in Work Earns Him Promotion

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER has just announced the appointment of Douglas D. Rothacker as general manager of the Industrial Division of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company.

Everybody at the Rothacker plant knows that the job did not go to "Doug" because he is the president's brother. He won the job by producing results. Since he left the insurance business, less than a year ago, he has landed some of the largest industrial film contracts in the history of practical pictures. Furthermore, he demonstrated his executive ability by reorganizing the existing sales force and later by establishing new sales offices in a number of cities.

Mr. Rothacker, as general manager, will have supervision of the industrial production department, sales force and service department, and also of the organization of additional branches.

Saxe Brothers Have Bought Strand Theatre in Milwaukee

RIGHT on the heels of the purchase of the Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, by the Ascher Brothers, the Saxe Brothers, bought the Strand Theatre from the Standard Amusement Company, that city, and took possession May 1. The consideration has not been given out, but it is said to have involved a large figure.

Like the Merrill, the Strand is a beautiful modern theatre, and it also seats 1,500 persons. All the seats are on one floor and quite a number of Milwaukee award it the palm for being the most artistically decorated picture theatre in the city.

Frank Cook, who has managed the Strand very successfully for some time past, has been retained in his position by the Saxe Brothers. By the way, Frank managed the Princess Theatre for Saxe Brothers for quite a number of years, and spent at least ten years in their service. It brings back pleasant old times to find him again under the Saxe banner.

Realart's "A Dark Lantern" to Be Completed by June 1

ALICE BRADY'S latest picture, "A Dark Lantern," now being produced at the Essanay studios, Chicago, will be completed about June 1. Owing to the star's recent illness, during which both her work in the studio and at the Garrick Theatre, where she has been playing in "Forever After," was suspended, the progress of the picture has been delayed slightly.

John Robertson, who is directing "A Dark Lantern" and who has directed a number of Paramount features starring Marguerite Clark and Billie Burke, and also John Barrymore's recent masterpiece, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," announces that this presents Alice Brady in one of her best roles. "A Dark Lantern" is the title of the novel by Elizabeth Robins, and it may or may not be retained as the title of the picturized version.

Murderer Brislane to Pay the Price.

Edward Brislane, the cold-blooded murdered of William Mills, manager of the Crawford Theatre, in March last, was sentenced to be hanged on May 11 by Judge Kickham Scanlan. The jury returned a verdict of guilty after deliberating two hours. Robert Carter, his accomplice, was given a life sentence.

New Chicago Manager for Hodkinson.

Phil Dunas, who has been traveling representative out of Chicago for W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the past year, has been appointed to succeed Manager Sidney J. Goldman of the Chicago office of that concern. Mr. Dunas assumed his managerial duties on May 12.

Fannie Ward
Who is being starred in "Storm Swept," made in Paris under the direction of J. de Baroncelli.

Fannie Ward's Latest Screen Production, "Storm Swept," Is Ready To Be Marketed

ACCORDING to reports from the offices of J. A. Ferrand, New York representative for the C. H. Delac & Vandal Company of France, announcement is made of the completion of Fannie Ward's latest screen production, "Storm-Swept," an adaptation of Henri Bernstein's "La Rafale." It will be remembered that Miss Ward left Los Angeles last year for Paris, but no announcement was made at that time as to whether her journey was purely social or would include any screen activities. For this reason the news of her latest production, which was filmed in Paris under the direction of J. de Baroncelli, has aroused much interest among prominent American distributing concerns.

Immediately following the first private showings of the picture spirited bidding was encountered for the negative rights, and judging from the number of bids received the production will be ready to be marketed within a short time.

American distribution rights have not yet been arranged for, but the matter is now under consideration by a well-known New York firm, and news of just how the production will be marketed will be forthcoming shortly.

Will Play Larger Theatres.

Mr. Ferrand announces that territorial rights on this production are not for sale, and that the Delac-Vandal Company contemplate making a big special exploitation campaign and play the larger houses throughout the country.

Fanny Ward comes back to the screen after almost a year's absence in what is declared to be the greatest emotional drama of her career. Jean Deaux, a well-known French actor, is her leading man and the entire cast is said to be especially strong and in keeping with the calibre of the production.

After cutting and assembling and also inserting the sub-titles the producers find that it will run six instead of the nine reels originally intended. It is said that the film is full of action and human interest in every foot of its six reels.

Miss Ward is in Paris and will be present at the premiere of the production in that city. Her return to New York has not yet been scheduled, but it is believed the actress will arrive in time to witness the metropolitan premiere.

Clara Kimball Young's Latest Equity Picture To Be Made Into Grand Opera

FOR the first time in the history of the motion picture industry a photoplay will be converted into a piece for the "legitimate" stages. According to an announcement emanating from the Equity offices in the Aeolian Building, New York, "For the Soul of Rafael," Clara Kimball Young's latest production, is now in course of being converted into a grand opera, arrangements having been inaugurated with the first showing of this play at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles.

"For the Soul of Rafael" is based on the customs and romance of the people of the early California days.

Madame Frances Alda, the well-known grand opera singer who has been visiting in Los Angeles for several weeks past, witnessed the taking of many scenes of the picture, and after seeing its opening presentation at the Rialto stated that she believed it afforded especially good operatic material. This opinion was unanimously conceded by many other artists and critics high in the musical world, with the result that steps were immediately taken toward the writing of a grand opera based on the story.

It is believed that a new and distinctive type of American music, half Indian, half Spanish, embodying many of the folk song melodies of the early Western life, will form a basis of the grand opera written on the play. The story deals with the old Missions of California, but they were used only as the natural and apropos background, and the action of the play throbs with the romance of the golden days of the West in the late '40s.

Marah Ellis Ryan, the author of "For the Soul of Rafael," is now engaged in the writing of the libretto, and the composer will have the unique and distinct advantage of seeing the emotional moments of the drama acted through the medium of the motion picture in affording him inspiration for his work.

"For the Soul of Rafael," in its screen form, will be shown in the East within a short time.

Dawn Producing "Marama"

The experiences of nine months spent in the South Seas several years ago making scenic films have proved a valuable asset to Norman Dawn, the Universal director, who is producing the popular novel, "Marama," by Ralph Stock, a tale of the Fiji Islands, in which Edith Roberts is starring.

Although he lived with the natives for months and studied their customs and environment, Mr. Dawn spent several weeks in research work before starting the picture, as he wanted to have absolute accuracy in even the minutest details of the settings. He refused to trust to his memory, but procured all the books obtainable on life in the Fiji Islands.

"Third Eye" Trade Showings Found to Stimulate Bookings

GREATLY increased activity in bookings on Pathe's "The Third Eye" is reported to have followed the trade showings of the early episodes of the picture at various branches, and the forecast by the Pathe sales department that the serial will reach a distribution mark as wide as any of its predecessors is said to be based on information that negotiations with many of the long-run houses which showed the Dempsey serial are under way.

"Daredevil Jack" proved a wedge opening the way to many theatres where serials were never shown before. Several of these run weekly and bi-weekly programs and in the matter of long runs the Dempsey picture established new serial records.

That the Pathe sales force would make a cencentrated drive to follow up "Daredevil Jack" in these houses with "The Third Eye" was a foregone conclusion, and now the optimistic reports following the advance showings of the latter serial indicate that the chances of success are quite favorable.

The new production was accorded highly favorable comment in the tradepaper reviews, and information from the Pathe branch offices is to the effect that the advance presentations have proven highly successful in bringing praise from exhibitors. General comment applauds the starring team of Warner Oland and Eileen Percy as an especially happy combination.

Add Francelia Billington to Metro's "Hearts Are Trumps"

FRANCELIA BILLINGTON has been engaged to enact one of the leading roles in "Hearts Are Trumps," the third of the five Drury Lane melodramas to be filmed by Metro. Miss Billington will have the role of Lady Winifred, a distinguished English woman.

Rex Ingram is directing "Hearts are Trumps." Mr. Ingram also directed Miss Billington in "The Day She Paid" for Universal. The filming of this new melodrama was started last week at the Metro studios in Hollywood. It will be an all-star cast production, including Francelia Billington, Norman Kennedy, Frank Brownlee, Winter Hall, Joseph Kilgour, Edward Connelly and Thomas Jefferson. John Sietz is the cameraman and Arthur Ruada the art director.

Has Drury Lane Record.

Cecil Raleigh is the author of the story. It was adapted by June Mathis. "The Hope" was the first Drury Lane play to be filmed by Metro. It will be released soon. "The Best of Luck," recently completed, was the second of the Drury Lane series. "The Marriages of Mayfair" is under way at the company's New York studios.

Rose Mullaney Is Appointed Selznick Casting Director

ROSE MULLANEY, well known in film circles, has been engaged by Myron Selznick as casting director for Selznick Pictures Corporation. Miss Mullaney has had a wide and varied experience in casting work for both the legitimate stage and motion pictures. For the past two and a half years she has been in the employ of several prominent motion picture concerns as casting director, and Myron Selznick, realizing her equipment and ability for casting work, immediately engaged her for the position.

The recent enlarging of the casting department, formerly at the Selznick Bronx studio, but now located in the heart of the theatrical district at 130 West Forty-sixth street is in keeping with Mr. Selznick's idea of greater efficiency.

Watterson Rothacker Sets Bad Example to His Employes by Watching the Clock

ON a recent afternoon several puzzled Rothacker workers watched what was going on inside the home office of Watterson R. Rothacker. There he sat doing nothing in particular—just looking out of the window. It was the first time that any of the mystified ones had ever seen him when he wasn't steaming full speed ahead, with the throttle wide open.

"It isn't the weather, because it hasn't been hot enough," said Director Ray Aitken.

Then the phone rang and Mr. Rothacker was heard to say, "I can meet you later in the afternoon, but I am very busy now and can't leave here until after 2:15."

It was then almost 2:15 and the observers saw that Mr. Rothacker held his watch in his hand, looking at is fixedly.

"There's a doctor a block down the street," whispered S. J. Stoughton, solicitously.

Then Mr. Rothacker shouted out to the anxious little group: "In another minute we'll be ten years old!"

At this F. W. Kraemer whispered that he would telephone Mrs. Rothacker.

Then it all came out.

Ten years ago, that afternoon, the Rothacker organization was founded. It was 2:15 in the afternoon when Mr. Rothacker took possession of the small rented desk in the small downtown office.

Today, demands on the Rothacker Chicago laboratory are such that other laboratories are now being erected on the West Coast and in New York to take care of the American film printing, and early this summer Mr. Rothacker goes to London to establish still another laboratory there.

In the ten years since Mr. Rothacker became the pioneer in the industrial pictures field, that branch of his business has expanded until today the industrial division has offices in New York, Buffalo, St. Louis, Los Angeles and Philadelphia, and others are soon to be established in Detroit, Boston and New Orleans.

"Flying A" Specials Do Not Lack the Necessary Realism

S. S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, whose intensive study of the motion pictures covers the business from every angle, discussing the matter of interior scenes with a trade magazine editor, who was complimenting him on the finish and excellence of "The House of Toys," advocated the more extensive use of draperies.

"They are a homelike adjunct to the furnishings, capable of adding a charm and softness to the whole photographic effect," he said. "With this additional touch the hospitable and realistic aspect of a house that is lived in is subtly presented; the house which contains a real woman; without it there is the feeling of something temporary, something lacking, a gap between the spirit of the story and the actors and scenes before you.

"Such things may seem to be unimportant details, but they are tools in the hands of an adept in the art of suggestion by which he makes a really finished production, one which satisfies in every way."

Faversham Picture Is Well Received

Althought "The Man Who Lost Himself," in which William Faversham is introduced as a Selznick star on the screen, was released as recently as May 3, reports to the Selznick home office at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, are said to indicate that the production has scored a remarkable success and that Mr. Faversham has added fresh histrionic honors to his already replete string.

"Indications are pointing toward a surpassing success for Mr. Faversham's first Selznick production," said Sam E. Morris, general manager of Select.

To Show Teachers' Struggles

A film story which has for its heroine a young school teacher and which presents the struggles and present day conditions among the poorly paid teachers of the nation is being written by Edith Roberts, Universal screen star. She intends to play the leading role in the projected picture. She hopes to influence other luminaries of the silent drama to do a similar service in behalf of the land's young school "marms."

She is being assisted by a former Philadelphia school teacher, a life-long friend, who recently abandoned a teaching career to come to Universal City to work in films.

Big Pathe Publicity Campaign Precedes Drive on J. Stuart Blackton Features

A CONCENTRATED and extended drive on Blackton feature productions will be inaugurated this month by Pathe Exchange, Inc. Preparatory to launching this drive, Pathe is now conducting a publicity campaign which will be of material assistance to exhibitors in presenting the Blackton pictures to the public.

Particular stress is to be laid upon "My Husband's Other Wife," "Respectable by Proxy" and "The Blood Barrier," all of which have been released. "Passers-by," the photoplay version of C. Haddon Chambers' successful stage attraction, which will be released on June 20, also will be thoroughly promoted by the Pathe sales force.

To further the interests of exhibitors playing "Passers-by," Pathe is now preparing a special press sheet, aside from an unusually attractive campaign book, which will be distributed to 5,000 of the biggest newspapers in the United States. These press sheets are written exclusively by newspapermen of the highest calibre who are specialists in this type of publicity.

All Blackton Pictures Successful.

Blackton productions have been hitting the mark in every respect, but it is for the purpose of meeting an increased quota that has just been established on all Blackton pictures that Pathe is to concentrate its selling efforts on them.

"My Husband's Other Wife" has almost attained its first quota and in financial return is one of the most successful pictures ever filmed by Commodore Blackton. "Respectable by Proxy" is running the earlier production a close second.

"The Blood Barrier" is the last of the Blackton productions to reach the market. It has been released only two weeks, yet in that time has exceeded the best figures attained by any Blackton attraction over a similar period. "The Blood Barrier" is purely melodrama, with a strong love and patriotic impulse, and is of the type of screen attraction that meets with favor from a vast majority of audiences.

"Passers-By" is considered the most appealing story Commodore Blackton has yet offered for consumption by the motion picture loving public. The rights to the Chambers' play were purchased at an expenditure that rivals the entire cost of some productions, and the lavishness with which the drama was transferred to pictures makes it an even more appealing offering on the screen than on the stage.

Big Exploitation Possibilities in "Thirtieth Piece of Silver"

BETWEEN the appropriate silver-grey and blue art covers of "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver" campaign book, just received from the printer, reams of newspaper controversy and paragraphs of more than passing interest are latent. The pages of this American press book are replete with unique exploitation stunts with coins, old and new, curiosity teasers which employ the mysterious crystal ball used by devotees of the occult, and suggestions for fashion shows capitalizing Margarita Fisher's rich gowns in which she appears in the picture more attractive and beautiful than ever before.

Some of the catchlines and publicity stories will be of peculiar interest at the present time featuring, as they do, subjects of solid popular interest such as the occult craze. The shekel of Jerusalem which Albert Payson Terhune uses as the nucleus around which to weave his story also catches the fancy at this time when the war and its aftermath have revived a live interest in that historical city. The ancient coin, the last of Judas Iscariot's thirty pieces, is faithfully reproduced for the thumb-nail title cut, and is a prolific source for all sorts of exploitation ideas. The plot also contains an unusual opportunity for snappy catchlines for advertisements and programs, the mystical and humorous being interwoven into an exciting love story.

The posters are unusually attractive, stirring the imagination and piqueing the curiosity. The paper includes a 1-sheet, two 3-sheets, a 6-sheet and a 24-sheet.

Governor's Daughter Joins Mayer

Ethel Gillette, daughter of ex-Governor James N. Gillette, of California, has been added to the continuity staff of the Anita Stewart Productions and Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Company.

Adele Blood Is Female Lead in Geraldine Farrar Picture for Associated Exhibitors

THE greatest care is being exercised in the selection of the players who will appear in the cast with Geraldine Farrar in her first Associated Exhibitors production, "The Riddle: Woman," to be released by Pathe. Adele Blood, a nationally known leading woman on the stage who has headed her own stock company in nearly a dozen of the biggest cities, and who was for four years the star of "Everywoman," has been engaged as the leading feminine support in the Farrar cast. She will have the part of Kristine.

Within a week Director Jose expects to be able to definitely name the complete cast. He anticipates beginning production of the great play in which Bertha Kalisch starred for two seasons as soon as Miss Farrar returns to New York. Preparations are now being completed for the filming of the picture in the Thanhouser studio in New Rochelle. The preliminary details virtually have been completed and all that remains is to begin production.

"Red Foam" Is Announced as Next Selznick-Ince Special

MYRON SELZNICK, president of Selznick Pictures, in announcing that the next Ralph Ince-Selznick special production has been chosen for filming as soon as necessary preparations are completed will spread glad news to the many exhibitors who have found the Ralph Ince Special productions of strong box office attraction.

Mr. Selznick's announcement takes on an added degree of interest when it is made known that the next story chosen for Mr. Ince is "Red Foam," which appeared in a popular weekly magazine. The author is William H. Hamby. As a preliminary to beginning actual work of production Edward Montagne, of the Selznick scenario staff, was assigned the task of putting the story into continuity form. This assures exhibitors and public that as far as the continuity is concerned the story will be smooth running.

The work of selecting the cast is scheduled to begin this week and much attention is to be given to the types in the story.

New Pioneer Film President Believes in Liberal Policy of "Live and Let Live"

THE assumption of the presidency of the Pioneer Film Corporation last week by A. E. Lefcourt, one of the most prominent and most successful figures in the women's apparel industry in the United States, represents the climax of one of the most interesting chapters in the motion picture field that has been written for several years.

A trifle over two years ago, Mr. Lefcourt became interested in the exploitation of "Civilization" with several other men, some of whom like himself were not acquainted with the motion picture business, while others were men who had long been identified in the film field.

In the management of his manufacturing business Mr. Lefcourt had been signally successful not only in organization work, but in the inauguration of a liberal policy of "live and let live."

The release and exploitation of "Civilization," so greatly impressed Mr. Lefcourt with the possibilities in this industry that he formed the Pioneer Film Corporation, confident that if the Pioneer would operate and function in the picture field as his and other successful manufacturing concerns did in the mercantile field, success would be assured.

Welcomes Individuality of Ideas.

He believed then, and the present status of the Pioneer has conclusively proven that he was right, that the success of any organization depends greatly upon the policy of allowing both the business staff as well as the individual producer, director and star, to enjoy the full exercise of their individuality and ideas, so long as their activities conform to the general policy of the concern.

"I laid down at once a policy which would give every incentive to the producer of individual pictures and make him sure that after Pioneer had acepted his production there would be a market created for it," said Mr. Lefcourt.

"I felt from the very start that the same principles which govern my own line of business must prevail in the moving picture enterprise started by me, and the outstanding thought in this connection was that when one produces the right kind of merchandise it is not necessary to force the retailer—the exhibitor—to sign up for any particular quantity or period, and compel the exhibitor or retailer to accept bad and good just because of a condition imposed on him—a condition which is unwarranted and contrary to business ethics.

Mr. Lefcourt's Policy.

"I believe that it is absolutely the right and the privilege of a man to buy what he wants, and only what he wants, and I do not hesitate to say that my belief in this practice has done more to set the Pioneer on the road to success than any other feature of the business.

"It has no entangling alliances with exhibitors and is only interested in handling the class of pictures that the exhibitor can buy with safety and book them as he wants them, without any ifs or buts.

"We take the individual exchangeman in any territory and make him part of the Pioneer machine by giving him the consistent credit and an incentive to place our pictures before the exhibitors in his respective territory. In this way we have covered the entire United States."

Violet Mersereau Denies Report

In a letter to Moving Picture World Violet Mersereau denies a recently published report that she has been engaged to appear in a series of two-reel pictures for a certain concern.

"I wish you would kindly tell your readers that this statement is an error," writes Miss Mersereau, "as I have been engaged for a considerable time back in the production of 'Finders, Keepers' for the Artograph Film Company, and I shall start for Denver shortly to appear in a new production, 'Out of the Depths,' for the same company.

"I am not appearing in two-reel releases, my time being devoted exclusively to playing stellar roles in special productions."

W. S. Van Dyke Will Direct Pathe's Hutchison Serial

W. S. VAN DYKE, who directed Jack Dempsey in Pathe's "Daredevil Jack," is supervising the serial in which Charles Hutchison will star for Pathe under the supervision of Robert Brunton at the latter's studio in Los Angeles.

Mr. Van Dyke's commission to direct the Hutchison vehicle is by way of being a special arrangement, due, it is said, to the high esteem in which the Pathe production heads hold him for his work on the Dempsey picture. The company selected to support the star will have many players who appeared in "Daredevil Jack." The important roles have been given to Josie Sedgwick and Carl Stockdale, both of whom were prominent in Dempsey's support.

A number of scenes for the first episode of "The Double Adventure," the working title of the story by Jack Cunningham, have been completed. Mr. Hutchison has been working outside the studio with Director Van Dyke on details for some daredevil stunts, and it is expected he will soon stage them for the camera.

The gymnasium at the studio, where Jack Dempsey went through his daily training grind, is now the scene for Charles Hutchison's regular period of routine exercise.

George B. McCutcheon Wrote "Sherry," Edgar Lewis Film

THE day of the author is here, in the opinion of Edgar Lewis, producer of a score of motion picture successes, whose next special release is "Sherry," adapted from the George Barr McCutcheon novel. The production will be released by Pathe on May 30. Mr. Lewis has always been a strong advocate of the good story. His first big Pathe production was "Other Men's Shoes," which he adapted from the internationally famed novel by Andrew Soutar.

In selecting "Sherry," Mr. Lewis picked the work of one of America's best known modern authors. George Barr McCutcheon's literary successes number scores; "Graustark," "Beverly of Graustark," "Brewster's Millions" and "Nedra" have been enjoyed by thousands of readers. The author's name is synonymous with "romance" and in "Sherry" he used a full measure of this important screen and literary ingredient, coupled with mystery, melodrama, adventure and humor.

Mr. Lewis also believes the firmament is bigger than the star, and in casting his picture he looks for types rather than stars. For "Sherry" he selected Pat O'Malley, Lillian Hall, Harry Spingler, Maggie Holloway Fisher, Richard Cummings, Alfred Fisher, Gertrude Norman, Will Jeffries and Scott McKee.

Louis Rosenbluh Has Exchange Quarters Ready for Reception of Fox Executives

THE convention during the week of May 24 of the executives and managers of the Fox Film Corporation will find the headquarters of the New York sales exchange in West Forty-sixth street ready for their reception and entertainment. Louis Rosenbluh, director of the chief sales territory in the East, has anticipated their arrival and the latch string is out.

Occupying the entire tenth floor of the Leavitt Building, the sales exchange has been artistically furnished, decorated and equipped by William Fox regardless of expense. It will be viewed by the visiting Fox managers as a model for all other Fox exchanges throughout the country, and in due time be duplicated at least in the chief cities of the larger territories assigned to the North, West, South and Pacific Coast.

Louis Rosenbluh, in spite of his executive ability in the film industry, is more or less of a different nature. Though at all times affable, he is disinclined to the newspaper interview, but he happened to be off guard last week while supervising changes in his poster department and was cajoled into a reminiscent talk. The opportunity came when he was heard to remark that concentration pays.

Serves 75 Per Cent. With Fox Films.

"I have handled," he said, "a variety of subjects in different length features and that afforded me the opportunity of studying the film industry from the best vantage point.

"It at least enabled me to give closer attention to the handling of a larger number of theatres at one time and this has been amplified through experience since this exchange was established, enabling me to steadily increase our list of exhibitors until now 75 per cent. of the theatres in the territory over which I have supervision are being served with Fox entertainments.

"The best satisfaction has been obtained by doing business in a co-operative manner, the suggestion being accepted by Fox exhibitors that co-operation in booking subjects is a better money making proposition for them. In other words, by dealing direct with the producer the exhibitors' profits were made more secure, particularly when using pictures week in and week out, that were produced by a specialist who had experimented successfully for over six years with various length features, and who today can lay claim to being the foremost producer in the industry."

Business Increased Eight-Fold.

Mr. Rosenbluh said that the business of the Fox Film Exchange had increased eight-fold under his personal guidance and that now, with larger facilities, it will be possible to serve all the theatres in the territory he governs even more efficiently and more profitably than ever before.

Service, he emphasized as the most important feature of the work of the exchange, a fact that was fully attested by a glimpse at the advertising accessories department of which Mr. Rosenbluh is proud and to which he gives a large share of his personal attention. He has every means at his command to aid exhibitors in the exploitation of pictures.

Bullwinkle Reports Booking

J. C. Bullwinkle, representative of the Realart Pictures Corporation out of the Boston office, reports the booking by Louis Boas of Fall River, Mass., of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," "The Luck of the Irish," "The Deep Purple" and "The Law of the Yukon." Mr. Boas reports that "Soldiers of Fortune" proved a winner at his Bijou Theatre. Business is good at all the theatres under his supervision, namely, the Empire, Academy of Music, Rialto and Bijou theatres in Fall River and the Strand and Premier in Newburyport. B. A. Prager owns the last two theatres mentioned.

Reelcraft Pictures Company Finishes "Rubes and Romance"

THE Reelcraft Pictures Corporation's star, Alice Howell, under the personal direction of Frederick J. Ireland, vice-president and supervisor of production, has just completed her sixth picture, "Rubes and Romance," and will start immediately on the seventh of a series of twenty-six two-reel comedies in which she is featured.

Carl Harthill, manager of the Chicago office of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, reports that the bookings on the forthcoming releases of the William Franey single-reel comedies have passed all expectations.

"Don't Ride the Fatal Horse," Advises Lewis Selznick in Talk to Exhibitors

ADVOCATING the dogmatic principle upon which exhibitors can only hope to retain a life-long interest in their theatres without fear of the encroachments of big financiers, Lewis J. Selznick, president of National Picture Theatres, Inc., sets forth his ideas in two striking inserts in the motion picture trade journals of May 15.

One insert shows a goose laying the golden eggs and the other is captioned "a horse on you." These are advocated by Mr. Selznick primarily to fight the interests aiming to "squeeze the soul out of all exhibitors." Mr. Selznick, in the goose advertisement, says in part:

"I hear you're such a goose that you'll keep laying golden eggs for the interests organizing to kill you. Concerns for whom you've built up good will with your good ideas and your good capital aren't satisfied with the millions you've provided. Now they want your profits, too.

"And since you're figured as an easy mark, they expect you to keep featuring their productions, exploiting their stars, furnishing the funds for them to buy your own theatres until they possess all the choice locations in the best paying towns of America.

"If the exhibitor stands for this raw deal, if he sharpens the knife that cuts his throat, he deserves to be a cooked goose. I call it a raw deal because it's a double deal, an ungrateful deal. I'm for you because you've been for me. Lay on."

In the "A Horse on You" advertisement, Mr. Selznick relates the strong position of the Trojans and how the hostile Greeks caught them unaware.

"What happened to Troy," says Mr. Selznick, "can happen to Schenectady, too. You're stabling just such Trojan horses in your theatres at this very instant. Generously promoting popularity for stars and productions which you'll lose as soon as overreaching interests feel it is more expedient to take your crowds than to take your contracts.

"I'm protecting my own future when I advise you to protect yours. If the exhibitor isn't a successful free agent I'm a failure."

Mr. Selznick stated he intends to keep hammering away for the benefit of exhibitors with further forceful advertising talks. His motto, "I consider myself a failure unless the exhibitor is a success," is the wedge with which he intends to pry open the gates of exhibitor-freedom from outside interests.

Secure First Sub-Franchise Plan of Circuit in St. Louis

EXHIBITOR conventions are springing up like mushrooms all over the country. There is perhaps nothing so surprising in that but now and then a convention not of the ordinary or garden variety comes to light. Since the Chicago convention, when First National made public its subfranchising plan extending to independent exhibitors not already members of its organization a share in its protective benefits, the number and variety of exhibitor meetings has been increased.

Perhaps the most unusual was "a family convention" called recently in St. Louis by the Webster Amusement Company to consider the new First National sub-franchise plan. The Webster Amusement company owns and operates the Webster Theatre and Airdome. And the Webster Amusement Company is controlled by the five male members of the Graham family, Grover C. and his sons, W. W., D. R., Thomas E. and George.

The convention was called at the instance of S. J. Baker, manager of First National's St. Louis office, who explained the details of his organization's new plan. The five Grahams were convinced of the merit of the scheme, and after unanimously indorsing it, signed for the first sub-franchise granted by First National in the St. Louis territory.

Jacques Tyrol
Secretary, treasurer and general director of the Falkner-Tyrol Productions.

Jacques Tyrol's Experiences Recalled by New Corporation

THE Falkner Tyrol Productions has been incorporated at a capitalization of $200,000. The office is at 117 West Forty-sixth street, New York City. Fred W. Falkner is president and general manager and Jacques Tyrol is secretary, treasurer and general director.

Especially interesting has been the career of Mr. Tyrol. He was knighted by Empress Elizabeth of Austria when 16 years old. After her death he gave up court life, realizing its shams and intrigues, and after graduating with several degrees from the University of Berlin and the University of Jena he became an ardent anti-militarist and anti-imperialist. Disowned, Tyrol began fulfilling a great ambition of his—to play the part of Beethoven in "The Last Days of Beethoven's Life." After three years of hard work and privations he succeeded, appearing at the Court Theatre in Vienna.

Was "A. P." Correspondent.

Later on Tyrol became special correspondent of the Associated Press. He "covered" the Spanish-American war, the Boer war, the Boxer uprising and the massacre of Kichineff. Then he decided to come to American and he was naturalized not long after his arrival, forfeiting his noble title. He joined the Selig Polyscope Company in Chicago and rapidly rose to the position of assistant general director. Then he branched out for himself as a producer. Among his productions have been "And the Children Pay," his first, and "The Red Viper," his latest.

Keeping Close to Cohan Original

Charles Ray's version of "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," the George M. Cohan classic which he is adapting to the screen, is being kept close to the original form which had great success during the years of its stage vogue. The wide popularity of the original Cohan play and the star's recognition of its value in the form known to a vast public has convinced its producers that the biggest success would attend a screen version following closely the lines of the popular stage piece. "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway" is the first of the star's new productions which Arthur S. Kane will present for First National release.

First of Tracy Stories Made by Gibraltar Ready for Summer Release by Hodkinson

THE SILENT BARRIER," first motion picture play by a member of the British aristocracy to be produced in America, is now titled and ready for early summer release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Its author, Sir Louis Tracy, was recently knighted by King George for war services.

This is the first of fifteen Tracy novels, rights to which were purchased by Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., to be completed for Gibraltar Pictures. The production was directed by William Worthington who directed most of the Sessue Hayakawa successes, and who left this week for California to direct a new Gibraltar production in which Leah Baird will be starred.

"The Silent Barrier" is one of the most pretentious efforts of Gibraltar Pictures to date. It involves a cast of sixty people in the principal scenes and more than a month was spent by the entire company in filming special features of the story at Lake Placid, N. Y. The work was done in the dead of winter in snow fifteen feet or more deep and in the heights along with lakeshore. The Swiss scenes are reproduced with a verisimilitude that is said to defy detection even by old Swiss mountaineers, this work having, in fact, been done under the direct supervision of men familiar with the winter landscapes at St. Mortiz in the Swiss Egandine, where the story is laid.

The studio sets involving some remarkable interiors representing London and Geneva drawing rooms, ball rooms and reception halls, were created from drawings and old prints secured direct from friends in Switzerland by Director Worthington.

"The Silent Barrier" was scenarioized by Charles T. Dazey. Mr. Dazey and Sir Louis Tracy worked in perfect comradeship over the transformation of literature into drama.

In the cast are Sheldon Lewis, Gladys Hulette, Florence Dixon, Donald Cameron, Mathilde Brundage, Fuller Mellish and Corinne Barker.

Newman Contracts for Early Showing of Hampton Picture

FRANK L. NEWMAN, a well known Kansas City showman, and his general manager, Milton H. Feld, have booked for immediate presentation at their Regent Theatre, Benjamin B. Hampton's record-making Emerson Hough production, "The Sagebrusher," the W. W. Hodkinson release.

Ben Blotcky, Hodkinson Kansas City manager, also contracted for a late May week's showing of "The Sagebrusher" with G. L. Hooper, managing director of Topeka's big first run house, the Isis. Other big Kansas first run bookings on the production are the Electric, Emporia; the Star, Newton; the Empress, Fort Scott and the Novelty, Winfield.

Recently the Hampton production opened to crowded houses at Jacob Lourie's Modern and Beacon Theatres, Boston, Mr. Lourie's exploitation staff stressing in the campaign on "The Sagebrusher" the fact that the picture was sponsored by the same producing genius who brought to the screen "The Westerners" and "Desert Gold," both of which scored tremendously in the Hub.

Japan a Heavy Buyer

Statistics concerning our foreign trade in moving picture film have just been secured from the Department of Commerce. During the month of March 2,108,688 feet of unexposed film, with a value of $65,783, and 23,793,100 feet of exposed film, worth $1,144,203, were exported.

Our most important market for unexposed film during the month was Japan, which took nearly three-quarters of our total exports of that item, the rest being distributed among fourteen other countries.

Our largest shipments of exposed film were made to England, France and Canada, although exports were also made to some forty other markets.

Swiss Director Signed by Laemmle to Make Comedies

JOHN HOHENVEST, one of the foremost motion picture directors in Europe, has been engaged by Universal. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, personally signed him up to produce a series of comedies featuring Lee Kohlmar, a celebrated stage comedian.

Hohenvest came to the United States recently to spend several months in the study of American methods of photoplay direction. He was for several years the general director for the Helvetia Cinema Company of Zurich, Switzerland. One of the films that bore his name was the well known "Around the World in Thirty Days," one of the most sumptuous of serials.

The new Universal comedy director formerly was a newspaperman and a writer before he entered the film world. He also is a landscape painter of note in his own country, and is an amateur ski champion. He has thirty-four medals, won in ski jumping contests.

Walturdaw Has First National Pictures for United Kingdom

AS a result of negotiations which have been in progress for several months, the productions of the First National Exhibitors Circuit will be distributed in the United Kingdom by the Walturdaw Company, Ltd.

A contract has been entered into between David P. Howells, Inc., foreign representatives of First National and Walturdaw whereby First National Attractions for two years go to the Walturdaw Company for distribution in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Negotiations for the future First National pictures for the United Kingdom were opened some months ago when the Walturdaw Company sent its managing director, Colonel H. A. Browne to the United States. Colonel Browne was in America for a period of two months, and when he left for London some weeks ago an agreement had been reached which has just been consummated in London.

Colton to Write for Universal

John Colton has been engaged by Universal to write stories solely for Priscilla Dean. He is now on his way to Los Angeles, where he will work side by side with Miss Dean and her director in the construction of suitable plots for the star.

One Colton story already has been selected for Miss Dean. It is "The Cat That Walked Alone." It is now being put into continuity form. It is an original screen story which is said to suit Miss Dean even better than did her popular Oriental role, "Sara" in "The Virgin of Stamboul."

Bumps Adams Starts Work

Work on the first production of the series of comedies in which Bumps Adams will be featured by Screen Crafts, Inc., has been started.

Claims Florida Sunshine Without Fogs Makes Tampa Ideal for Film Producing

THE filming of "The Isle of Destiny" on Anna Maria Key south of Tampa, Fla., is proving so successful that the Character Pictures Corporation is planning to assemble another company of players to complete other films in that locality.

Albert W. Plummer, vice president of the company, states that the Florida sunlight is the best that he has ever seen for moving pictures, inasmuch as scenes can be shot successfully as late as 6:30 p. m. in summer, whereas in California work is stopped at 5 o'clock.

There are no fogs in that climate and few rainy days, and this fact, Mr. Plummer believes, will result in other companies going to Tampa. As an indication of weather conditions, the St. Petersburg Independent, the afternoon paper of St. Petersburg, across the bay from Tampa, gives away its edition to the public free of charge on any day that the sun does not make its appearance, and it is seldom that it is called on to fulfill this agreement.

Paul Gilmore Star of Film.

Exteriors for "The Isle of Destiny" are being filmed at Anna Maria Key. Street scenes will be filmed in Tampa. Considerable photography will be done aboard pleasure boats in carrying out the plot of the picture, and for this purpose the excursion steamer Favorite has been selected.

The directors believe that it will be unnecessary to have artificial lighting; that the sunshine can be reflected from the outside by the means of screens and mirrors in such a way as to furnish all the light necessary. Plans of Paul Gilmore, owner of the property on which the picture is being taken, are progressing towards the construction of a movie city.

A bridge will shortly be built connecting the island with the main land. A deep water channel is also being built to facilitate the handling of freight.

Semi-Weekly News Reels Wins Popularity Among Exhibitors

EXHIBITORS everywhere are recognizing more and more the growing importance of the news reel and its relations to the newspaper stories of the day, it was pointed out recently by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal, upon his return from a tour of the Middle West for the purpose of investigating the news reel situation.

"I found that the live wire exhibitors," said Mr. Berman, "are realizing more and more the importance of having up-to-date news reels in their houses. Exhibitor after exhibitor told me that many patrons now have the habit of asking, 'When are you going to show pictures of the Mexican Revolution?' or 'Are you going to show pictures of that big train wreck in the East?' and similar inquiries proving that they anticipate news pictures of the day's events.

"International News Service is one of the first news reel publishers to take cognizance of this awakening interest in day to day news reels. Instead of the old fashioned weekly release of news reels, the International News Reel, released by Universal, now is semi-weekly. It will not be long before news reels will be released daily, just like a daily newspaper."

Wallace Reid Back in Hollywood

Wallace Reid, Paramount Artcraft star, has returned to Hollywood, from the northern part of California where he has been playing on the speaking stage during his vacation. As soon as he has rested up a bit he will start work on "The Charm School," a story by Alice Duer Miller, it is announced, and from all accounts this picture will be in a vein considerably different from his more recent pictures, many of which dealt with automobiling and the like.

Report Shows 750 Simplexes in Chicago Projection Rooms

INCLUDED in a report to the Simplex factory from the general offices of the Exhibitors' Supply Company in Chicago is found an item which indicates not only the general popularity of the projector manufactured by the Precision Machine Company, but the desire of the present managers to furnish their projection rooms with a better type of equipment.

A survey of the projection rooms in Chicago was instituted some time ago by the Exhibitors' Supply Company, and after the figures had been thoroughly analyzed it showed that there are slightly over 750 Simplex projectors in use daily in the city proper, while almost the same percentage is maintained in the suburbs and outlying sections of the city.

Many of the Chicago theatres recently equipped with Simplexes have demanded installations similar to those new theatres in New York and on the West Coast, whose projection rooms have been spoken of in trade and architectural journals as being particularly worthy of mention, so that the projection in Chicago can truly be said to equal the screen results viewed in any part of the country.

Educational Picks Bronberg for Atlanta Representative

EDUCATIONAL'S new exchange system in United States was practically completed last week with the announcement of arrangements for offices in Atlanta and Dallas in which the south and the southeastern territory will be handled.

Henry Ginsberg of the New York office visited Atlanta and after consultation with the exhibitor interests as to the best available man selected Arthur C. Bronberg, one of the best known distributors in the South. Mr. Bronberg organized the Southeastern Pictures Corporation, which he left a short time ago to establish the Arthur C. Bronberg Attractions. By his agreement with Educational, Mr. Bronberg will become financially interested in the Atlanta exchange and devote his entire time to Educational's product in the states of Georgia, Alabama, North and South Carolina and Florida.

Arrangements for the Dallas exchange were made at the time of the recent meeting of independent exhibitor interests in that section with the representatives of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The manager will be announced later.

Louis J. Gasnier in New York

Louis J. Gasnier, the producer, arrived in New York City last week from Los Angeles. Soon after his arrival his wife was taken ill and he hurried to Lakewood, N. J., to be with her. It is understood that Mr. Gasnier is in New York City to complete arrangements for the motion picture production of "Kismet," with Otis Skinner in the role he played so successfully on the stage. Mr. Gasnier is staying at the Hotel Astor.

Stanton Wants Exhibitors to Collaborate with Producers

RICHARD STANTON, director of many Fox successes, outlines a new departure in collaboration between the exhibitor and the motion picture producer. He says: "Believing as I do that the exhibitor and motion picture director should work hand and hand, thereby materially aiding each other in the production of box office successes, I take this means of suggesting to exhibitors an idea for their consideration at the annual convention in Cleveland.

"The exhibitor is first and last a showman, and as such is in a position to express the film likes and dislikes of his patrons. Therefore, the exhibitor should be an authority on the merits of stories selected for motion picture production. On the other hand, the director is an authority on the work of making box office hits out of the story skeleton.

"I believe a serious weakness is the mediocre knowledge and perception of the average scenario department. To overcome this I earnestly suggest to exhibitors that they put their valuable knowledge of what constitutes a success to work in co-operation with the director. This may be done by a committee of exhibitors appointed by the convention to read and suggest for the information of the producer, the names of such books and plays as the exhibitors deem worthy of screen presentation."

Warner Is Here in Overalls in Jesse D. Hampton Picture

HENRY B. WARNER, "the tragic-lipped Chesterfield of the screen," as one critic called him, is a hero, though in overalls, in "Uncharted Channels," the Jesse D. Hampton production shortly to be released by Robertson-Cole.

This picture is destined to draw strongly, in the judgment of those who have seen the pre-views, because of its timely nature, touching, as it does, a theme of the hour. The production possesses not only merit, but has in additon a star, a cast and a story that are all worth while.

Mr. Warner, as the hero, is not called upon to be tragic always. Although an exciting story revolves around him and he takes part in a realistic fight, he appears as lighthearted always and humorous often, for "Uncharted Channels" is a picture which, although dealing with a serious subject, is really light in tone.

Myron Selznick Purchases Screen Rights to the Work of Ten Well-Known Writers

MYRON SELZNICK has purchased recently the screen rights to stories of ten of the foremost playwrights, novelists and short-story writers of the day, according to an announcement this week. This does not include the contract under which Herbert Kaufman's editorials are being picturized exclusively by Selznick Pictures Corporation, it is stated. The list of the ten writers embraces the names of Frank L. Packard, George Barr McCutcheon, Edith Ellis, George V. Hobart, Pelham Grenville Wodehouse, Frances Marion, Lewis Allen Browne, William H. Hamby, Michael J. Phillips and Roy Horniman.

Roy Horniman is the author of "Jenny," Olive Thomas' forthcoming Selznick production. Mr. Horniman, listed as one of England's favorite novelists, is credited with some of our best authors in point of popularity on this side of the water.

Miss Thomas' latest Selznick picture is "The Flapper," from the pen of Frances Marion, the well-known writer of many screen successes.

From Frank L. Packard, of "Miracle Man" fame, Mr. Selznick is said to have obtained the film rights to "The Sin That Was His," a popular novel, to be used as a second starring vehicle for William Faversham. Hobart Henley is directing.

Edith Ellis, writer of many Broadway stage successes, is the author of "The Point of View," which Mr. Selznick has acquired as a starring vehicle for Elaine Hammerstein. Alan Crosland is directing the production.

Eugene O'Brien in "A Fool and His Money," recently released, is credited with scoring the biggest success of his career. George Barr McCutcheon, one of the most successful of American novelists, is responsible for the story.

In securing the screen rights to "Stop That Man," Mr. Selznick is said to have captured for Owen Moore's forthcoming production one of the best of the many comedies that have come from the pen of George V. Hobart. The picture is now being filmed at the Selznick west coast studios under the direction of Frank G. Griffin.

Lewis Allen Browne, who came into prominence as a playwright a little over a year ago when his farce, "Please Get Married," achieved an instantaneous success on Broadway, is credited with the authorship of "Marooned Hearts," a Selznick special production, being made with Zena Keefe and Conway Tearle in the leading roles. George Archainbaud is directing.

Another Selznick production now in the making, "Wilderness Fear," is from the pen of Michael J. Phillips, a well-known short story writer. Burton George is said to be filming the production in the far north.

M. Selznick, it is further stated, has also acquired the screen rights to "Red Foam," the William H. Hamby story that appeared recently in a popular weekly magazine; and "Love Among the Chickens," by Pelham Greenville Wodehouse.

Madsen Managers Palads-Theatre

A letter thanking Moving Picture World for its article of January 10, 1920, on the Palads-Theatre, Copenhagen, Denmark, has been received from Sophus Madsen, manager of the theatre. He points out that while the article credited him with being owner of the theatre, it did not name him as the actual manager of it, and desires that this be made clear.

Stafford Returns from Cuba

J. Benson Stafford has recently returned from Cuba, where he went in quest of material for "Pearl of the Antilles," a motion picture story. Also he has completed a morality screen play entitled "Ambition." He is now working on a fairy story.

Carl Laemmle Sees New Popularity for Costume and Period Pictures with Plot

THE opinion that in the near future moving patrons will demand costume and period pictures just as much as many now turn away from them is the prediction made by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal.

"It has come to my attention," said Mr. Laemmle, "that many people have knocked 'The Virgin of Stamboul' and have declared it could not succeed because it is, as they say, a costume picture. When I look at the reports concerning the spreading popularity of this picture I have to laugh at the croakers who sought to run it down.

"However, 'The Virgin of Stamboul' is not a period picture. It is not even a costume picture in the real sense of the word, although characters wear strange garbs entirely at variance to European and American standards of dress. As a matter of fact, Miss Priscilla Dean and the other characters wear exactly the same clothes that are being worn today in Constantinople and Asia Minor, in which this picis laid.

For Present Period Costumes.

"My idea of a costume period picture which will not interest moving picture fans of the present, is one dealing with some period at least fifty years removed from the present generation and in which the problems faced by the characters are relics of the past and not comprehensible in the present day.

"Certain conditions which might have been considered a calamity a century ago might be of trifling importance today. Social as well as moral standards change with the different generations and things which might have proved engrossing fifty years ago are only mildly interesting today.

I have always contended that a big story, no matter where its scenes are laid, or in what period, will be a success. Certain elemental emotions, such as love, hate, revenge, pride of race, struggle for power and the like, are not changed by time or place. A story containing these ingredients in the combination will fascinate."

Young Buffalo Series Listed for Early Release by Pathe

OWING to the demand of exhibitors for two-reel western pictures, Pathe has decided to list its series of "Young Buffalo" productions, just completed, for early release. Five pictures are included in the list. "Tex of the Timberlands," first of the miniature dramas which dramatically and picturesquely depicts life in the great Northwest, has been listed for release on July 11.

Subsequent issues in this series will be "His Pal's Gal," on July 18; "The Law of the Border," on July 25; "The Hobo of Pizen City," on August 1; "The Hold-up Man," on August 3.

Five Pictures a "Serial."

While each two-reeler stands out as an independent production, complete in story, the character of Young Buffalo has been so woven in each picture as to virtually make the five pictures a "serial."

Contracts already received by the short subjects department of Pathe on these pictures insure their success.

"Come, 'Sherry,' Don't Leave Us Now. Think How Much Dolly Loves You. Please Say That You'll Stay."

Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse Are Retained for Second Callaghan Feature

PROOF of the success of an important departure in modern production is contained in the announcement that Ida May Park and Joseph De Grasse, joint directors of Bessie Love in "The Midlanders," have been retained by Andrew J. Callaghan, head of the producing organization of that name, for the second offering of the star. Negotiations to this end were completed by wire from New York City where Mr. Callaghan is engaged in the purchase of future big vehicles for Miss Love. The second picture has not yet been named.

In the adaptation to the screen of Charles Tenney Jackson's novel, "The Midlanders," Mr .Callaghan created considerable interest by the announcement that Bessie Love was to have the benefits of the combined direction of a man and woman. There was much discussion as to the value of having both the male and female points of view for ultimate success in a well rounded production. The contract just closed by Mr. Callaghan with Miss Park and Mr. De Grasse reflects the successful culmination of this novel experiment.

Bessie Love Film Completed.

Reports from the Bessie Love studios in Los Angeles disclose the fact that "The Midlanders" is rapidly nearing completion. Considerable time was spent in location work in order to make the most of the stirring dramatic action transpiring in the Mississippi Valley. Following the advices of the producers, Directors Park and De Grasse are taking all the necessary time to make the interiors as distinctive as the outdoor scenes.

Mr. Callaghan, who arrived in New York City last week, is closing negotiations for the rights to several big vehicles for Miss Love. He has definitely decided against the use of original scenarios and will maintain its high standard in story vehicles as well as direction and production. He will remain in the metropolis until he has acquired sufficient big plays and novels.

Theme of "Daughter Pays" Is Revealed by Myron Selznick

IN commenting on the value of the recent purchase of "The Daughter Pays," the novel by Mrs. Baillie Reynolds, as a screen production, Myron Selznick enthused in his statement that he considers it one of the best purchases of the year. "Mrs. Reynolds' story," said Mr. Selznick, "created a sensation when it was first published in England a few years ago. Within a very short time the plot had plunged the British reading public and literary press into a discussion that extended for a period of several months.

Many Dramatic Situations.

"In telling her story, Mrs. Reynolds has evolved a series of situations not only highly dramatic but which present problems of unique interest. The author begins her narrative by presenting a new angle to the question of whether a woman dare risk her future happiness by marrying for money. With this first thread of the tale there is interwoven a second question. How great a sacrifice should a mother demand of her daughter in the name of filial piety? Despite the fact that these problems supply the foundation of Mrs. Reynolds' novel, she has erected a superstructure of fiction that is sheer entertainment, leaving the solution entirely with her readers."

When the story was published in America it is said to have precipitated almost immediately a repetition of the discussion created on the other side of the Atlantic.

R. Cecil Smith is adapting the novel for the screen and, according to Mr. Selznick, the problems will be transferred to the screen solely as entertainment, leaving the solution in the hands of the public.

William Farnum Begins on Third Production for Fox

SINCE his recent return to the Pacific Coast, William Farnum has completed two features for William Fox, and his third is now in course of production in Hollywood.

"The Orphan," which was the first of the trio, is an adaptation of Clarence E. Mulford's novel of the same name. This has already been released.

The second film of the trio, "The Joyous Troublemakers," written by Jackson Gregory and adapted by Charles Kenyon, has been completed and is now in process of titling and trimming. According to the release schedule from Fox this will reach the first run theatres in June.

With the casting of the third feature "The Scuttlers," for this star William Fox has given Mr. Farnum a strong cast with a new leading woman so far as Fox films are concerned.

Jackie Saunders, who has a following of her own, has been selected to play the leading female role opposite.

Among the other principals chosen to support the star are Herschel Mayall Arthur Millet, Harry Spindler, Manuel Ojeda, Erico Ruiz, "Kewpie" Morgan, Claire Delorez and Al Fremont.

J. Gordon Edwards will direct the adaptation of this Clyde C. Westover novel. The scenario of the play is the work of Paul H. Sloane of the Fox staff in New York.

New Orleans School Shows Its Pupils Educational Pictures

NEW ORLEANS kids like to go to school as much as to the movies—because the schools are rapidly becoming movie houses! The Samuel J. Peters school is the first of the New Orleans schools to start the "Silver screen educational feature"—and every day, between 11:30 and 12, the children assemble in a big hall for the showing of travelogues, weeklies and other educational features.

Quite a novel feature has been inaugurated for the payment of this feature, which is not yet provided for in the educational fund. The boys of the schools have volunteered to salvage newspapers and magazines to pay for the equipment and running expenses, and the first week's effort assures the success of this method.

The principal of the school will give lectures with every showing of a picture, and thus the features will be made as educational as possible. Schools all over the city are making plans to follow the lead of the Samuel J. Peters school.

Universal Comedians Do Five-Reeler

Edgar Franklin's hilarious story, "Everything But the Truth," has been put into screen form by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, Universal's twin fun-makers and will be released on May 31. It is a five-reel comedy. This will be the first appearance of Lyons and Moran on the screen in any but the one reel comedies. In this they are supported by Anne Cornwall, Katherine Lewis, Willis Marks, Elizabeth Witts, and Nelson McDowell.

New Rainbow Ready May 31.

Universal also is releasing a new Rainbow Comedy on May 31 called "An Artist's Muddle." It is in two reels and features Harry Mann and Lillian Byron.

The Universal serials for the week are the seventeenth episode of "Elmo the Fearless," featuring Elmo Lincoln, and the sixth episode of "The Moon Riders," featuring Art Accord and Mildred Moore.

Ain't She Fickle, Huh? Ain't She? Leaves Her True Lover, Goes Into the Next Room, Where She Finishes the Episode.

Capitol Books "Courage of Marge O' Doone"; Picture to Open the Pantages in Los Angeles

WHEN Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, arrived in New York City late last week, he was greeted with the information that the James Oliver Curwood story, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," made into a special production by his brother, David Smith, had been booked at the Capitol Theatre, New York, for a week's engagement commencing May 30.

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" has been one of Mr. Smith's pet productions. Its story was selected by Mr. Smith as having unusual picture possibilities, and James Oliver Curwood, the author, a close personal friend of Mr. Smith classified it as one of his "very best books." In selecting David Smith, to take Curwood's pages and turn them into moving film, Mr. Smith was guided by his brother's unusual success in directing pictures which wild animals were shown in their native haunts.

To Open the Pantages Theatre.

The news of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" booking in the Capitol crowned a series of announcements of big bookings of this picture all over the United States and Canada. As Mr. Smith was half-way across the continent on his return journey from Vitagraph's West Coast studios, at Hollywood, he received a wire from John M. Quinn, general manager of Vitagraph, that the film was to open several new picture theatres, one of which is the new two-million-dollar Pantage's Theatre in Los Angeles.

From all corners of the United States and Canada, bookings on this Vitagraph special have been coming in at a rate that constituted a record in Vitagraph annals. In the early instances, they were the result of information and descriptions of the spectacular production without screen examination—the result of the sensational record of the book from which the story was adapted and the exploitation put behind the pictures by Vitagraph.

During the past ten days, however, bookings have twice tripled, Vitagraph announces, as the prints of the film have been almost constantly running in Vitagraph's exchanges across the country, and the bookings have been made on a mammoth scale.

Demand for Press Sheet Exhausts Supply.

Everywhere the conviction seems to be growing that the production is destined to become one of the greatest popular successes screened, and inquiries and requests for advertising matter received at Vitagraph's executive offices indicate that elaborate preparations are being made weeks before the film is scheduled to be shown.

A large, two-color combination press sheet and plan book put out by Vitagraph several weeks ago with the idea that there would be a large and special demand for this special, will have to be re-run, and already a special re-run of lobby display has been ordered. That exhibitors have intention of "circusing" this special production is evidenced by the demand for the 4-sheets. Thousands of these stands were posted a number of weeks ago all over the United States and Canada.

Exhibitors Using Color Plates.

Many representative exhibitors have asked for and received electros of the color plates used in Vitagraph's trade paper advertising. Some are using these plates just as they are, to print special folders for circularizing their patrons, others are using the pictorial part only, and are mortising in new type copy, which in their opinion will hold a deeper and more specal appeal to the following outside the trade. Many are planning co-operative exploitation stunts with the book stores of their respective communities.

Exhibitors in certain key centers which have newspapers circulating through a large drawing territory are planning a newspaper review for their patrons before the picture is given a public showing in their theatres—a parallel, more or less, to the advance showings in the industry for trade paper reviewers before a film is booked by an exhibitor.

After having seen the film themselves, they wager the success of their booking on what they believe every newspaper critic will say. They have expressed themselves as confident that this will mean much favorable word-of-mouth advertising before the film is run, and that after the picture is shown, business will take care of itself.

An effort is under way to have this picture reviewed by the same critics who reviewed the book, and Vitagraph exchange managers and representative exhibitors are accordingly getting in touch with as many of these reviewers as practicable.

One of the greatest volumes of early bookings on the production is reported to be coming from the Northwest territory served by Vitagraph's Seattle exchange and its newly established branch office in Portland, Ore. The pre-public showings in this region have resulted in many glowing reviews.

The Northwest reception of the film is not regarded by Vitagraph as having any sectional significance, however, for an exchange in an entirely different part of the country—Dallas—is making a record on this film, and within the four-day period previous to last Monday its manager has sent in contracts for eleven of the largest cities in Texas—Dallas, Houston, Fort Worth, El Paso, San Antonio, Waco, Austin, Abilene, Temple, Wichita Falls and Dennison.

Big Detroit Bookings.

Detroit, too, has been busy, and on last Saturday Vitagraph's general manager received a wire telling of bookings in Flint, Saginaw, Kalamazoo, Battle Creek and Lansing, in addition to Detroit itself. Within an hour and a half wires were received telling of contracts closed in such widely separated points as Providence, Sioux Falls, Saginaw, Holyoke, Springfield, Mass., and Butler, Pa.

Last Saturday's Chicago wire showed the following towns closed: Marion, Ind.; Rockford, Ill.; Elgin, Ill.; Galesburg, Ill.; Beloit, Wis.; Green Bay, Wis.; Pekin, Ill.; Blue Island, Ill.; and Elgin, Ill. During a fifteen-minute period on Monday morning (of this week) wires received announced contracts for the Strand Theatre, in Fargo, N. D., the People's Theatre, Superior, Wis.; the Laughlin Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., and the Strand Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

Is Given Fifty-seven Day Booking.

The Los Angeles booking is only one instance of a booking of this film in a Pantages house; it has also been scheduled for runs in Pantages theatres in Spokane and Tacoma, Washington, and also the Pantages Theatre in Salt Lake City, at what is reported to be the highest price ever paid for a special in that place.

Other circuits have indicated that here is a film they will go the limit on, and it has been already given a fifty-seven-day booking in the Proctor Theatres in New York City and state and adjacent territory and for sixteen days in Poli theatres in New Haven, Hartford, Bridgeport, Waterbury and other cities.

Sets Vitagraph's Canadian Record.

W. F. Barrett, Vitagraph's division manager for Canada, has announced that a record had already been set for a Vitagraph film in Canada. The story, it will be recalled, is scened in the Canadian Northwest.

Vitagraph officials, up to this week, had been looking for the picture to break all Vitagraph records. Monday morning's communications from their branch offices, however, have brought forth the claim that Vitagraph booking records are already broken.

BEAUTIFUL Beyond Words

NOTHING that we can say in words can adequately describe the magnificence of Clara Kimball Young in "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL."

Among the well informed, it is not the custom to eulogize accomplishments in Art.

True art is in itself an expression of achievement. Be it fine sculpture, superb painting or distinguished motion picture the hallmarks of the genius may be easily seen.

Thus, in presenting Clara Kimball Young in "FOR THE SOUL OF RAFAEL" Equity feels a justifiable pride in giving to the world a production in which the combined genius of Author, Star and Director stand out strikingly as an accomplishment in the advanced art of the photoplay.

At Grauman's beautiful Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles, where this production had its premiere, it scored a brilliant success, precisely as it will wherever shown throughout the world.

To enable exploitation in keeping with the high character of the picture an unique campaign book has been prepared. It should be in the hands of every theatre in the land. If you do not receive a copy of this brochure, a request on your own stationery will bring one by return post, from the Equity Franchise Holder nearest you.

Playing engagements now being arranged. An inquiry directed to the Equity Franchise Holder in your territory will bring you full information.

Famous Players-Lasky Releases "Sea Wolf" and "Dark Mirror"

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation released on May 16 two distinctly dramatic and likewise unusual Paramount-Artcraft pictures, one being George Melford's special production, "The Sea Wolf," and the other a Thomas H. Ince production, "The Dark Mirror," starring Dorothy Dalton.

Mr. Melford's production of the sea story which made Jack London famous is declared by Famous Players-Lasky to be one of the most sensational photoplays released in many months. Will M. Ritchey wrote the scenario of this, the first of the series to be known as George Melford Productions. Paul Perry was the cameraman.

The central figure in the story is "Wolf" Larsen, brutal captain of "The Ghost," a whaling schooner. Noah Beery portrays "Wolf." Tom Forman plays the part of Humphrey Van Weyden and Mabel Julienne Scott is the girl, Maud Brewster. Raymond Hatton as Mugridge, the cook; Walter Long as Black Harris, the mate; James Gordon as "Death" Larsen, and Fred Huntley as Johnson, a sailor, give fine character delineations.

Eugenie Magnus Ingleton scenarized and Charles Giblyn directed "The Dark Mirror," in which Dorothy Dalton appears under the Thomas H. Ince banner. The picture is taken, of course, from Louis Joseph Vance's popular novel of the same name. The story involves New York's "upper ten," and also the worst haunts of the underworld.

Newspaper Co-operation Aid "Bringing Up Father" Series

THE co-operation received by theatre managers from newspapers using George McManus' "Bringing Up Father" comics, which are now being issued by Pathe in two-reel form, has resulted in their being booked by many more prominent film houses. Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; the Butterfly, Milwaukee; Mall and Alhambra theatres, Cleveland; Sun, Omaha; Miller's, Los Angeles; Waldorf, Lynn; Rialto, Lawrence, and the Family, Davenport, are among the biggest theatres which have just listed the "Bringing Up Father" series among their coming comedy attractions.

Other well-known theatres billing the series, which features Johnny Ray as Jiggs, are Rialto, Fort Dodge; Tootle, St. Joseph, Mo.; Royal, Atchinson; Luna, Kankakee; Empress, Wichita Falls; Crown, Mobile; Electric, Joplin; Colonial, Stockton; Strand, Council Bluffs; Lona, Sedalia.

McManus Cartoons Well Known.

Theatre exploitation managers have been extremely successful in obtaining co-operation from newspapers that are using the McManus cartoons. In a number of cities this co-operation has extended to the point where the newspapers directly link up their cartoons with theatres exhibiting the life portrayals of the celebrated Jiggs family by carrying banners over the drawings calling attention to the fact that the McManus creations can now be seen in films, and where they can be seen.

"Whispers" Scheduled for May 17.

"Whispers," a Selznick picture, starring Elaine Hammerstein, and released on May 17 by the Select Pictures Corporation, is announced as containing a splendid array of supporting talent, beautiful outdoor shots and impressive interior sets. It is also said to give Miss Hammerstein ample opportunity to reveal her versatility. The story, by Marcus V. Connolly, was picturized by George Proctor and directed by William P. S. Earle.

Matt Moore plays the leading male role in support of Miss Hammerstein. Other players include Phillips Tead, Charles Girard, Templar Saxe, Ida Darling, Warren Cook, Bernard Randall, Maude Hill, Dorothy Worth and George Stevens.

Stanley Extends Bookings on "Edgars."

With almost all of their first-run theatres on Market street, Philadelphia, playing the "Edgar" series of comedies being issued by Goldwyn, the Stanley Company of America contracted for thirty additional days on these humorous two-reel subjects for subsequent presentation in the remaining theatres under their control.

Although no attempt has been made to release the pictures outside of Philadelphia as yet, it is certain from the number of inquiries from exhibitors that all sales records for these comedies will be shattered.

Bert Lytell's Brother Plays Lead in New Metro Production

WILFRED LYTELL, younger brother of Bert Lytell, has been engaged by Metro to play the Hon. Nigel Villiers, lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards, in the all-star production of Cecil Raleigh's Drury Lane melodrama, "The Marriages of Mayfair," adapted by Julia Burnham and produced under the person supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

Mr. Lytell, coming from an old theatrical family, was brought up in the atmosphere of the stage and made his first appearance in his brother's stock company at Albany. On the stage he played in "Capt. Kidd, Jr.," for Cohan and Harris; with Robert Edeson in "His Brother's Keeper" and with Barney Bernard in "Business Before Pleasure." On the screen he has played leading roles in "Our Mrs. McChesney," with Ethel Barrymore; "The Harvest Moon" and the serial, "Trailed by Three."

Wilfred Lytell expects to be joined in New York shortly by his brother, Bert, who is coming on from Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, where he is just finishing the production of his newest picture, "The Price of Redemption," from I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Temple of Dawn." It will be the first meeting of the brothers in more than two years, Bert having been working steadily in California and Wilfred having stayed all the time in the East.

Jews Celebrating Liberation of Palestine Shown in the Latest Selznick News Reel

AUDIENCES throughout the country, especially Jewish people, will be eager to see the parade of 40,000 Jews marching through New York City in honor of the liberation of their native land, Palestine, as contained in the latest Selznick news reel No. 13-A, released through Select.

Selznick News also shows over 200 aged persons taken by the American Red Cross to the old folks' home of the Daughters of Jacob; the Resolute, test cup defender, candidate for trials that will select American entrant for America's Cup race, scooping over the waters at Bristol; troops in Frankfort marching into the German city to enforce the terms of the treaty, following the disturbance caused by the attempted revolution; famous Uncle Joe Cannon, Congressman from Illinois, in his eighty-fourth anniversary, is shown as a guest at a luncheon. There are many other interesting subjects on the reel.

"House of Toys" Is Drama of Domestic Life.

One way a photoplay is judged good or bad is by the story it tells and the manner of the telling. "The House of Toys," produced by the American Film Company, places graphically before the spectator in six acts the vital, throbbing scenes which are enacted under every third roof to the east and west and the north and south of us—a drama of the most intimate appeal because most of us are, or have been, in the throes of its unfolding.

It is the problem of the husband and wife living within their small income and keeping mutual love and faith alive while trying to make both ends meet. Seena Owen, in the role of Shirley Lord, a romantic and thoughtless girl, interprets the feeling and character of the wife who fails as a helpmeet. Helen Jerome Eddy is "the other woman" in the case, whose good offices help to bring forth the spark of genius in the disappointed husband. Pell Trenton, the leading man, and George Hernandez, in an important character part, interpret their roles well.

Giving Much Attention to Night Scenes in "Number 17"

FOR four weeks George A. Beranger has been directing the William Fox screen version of Louis Tracy's novel "Number 17" in which George Walsh is being starred. For three of the four weeks Mr. Beranger has been laboring day and night with his star and supporting company, while with his photographer, Charles Gilson, he has been staging a series of night scenes.

The story is a dramatic one and deals with many phases of human character. It carries the star and principals through a network of plausible adventures among the lights and shadows of city life, and brings them safely to a finale which cannot fail to win favor with all screen lovers.

The locale of the picture contains shots of Chinatown, with hundreds of yellow men thronging the narrow, thoroughfares. For these scenes the Walsh company went into the heart of the Chinese quarter in New York and photographed the real people there.

The cast, engaged to support George Walsh includes Mildred Reardon as leading woman, Charles Mussette, Lillian Beck, Louis R. Wolheim, Harold Thomas, Charles Slattery, Jack Newton, Spencer Charters and Lillian Griffin.

This is the second picture George Beranger has made for Fox, and it is also the second of the Louis Tracy stories to reach the screen through this organization; the first being "Wings of the Morning," in which William Farnum was featured.

Gives Title of Latest Kaufman Weekly.

Lewis J. Selznick announces that the fourth Herbert Kaufman editorial now being released is "Society Bad Men," and will be released on May 30.

Latest reports from the Selznick offices indicate that exhibitors are eagerly booking Herbert Kaufman releases.

Florence Court in Metro Picture.

Florence Court, who has been engaged to play the role of Lily de Mario in the picturization of the Drury Lane melodrama, "The Marriages of Mayfair," at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street, is known as "the most photographed girl in the world." That's because, besides appearing in pictures, she has been photographed for advertisements of various sorts and her face is familiar everywhere these advertisements are shown.

"The Marriages of Mayfair," by Cecil Raleigh, is one of the great action plays that made Drury Lane, London, famous as the home of melodrama. It was adapted to the screen by Julia Burnham and is directed by George W. Terwilliger.

Complete Filming of "The Blue Moon."

The filming of "The Blue Moon" under the direction of George L. Cox has just been completed at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company. Pell Trenton takes the role of the Pearl Hunter; Elinor Field is the Wild Rose; Harry S. Northrup is the man with the fancy vest; James Gordon is the river boss; Margaret McWade is the iron gray woman; Herbert Standing is the wild man; Sidney Franklin is Louie Solomon—which completes the characters and the cast.

"Treat 'Em Kind" Is Latest Capitol.

A new twist to an old idea in picture photography is responsible for an extremely humorous situation in the latest Capitol comedy, in which Neal Burns is starred. The picture, "Treat 'Em Kind," is being distributed through the Goldwyn exchanges. The old trick is nothing more than a ceiling walking stunt by the hero, who is pretending to be a legitimate patient in the alcoholic ward of a small town's hospital. Lucille Rubey plays opposite Neal Burns and Mark Goldaine is the director.

"Virgin" Film Is Opening Attraction.

New Yorkers living near Fordham Road and Valentine avenue in the Bronx flocked on the evening of Wednesday, May 12, to the opening of a big new theatre at that street intersection. The popularity which this theatre received was ample confirmation of the belief of its builders that a new and modern theatre was needed in that vicinity.

Pathe's "Bound and Gagged" Is Acclaimed by Exhibitors

"BOUND AND GAGGED," the ten episode Pathe serial which was the running mate of "The Black Secret" and inaugurated the two-at-a-time serial policy, is still holding its own as one of Pathe's best serial sellers. Upon completion of the picture at the Star Theatre, Skamokawa, Wash.; Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla., and the Lyric, Easley, S. C., the managers of those houses sent letters to Pathe, in which the picture was complimented as the most completely satisfactory serial they had run to date.

H. G. Stettmund, Jr., manager of the Odeon Theatre in Chandler, wrote that "Bound and Gagged," in his opinion, "filled a long felt want on account of being 'different.'" While C. S. King, owner and manager of the Star in Skamokawa, stated that "whenever it is thrown on the screen the audience nearly brings down the house with applause." And Phelps Sasseen, of the Lyric in Easley, reports that "it certainly was a great drawing card for me."

All three of these managers inform Pathe that George B. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot, the stars, have built up such popularity among the patrons of their houses that the next serial in which they appear is assured of bookings there.

Madge Kennedy Plays Dual Role in Her Latest Goldwyn

FOR the first time since her connection with the screen, Madge Kennedy is to be seen in dual roles in a photoplay. With the aid of double exposure, the star has portrayed two diverse parts in her latest photoplay for Goldwyn, "The Girl with the Jazz Heart," taken from a story by Robert Shannon and picturized under the direction of Lawrence Windom.

Goldwyn officials regard the experiment with Miss Kennedy as a marked success. Mr. Windom has succeeded, it is said, in presenting Miss Kennedy to herself, in having her at a restaurant dining with herself, and in other ingenious situations, without straining the credulity of the beholder. In one part Miss Kennedy is seen as a daughter of the Mennonites, a stern-faced religious sect, and in the other as a typical New York "hello" girl. In this latter role the star dons a blonde wig, thus setting another new precedent for herself on the screen.

"Grab the Ghost" Is Title of New Rolin.

"Grab the Ghost" has been selected as an appropriate title for the new Rolin comedy which Pathe will release May 30. It portrays the difficulties of a bride and bridegroom when they try to take their honeymoon in a "haunted" house. "Snub" Pollard is the featured comedian, and Marie Mosquini is the bride. Eddie Boland appears as a jealous suitor and "Sunshine Sambo" does his share in the laugh line, helping to make it one of the funniest one-reel comedies of the year.

Another Pathe Serial Nearing Completion.

Rapid progress is reported from the studio on the filming of the fifteen episode serial in which Juanita Hansen is to be starred by Pathe. Scenes for the eleventh episode have been filmed at Huntington, Long Island.

When the company, which included Director Bertram Millhauser, Juanita Hansen, Warner Oland and other principals of the cast, boarded the train for New York they were cheered by local merchants.

Announces Release of Post Capitol Comedies.

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces the release of the two latest Buddy Post Capitol comedies for May 30 and June 13, respectively. The earlier release is called "Oh, Girls!" and will be followed by "Mum's the Word." In both of these comedies the portly Buddy Post is surrounded by hosts of pretty girls, who keep him moving briskly through two reels of comic situations.

"Little Cafe" Good Summer Show.

"The Little Cafe," scheduled for release by Pathe on June 6, is an ideal production for entertainment in the warm months. It is one of the livest, lightest comedies of the year, full of the sparkling activity of the great French comedian, Max Linder, and replete with Paris summer scenes.

Kinogram Shows How Farmers Dealt Big Blow to Living Costs

OLD MAN H. C. L. being dealt a crushing blow by the farmers of St. Louis, who establish a curb market where their wares can be handled at figures within reason, is but one of the interesting news features contained in the latest Kinogram No. 39-A, released by Republic.

Other news items of importance include winners of an essay contest setting forth the advantages of military training receiving awards in Washington; a riot of volunteer anglers on the wharf at Boston assembled to cut down the rising cost of fish; children of Vallejo, Cal., trudging in a parade to induce their parents to vote for funds to enlarge schools; students at famous Pennsylvania college, Bryn Mawr, putting on an elaborate spring outdoor pageant; big dredges on the Susquehanna River near Harrisburg dredging thousands of tons of waste coal from a stream, and many other interesting items.

New "King Spruce" Bookings Include Tom Moore's Strand

REPORTS from all Hodkinson branches the past week further emphasize the widespread exhibitor interest in "King Spruce," the Dial Film Company's picturization of Holman Day's novel of the Maine forests. Tom Moore, the Washington, D. C., showman, has contracted for a week's presentation of "King Spruce" early in June and the Signal Amusement Company has booked Mitchell Lewis' new starring vehicle for immediate simultaneous showings at its first run houses in Chattanooga and Knoxville.

On June 16 "King Spruce" opened a week's engagement at Rowland and Clark's Savoy Theatre, Pittsburg, to be followed by three and four-day engagements at various other houses in the Rowland and Clark chain. Last week the Hodkinson release equalled the attendance mark for a four-day run at the Virginia Theatre, Wheeling, W. Va.

Further proof of its power is seen in the array of stage and screen artists supporting Mitchell Lewis, the roster including Mignon Anderson, Melbourne MacDowell, Arthur Millette, Betty Wales, Joe Ray, James O'Neill and Frederic Herzog.

Hodkinson Names Pictures That Will Go Big During Hot Months

THE W. W. Hodkinson organization will stick with the exhibitor through the summer season, supplying to him the quality of pictures which will enable him to defy the effects of the hot spells. "Sex" will be one of the big assets in every exhibitor's summer campaign. The drawing powers of "Sex" have successfully defied the wet and the cold and may be trusted to overcome the handicap of heat. Then there is Benjamin B. Hampton's "Riders of the Dawn," which has created quite a bit of gossip on Broadway by the manner in which it sustained a high average of attendance during its recent engagement at the Strand, in spite of adverse weather conditions.

Another Louise Glaum picture is in the making, called "Love Madness." This production measures up to the standard set by star and producer in "Sex."

The Bosworth picture which is called "Bucko McAllister" and also produced by J. Parker Read, Jr., shows Bosworth in one of these character parts in the portrayal of which he stands unrivaled in the screen world.

Goldwyn Picture Has Unusual and Strong Pictorial Effects

SUBTLE contrasts in character, delicate changes in mood and the portrayal in pictorial form of tenuous ideas, which have been thought could be conveyed only through the medium of words handled with the utmost dexterity, are now gradually finding expression on the motion picture screen. Granting adequate directorial understanding, the additonal effects that can now be obtained are due to expert handling of the camera and unusual finesse in cutting and editing.

An effect achieved in the new Will Rogers picture, "Jes' Call Me Jim," produced by the Goldwyn company, may be cited. Part of the story pictorializes the struggle of a temporarily mentally aberrated man to win his way back to consciousness and a clear understanding of his surroundings.

In photographing the scenes that tell this part of the story, the young son of the sick man is seen kneeling amid the trees of a California redwood forest, praying for the recovery of his father. His figure is clearly lined, but the atmosphere above him enshrouds the thick tree trunks in a haze through which the strong sunlight streams in cylindrical columns. All these shafts of dust-laden sunlight focus from above on the kneeling figure of the little man of faith. This setting is cut into the scene showing the sick man in his struggles.

But instead of presenting a sharp picture, a soft focus lens was used, and the tossing of the man on his bed is seen as through a screen. In this way, the idea of the man's struggle from darkness to light is shown in a pictorial way. And, as his mind gradually clears, so does the picture. In the end, he is presented in sharp outline, his brain cleared of all fog.

Telepathy Is Theme of Cinemas Next.

"His Brother's Keeper," American Cinema Corporation's newest production, filmed from an original script by N. Brewster Morse under the direction of Wilfrid North, has the vital, productive and timely theme of telepathy as its central motive.

It is, briefly, the conflict between good and evil thought, told in dramatic and elaborate story fabric.

Build Eskimo Settlement for Mayer Film.

The largest Eskimo settlement south of the Arctic Circle was recently built by the Louis B. Mayer Studio in Los Angeles, for the filming of "The Trail's End," an Edwin Carewe-directed picture adapted from the James Oliver Curwood novel, "Isobel."

Joe Maleto, who has spent a quarter of a century the other side of the Arctic Circle, superintended the building of the village.

Mr. Carewe is nearing the end of the filming of this story of love and loneliness. The cast is a notable one and contains House Peters and Jane Novak, as well as Edwin J. Peil and Tom Wilson.

Lynn House Showing Nazimova Hangs Out S. R. O. Sign Early

A NEW record for attendance was established recently at the Olympia Theatre in Lynn, Mass., when the latest Nazimova production, "The Heart of a Child," played to capacity houses on the first day of its showing. Booked for a three-day run the picture drew record crowds on the afternoon and evening of the opening day, so that the S. R. O. sign had to be hung out to all late-comers.

Lynn is a manufacturing city of more than 100,000 population. The interest aroused by the showing of the Nazimova picture was remarkable, according to the following letter to the Metro home offices from Francis P. O'Neill, publicity director of the Olympia Theatre.

"Just a line to give you an idea on how your great picture, 'The Heart of a Child,' starring that great actress, Nazimova, went over in Lynn at the opening day, Monday. As press agent of the Olympia Theatre, I always study the feature pictures very closely. I think the acting of Nazimova in this masterly picture was immense.

"As a result of the success of the picture at the afternoon's performance, the theatre packed them in at the evening's performance. The Olympia has a seating capacity of 3,200 and to fill them up, with the S. R. O. sign hung out early, is certainly a remarkable stunt. The picture was the talk of the city Monday."

Preparing Paper for Kosmik Serial.

May Yohe, formerly Lady Francis Hope, has written a novel, "The Story of My Life," which will be published in conjunction with the release of "The Hope Diamond Mystery" serial now being produced by Kosmik Films, Inc. The connecting up with the book store window angle will be readily perceived. Special stills of May Yohe for one sheets, three sheets and six sheets and twenty sheet blocks are being prepared. And then a "double track" by the Hearst newspapers throughout the country carrying the novelization of the Yohe story simultaneously with the release of the serial. May Yohe has consented to make personal appearances at theatres with the presentation of the serial.

July Is Designated a Paramount Month with Special New York Sales Campaign

WHEN torrid summer weather begins to exert a depressing influence upon the show business, the New York exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will have a remedy ready, according to Manager H. H. Buxbaum, who has proclaimed July to be Paramount month for his territory. Mr. Buxbaum's theory is that the usual falling off of business at the theatres during the summer months can be counteracted if exhibitors will make the period a special occasion for showing the best pictures which producers will have to offer.

"The idea that summer is a good time to work off poor films on the public, with indifferent patronage as the excuse, is entirely outworn. Our experience last year, when live-wire exhibitors responded to the appeal to play first-class pictures at this time, and make a good profit during these months in doing so, was convincing," he stated.

During July, Famous Players' Lasky Corporation's New York Exchange will conduct an intensive sales campaign to bring Paramount Artcraft pictures to every house in New York City and the eastern and southern part of the state covered by the exchange as well as eastern New Jersey. One of the prime objects will be to give exhibitors a chance to make up for skipped bookings and to play specially big productions that they were obliged to pass up earlier in the season because the pictures had been previously booked by another house.

Among some of the big specials which will be available for exhibitors during Paramount month, Mr. Buxbaum declared, are Cecil B. DeMille's "Male and Female," "Everywoman," "The Copperhead," George Fitzmaurice's "On with the Dance," "Treasure Island," John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," George Melford's "The Sea Wolf" and Cecil B. DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife."

"My one suggestion to aggressive exhibitors," Mr. Buxbaum said, "is to keep their theatres clean and wholesome, to have them cooled with air fans, to serve refreshing lemonade and to advertise these facts. It's a lot more cheerful to sit in a cozy, comfortable theatre watching a good picture than to stroll around the hot dusty streets in the middle of the afternoon."

Earnings of Eastman Company for 1919 Show Increase of $4,274,219 Over 1918

INDICATIVE of the growth of the raw stock and manufacturing end of the motion picture industry, the earnings of the Eastman Kodak Company of New Jersey and its subsidiary companies, including Kodak, Limited, of England, were the greatest in the history of the concern last year, according to a report compiled by the directors for the benefit of the stockholders. The net earnings of the combined companies for 1919, after deducting war excess profits and income taxes of $6,089,692.99, totaled $18,326,188.31, as compared with the net earnings of $14,051,969.17 in 1918.

The balance sheet shows a surplus for the twelve months of $10,137,136.31 after charging off liberal amounts for depreciation and paying four quarterly dividends of 1½ per cent. on the preferred stock, and for quarterly dividends of 2½ per cent. and extra dividends amounting to 30 per cent. on the common stock.

Assets Reach $88,718,112.

Assets of the company include the huge sum of $88,718,112.58. No value is placed on the patents and good will of any of the companies, although it is recognized that these are worth probably greatly in excess of the real property of the companies.

While the earnings of the company on various lines of goods are not disclosed, it has been known for years that by far the greatest profits are made on motion picture film. With cameras and other accessories for picture-making included, the profits of the company are said to be due in a major way to the rapid expansion of the motion picture industry.

Goldwyn Founds Sales Promotion Branch to Meet Demand for Its Early Releases

BECAUSE managers of the smaller theatres have awakened to the fact that the first and second year's Goldwyn product is not too high class to be appreciated by their audiences, there has arisen a strong demand for the circulation of these pictures in communities not heretofore visited. To meet this demand, a sales promotion department has been formed as a part of the sales organization. The promotion department will devote its energies to the marketing of the early Goldwyn pictures and will prepare up-to-date advertising and exploitation campaigns to back them. New prints will be issued.

In some respects the first and second year Goldwyn pictures have a greater box office value today than at the time of their issue. An instance of this is found in Will Rogers' first picture, "Laughing Bill Hyde." At the time of its release Rogers was practically unknown to film fans, whereas today he is recognized as one of the most successful of screen comedians.

Although Mae Marsh has not been appearing on the screen lately, there can be no question about the loyalty of the following which she attracted during her career with Goldwyn in productions such as "Polly of The Circus," "Sunshine Alley," "The Cinderella Man" and "The Beloved Traitor," all numbered among the first year releases. Mabel Normand is represented by "Dodging a Million," "The Floor Below," "Joan of Plattsburg," "The Venus Model" and "Back to the Woods." Madge Kennedy is starred in "Baby Mine," "Nearly Married," "Our Little Wife," "The Danger Game," "The Fair Pretender," "The Service Star" and "Friend Husband."

Among special productions that will stand comparison with pictures being turned out today are Maxine Elliott in "Fighting Odds," Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn," Rex Beach's "The Auction Block" and Mary Garden in "The Splendid Sinner" and "Thais."

Stronger still are the second year's releases which include pictures starring Tom Moore, Pauline Frederick and Geraldine Farrar. There are three Rex Beach productions, "Too Fat to Fight," "The Brand" and "The Crimson Gardenia," half a dozen Mabel Normand pictures and the same number in which Madge Kennedy is starred.

Exhibitors who have been playing to capacity with recent Mabel Normand productions, such as "Jinx" and "Pinto," will recognize the value of the comedienne's films, among them, "Sis Hopkins," "The Pest," "When Doctors Disagree" and "Upstairs." Then the second year releases include some of the most powerful of the Geraldine Farrar pictures, "The Turn of the Wheel," "The Hell Cat," "Shadows" and "The Stronger Vow."

Saturday Openings for Week Stands Will Become Popular Is Belief of Marshall Neilan

SATURDAY openings for the exhibitors running pictures in week-stand localities will become popular among exhibitors, according to Marshall Neilan, who has discussed the matter with some of the most prominent exhibitors. Such exhibitors as the Saenger Amusement Company in the South and Jensen-Von Herberg organization on the West Coast have adopted the policy of opening their shows on Saturday with notable financial results.

"I do not wish to be quoted on anything that would indicate that I am telling exhibitors how to run their business," said Mr. Neilan. "I am a producer and do not pretend to be able to give advice in connection with the exhibiting branch of the business.

"At the same time, I have often wondered why the policy of opening week-stand motion picture shows on Sunday has remained such a universal practice throughout the country. In discussing this matter with a number of prominent exhibitors I am convinced that the time is not far distant when the Sunday opening will cease to be such a fixed policy, especially in the larger cities."

In discussing the matter of Saturday openings, William A. Gueringer, assistant general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, said: "We have found it a good stroke of business to open our week-stand houses on Saturday. There is no doubt that in many cases, a Saturday opening, similar to ours, would be impossible. At the same time, there is likewise no doubt that many Sunday openings are the result of a practice which has become universal among American exhibitors. There is no question in my mind that sooner or later many exhibitors will experiment on the Saturday opening and find it results in bigger business for the week."

Consensus of Trade Press Reviews

Jenny Be Good
(Mary Miles Minter—Realart)

M. P. W.—The dramatic qualities of the picture are weak—condensing of the story interest would have added punch to the drama and livened up the interest generally.

N.—A pleasing picture with many good points.

T. R.—A narrative of a simple country maiden, told in sketchy fashion with no crescendos.

W.—Very episodic and poorly subtitled production.

The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes
(Elaine Hammerstein—Selznick)

M. P. W.—What it lacks in beautiful photography is made up by intense dramatic action and appealing sentiment.

N.—Ought to prove a good average program picture.

T. R. Fine dual character play.

W.—Good picture made from well handled dual role story.

Mrs. Temple's Telegram
(Bryant Washburn—Paramount-Artcraft)

M. P. W.—For good clean wholesome comedy you can't beat "Mrs. Temple's Telegram."

N.—Bryant Washburn is fairly successful in adapted farce.

T. R.—The picture is for laughing purposes only and is crammed with humorous situations and amusing titles.

W.—Good production and efforts of players get this over in good style,

E. H.—One of the best things Mr. Washburn has done in months and should equal if not surpass in popularity his famous "Skinner" series.

The Dancin' Fool
(Wallace Reid—Paramount-Artcraft)

M. P. W.—Serves its purpose to present a good-natured and manly-looking star dancing along a path of roses to delightful results the rest of us have to struggle for and almost never get.

N.—Some interesting moments in this frail Wallace Reid picture.

T. R.—Rich in bright comedy, clean sentiment and amusing farcical situations.

W.—Should get safely by with Wally's admirers.

E. H.—Exhibitors ought to "cash in" on The Dancin' Fool without any trouble.

Simple Souls

M. P. W.—Is a pleasant romance that will appeal of every one who has not tired of the happy ending and the honeymoon trail.

N.—Pleasing picture which should entertain. ?

T. R.—A delightful romance, delicately shaded with humor, is the essence of the picture.

W.—Unusually delightful picture; high class and distinctive.

E. H.—Differs radically from other recent productions in which Blanche Sweet has been starred and will be considered by many her best work.

The Fortune Teller
(Marjorie Rambeau—Robertson-Cole)

M. P. W.—Should prove a fine entertainment anywhere.

N.—Story of mother-love theme is nearly swamped with incident.

T. R.—Provides seven reels of excellent melodramatic entertainment and can be listed as a sterling program attraction.

W.—Unusual and generally well constructed.

The Family Honor
(King W. Vidor—First National)

M. P. W.—The production is a safe bet for the average theatre. Its appeal is wholesome.

N.—Conventional photoplay smacks of the theatre.

W.—Given a good presentation this will make profound impression.

The Deep Purple
(Miriam Cooper—Realart)

M. P. W.—Is well produced and has much general appeal.

N.—Fine adaptation of famous melodrama.

T. R.—In its stage form the play won instant success and the film version gives every promise of duplicating the hit made by the "legitimate" attraction.

W.—Fan audiences especially should like it.

The Devil's Claim
(Sessue Hayakawa—Haworth)

M. P. W.—Features Sessue Hayakawa and proves fairly entertaining.

N.—Sudden thrills and the mystic and supernatural element injected may carry the picture across.

T. R.—The love romance of Indora and the flirtatious writer is prettily developed and borders on tragedy, which, however, culminates in a "happy ending."

W.—Maintains interest fairly well.

E. H.—Though the plot is improbable it has been given a plausible turn and includes many dramatic incidents.

The Yellow Typhoon
(Anita Stewart—First National)

M. P. W.—A climactic melodrama, replete with intrigue and quick action.

N.—Anita Stewart's portrayal compensates for theatrical story.

T. R.—Should prove an excellent drawing card. It is straight melodrama of the purely sensational type.

W.—Fair entertainment.

E. H.—Contains an excellent double characterization by the star, some fine locations and sets finely photographed, a complex plot and considerable action.

Comments on Short Subjects

THIEVES' CLOTHES (Western), May 22.—A two-reel subject, written by Arthur Henry Gooden and directed by Mack V. Wright. Hoot Gibson has the role of a young ranchman who sets fire to his trousers with a cigarette. In the morning the hotel attendant furnishes him with a pair borrowed from a cattle rustler. A note in one of the pockets gets the hero into trouble, but he clears himself and wins the girl of his choice. This has a clever plot and contains humor as well as entertaining melodrama.

RANSOM (Western), May 15.—A two-reel subject, written by Harvey Gates and directed by Mack V. Wright. Hoot Gibson and Virginia Faire play the leads. The story is good in action and unfolds a typical western plot. Leonard Clapham heads what is known as the "Black Hound" band of desperadoes. They abduct a candidate for governor and demand a heavy ransom for him, but the hero and the girl lead a successful rescue party. There is the usual love story.

THE GINGHAM GIRL (Paramount).—A sprightly Mack Sennett creation, running well up to his high average for two-reel comics. Louise Fazenda is cast as a country girl who is sent to visit her Aunt Maggie in the city. She arrives, carrying a pet duck, and breaks into a fashionable reception. The duck takes a swim in the punch-bowl and there is a general shattering of the rules of etiquette, with laughable results. Aunt Maggie hates her niece until she learns that the girl has inherited a million dollars, when her hatred turns to love. This has a good comic swing and introduces just enough plot to hold the situations together nicely.

FATHER'S CLOSE SHAVE (Pathe).—A new two-rel comic, directed by Reggie Morris, featuring Johnny Ray. He plays the Irish character, Jiggs, made famous in the "Bringing Up Father" cartoons of George McManus. This subject, like its predecessor, shows great care in settings and characterization. The action swings along at a better comedy gait, and there are some strong humorous moments. The subject promises well for the series, although there is a little conscious posing at times. The Palm Beach scenes are decidedly attractive and these alone will do much to carry the number. Margaret Fitzroy is in the supporting cast.

MERELY A MAID (Rolin-Pathe).—A one-reel comic subject, featuring Beatrice La Plante, who plays the role of maid to a naughty society girl. The latter's lover takes a liking to the maid and a riot follows during a dance. After a free-for-all mixup among the guests, the maid flees, or rather is carried away, by her admirer in an automobile. This is conventional in plot, but will appeal to those who like knockabout situations and plenty of "jazzy" action.

MY SALOMY LIONS (Century), May 26.—A two-reel comic, directed by Fred C. Fishback. Billy Engel, Merta Sterling and others appear. Merta is cast as "Fatemma" in the harem scenes, a part well suited to her robust figure. This pictures the adventures of a tourist and his wife, who are made prisoners in Turkey. Loose lions furnish much of the entertainment, and a bed full of babies is another amusing feature. The subject as a whole measures well up to the average and has some new business that will appeal.

NOTHING BUT GIRLS (Fox).—A laughable Mutt and Jeff subject, in which Mutt goes to a girls' gymnasium to see his lady fair. Jeff, not to be outdonefi disguises himself as an old gentleman and follows. Some interesting mix-ups occur.

PRIVATE DETECTIVES (Fox).—Mutt and Jeff run strong in this animated subject. They attend the Brainless & Ruthless school of sleuths and learn some weird methods of detecting criminals. Mutt becomes so efficient that he receives a bribe of $5,000 to stay off a black hand case.

FRESH FROM THE CITY (Paramount-Sennett).—This is an amusing farce in which the daughter of a restaurant keeper is wooed by a city guy. The lifting of the mortgage and the introduction of a cabaret places the restaurant on a paying basis. Not satisfied with what he has got, the old man gets up a scheme to sell some land on the strength of an oil deposit and proceeds to pour kerosene into a pool. The trick is later turned on himself when the other party fakes a gusher, and the old man buys back at a price that ruins him. Some very funny side play has been injected into this comedy.

SHOULD DUMMIES WED? (Sunshine).—An entertaining slapstick comedy, containing a lot of funny by-play with dummies and a coat of mail, safe robbing, the wanton breaking of goods in the pawnbroker's shop and the final funny stunt in which the hero substitutes for a dummy and takes to the trail when he sees a procession of bathing girls.

Sidelights and Reflections

THE other night I occupied a seat in a Broadway theatre and witnessed a stage play that is now in the second year of its run. The theatre was filled with an audience that gave every indication of being thoroughly entertained by the performance. When first produced the piece was slated by practically every newspaper critic in New York. According to their verdict the sooner it was carted off to the storehouse the better for the public and the purse of the manager. But the public is in the habit of doing its own thinking. Having read the reviews over its coffee and rolls the next morning after the opening, and noted the name of the star and the unusual nature of the plot, it concluded to take a chance on the show, and it has kept on taking a chance, six nights and two matinees a week, straight through one season and well into another.

The critics were right when they accused the play of being a piece of tailor made fustian, in which the characters neither speak nor act like human beings. It is mostly bunk, with this saving qualification: it is entertaining bunk, made so by the cleverness of the men who put it together and the skill of the actors who put it over the footlights.

It is not difficult to account for the entertaining qualities in the play itself: The subject matter is without offense, there are many incidents that are intended to appeal to the finer feelings of an audience and there is a deal of comedy material scattered through the play. And there is no question about the way the audiences enjoy the performance. It was fashioned by two theatrical tailors, but they were journeymen who knew their business. Only men of the theatre who understood the particular portion of the public they were catering to and knew how to construct a play that would meet the taste of said portion could have turned the trick. Nothing has been left to chance; not one twist or turn of plot or dialogue is in the nature of an experiment. Just so long as the public continues to evince a healthful interest in this grade of theatrical merchandise, it will be offered for sale. A man buys the hat and the coat that suits his fancy, and he cannot see why he should not buy his entertainment in the same way. Neither do the successful producers of this class of entertainment know any good reason why they should not supply the demand.

It is common knowledge that the same conditions exist in the moving picture industry. Much of the adverse criticism that is aimed against the product of the screen comes no nearer to estimating correctly the taste of the public. In the campaign for better pictures that is steadily gaining headway it will be interesting to learn how much weight the advocates of nothing but the intellectual drama will exert in the matter. Pictures that receive either lukewarm praise or downright condemnation from all sorts of critics are continually and perversely piling up large returns. Are the men and women who willingly pay in their money at the box office when these pictures are shown, to be rebuked for not preferring pictures of a higher grade?

"No. 99"

Hodkinson Presents J. Warren Kerrigan in a Live Story of High Suspense.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

NO 99" shows clearly how intensely interesting one good situation can be made by using motion-picture methods instead of those of the novel, or the stage play, unadjusted to meet screen conditions. The Hodkinson product excites curiosity as to the outcome from the opening picture and holds it throughout nearly all of the swiftly flying scenes. There is only one line of action and no deviation from it. All that is of importance occurs in one place, and the time occupied is that of a week's end at a country house. Live stuff! The situation, that of the convict and the lady, has been used before, but this time it is given zip by fine constructive methods, every moment one of suspense until the leading characters begin to smile toward the end of a serious complication and belittle it by doing so. But for that smirking reassurance toward the conclusion, "No. 99" would be a corker straight through. As it is, interest is held so tight for more than four reels that they pass with the seeming rapidity of two.

J. Warren Kerrigan when in action, not while gazing soulfully at the camera, is a very capable actor of the manly type. His work is generally good, but the fine grouping of other splendid types, especially Fritzi Brunette as the lady and Emmett King, R. D. McLean and Charles Arling, is largely responsible for tense story interest. The entire company works as a harmonious unit, to the credit of their intelligence and that of the directing spirit. With clean and clear workmanship in all departments, the picture can be safely valued as a fine entertainment.

The Story.

"Convict 99," Arthur Penryn, escapes from prison and flees in a stolen auto during a winter night until pursuit becomes close. He drives into the snow-covered grounds of a country place and accidentally into a lake, the car sinking out of sight through the ice. He swims ashore and finds his way into the house where a week-end party is gathered. Into the chamber of Cynthia Vivian he steals, a curtain wrapped about his convict suit and, when discovered by the young lady, pleads for a chance to go free and demonstrate his innocence of the crime for which he was unjustly convicted.

Her sympathies once alive, she assists him with an absent brother's clothes until he appears among the guests as young Valentine, an eccentric chum of her brother's. Among the guests he finds the man who had him framed and discovers a clue leading straight to freedom. But the guests are thrown into a state of excitement by the appearance of prison guards, who have traced the car to the Vivian house. Penryn faces them boldly and escapes suspicion for the moment, only to be recognized by one of the guests later on.

He has hardly found his way out of one peril before another threatens. The unexpected appearance of the man he is impersonating makes it necessary for Penryn to kidnap the intoxicated youth and lock him up in the garage, where he is put to bed with the convict's suit at his side. Then comes Cynthia's brother, only to be steered away. Together, Penryn and Cynthia work in harmony until evidence is secured against a real criminal, when they discover that their romantic adventures have brought about a tender feeling whose end will be one of lasting happiness for both.

"Forbidden Trails"

New Five-Reel Fox Release Features Buck Jones In Exciting Western Melodrama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A CONSISTENT Western story of good dramatic structure, punctuated at intervals by big melodramatic incidents, is found in this new Fox release, "Forbidden Trails," which features Buck Jones. The offering if anything gives a better idea of Buck's readiness in the saddle or on foot than did "The Last Straw," in which he previously appeared. He is an acquisition to the band of Western heroes to be reckoned with.

A train robbery, always an interesting event when well pictured, occurs early in this story. It is staged in a novel way and with more convincing realism than usual. The band of train robbers has stationed one man to each passenger coach less than a super-brute, ruthless to those in his power, and his tragic end is welcomed with relief. The experience of a woman and a real man cast accidentally into his power teaches her the folly of her longing for the attentions of a cave man.

Noah Beery, as "The Sea Wolf," is superb in his beastial exhibitions of physical power as a dominating force. Well matched are James Gordon as "Death" Larsen, Raymond Hatton as Mugridge, and all the other male characters aboard the "Hell Ship." Tom Forman and Mabel Julienne Scott act their parts with dignity and intelligence, but the greatest impress of the play lies in scenic effects and direction of the highest order. It is an impressive offering and, as presented at the Rivoli, it will hold almost any audience spellbound to the end.

The Story.

"The Sea Wolf" is sailing for a sealing cruise with a motly crew when he picks up young Van Weyden and his fiance, Maud Brewster, from the sea. They implore him to send them ashore, but he is short-handed and impressed with the girl. He puts Van at work as a cabin boy under a degenerate cook, and the young fellow is degraded in every way before a sweetheart who has professed an admiration for men of great physical strength. She gets an example of it in "The Sea Wolf." In single encounters he easily disposes of an antagonist, and that means nearly every member of his brutalized crew. When they all mutiny and attempt to kill him. He emerges from the mass of would-be murderers, bloody and triumphant, master of the situation by physical strength and courage alone.

Even when thrown overboard, "The Sea Wolf" manages to catch the log and return, but he loses his mate and Van is promoted as about the only man he can trust. Van uses his new position to escape with Maud and one sailor in a small boat well provisioned.

After storm, privations and the tragic loss of the member of the crew who accompanied them, the young people land on an island and manage to exist until a wreck drifts in. It is that of the "Hell Ship," the Sea Wolf aboard and blind. All alone he has managed to survive, and he is to be dreaded in spite of his affliction. When death at last claims him, he makes one more vindictive effort, then yields. The young people sail on the wreck until they are picked up by a cruiser, the girl thoroughly cured of her false ideal, happy to be with a real man, who can be counted on for her security and happiness.

"The Great Shadow"

Tyrone Power in a Labor Strike Story Released by Republic.

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney.

THE GREAT SHADOW" is Bolshevism. This picture is one showing the conflict of capital and labor since the war ended, as it has been fostered secretly by alien Bolshevists.

There is a great lack of heart interest. The love affair between a secret service man and the daughter of a shipyard owner is but a minor incident. As a solution of labor troubles, a plan for an armistice between capital and labor for one year is offered.

The picture is excellent as propaganda against industrial unrest and the forces of Bolshevism. It will please audiences made up of those who depend for their bread and butter on work. It lacks something in entertainment value, but the melodramatic climaxes and spectacular scenes will make up for this.

The cast is high calibre. Tyrone Power is starred. He is the honest labor leader, always looking out for the good of his men. Donald Hall is the capitalist who is in sympathy with the reasonable demands of his men, but who is opposed by other members of the company. Dorothy Bernard is his daughter. All of the players handle themselves in a way that is conspicuous.

Cast.

Directed by Harry Knowles.
Length about 5,800 feet.

The Story.

A great shipbuilding plant is striving to ward off anarchistic propaganda, which is being forced into the union by Klimoff, leader of a band of Russian Reds. Jim McDonald, foreman, is also the head of the union. The Reds want to plunge the country into a general strike.

Contrasted with the happiness in the home of McDonald, who is a widower with a little daughter, is the gathering of the Bolshevists, planning to wreck the government and society, by poisoning the mind of organized labor. The steady growth of their propaganda sweeps away the protests of McDonald and the strike is called. Its results are immediately apparent. McDonald's daughter is knocked down and killed by a team of runaway horses, abandoned by their striking driver. Incendiarism and sabotage follow.

The daughter of the shipbuilder, Alexander is kidnapped by the Red plotters, but is rescued by her sweetheart, Bob Sherwood, a secret service agent, who helps to capture the agitators. One of the Reds calls a meeting of the strikers, seizes the American flag and threatens to trample it. McDonald knocks him down, and sways the meeting away from the Red. Finally public spirit is so wrought up that an armistice between capital and labor providing no strikes for twelve months is arranged. The strikers see they have been tools of the Bolshevists and peace again reigns.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines: He Was a Shadow Chaser. A Great Shadow Hung Over His Country and He Chased It Away.

Ever Hear of a Shadow Chaser. There Are a lot of Them in Your Town.

He Shadowed the Great Shadow and Helped to Remove It From the Nation.

What Will Eliminate Labor Troubles. "The Great Shadow" Provides the Answer.

Exploitation Angles: There are two ways to exploit this picture and make a success of it. One is to make a mystery of it. Talk about "The Great Shadow," but let them guess what it is. Say as much as you can about the story, but don't give it away. They will find out when they see it that "The Great Shadow" is a topic on everybody's mind.

The other and better way is to enlist the cooperation of labor union leaders. The picture surely will appeal to them as it presents to the public the inside facts about what these leaders have to contend with every day—the silent forces of Bolshevism that are creating unrest in the ranks of the unions.

"The Path She Chose"

Anne Cornwall Is Especially Attractive in Story of Girl's Successful Fight on the Straight Path.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company's adaptation of "The Path She Chose," a story by Ida M. Tarbell, is not only entertaining in character, but it is also morally correct. It is well made and suited to any audience, child or adult. The star, Anne Cornwall, has an intelligent conception of the part she plays and is exceptionally well cast in the role of a young woman reared in a home of unsound principles who struck out for herself, with faith in her own ability to make her way in a respectable manner among respectable people. There is a wealth of human interest in the picture and its dramatic situations are well taken care of. There is a pleasing lack of the unclean and a decided tendency toward the acclaim of wholesome sentiments and right living. The picture has also its comedy moments and is an all around good box office attraction.

The Story.

The story of "The Pathe She Chose" has for its heroine a young girl whose early life has been associated with criminals. One day when her sister, also young and pretty, decides to leave home to tread the primrose path, she resolves to go the other road. Stealing away, she walks all day, and finally seeks lodging in a respectable boarding house. After several days she lands a job and through her sincerity and efficiency becomes manager of her department.

When her youthful employer has fallen in love with her, and the romance is at its most rapid stage of development, her brother, a ne'er-do-well, discovers her through her sister, who she has found doing duty among the scrubwomen, and of whom she has assumed the guardianship. The lies which he tells her employer almost are a success, when the brother reveals his real personality as they are about to leave the building. He is knocked down and soundly thrashed by his sister's fiance, and once again the girl finds herself on steady ground on the path of right living which she chose.

"A Lady in Love"

Paramount Presents Ethel Clayton in a Pleasing Light Comedy by Harriet Ford and Caroline Duer.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A LADY IN LOVE" is a lady with whom love is a modern obsession. She is so powerfully influenced by it that the man does not count particularly. The main thing is to get a man for the sake of love. On this account she takes the first supposedly available one that comes along and gets herself into all sorts of difficulties through not looking up his standing in some matrimonial Bradstreet or Dun. When the right one comes along she is on pins and needles to hold him, while keeping him at arm's length and extricating herself from entanglements with the first one. Such is the theme, and it is not only thoroughly feminine, but as thoroughly enjoyable. It is a woman's play destined to please women and intelligent men. The cave man of masculine bluff and mush might not like it because the hero is simply a plain common-sense fellow who does not attempt to carry the lady off her feet.

Ethel Clayton is delightful as the lady in love. This is especially true in scenes where she keeps the man she wants perpetually guessing, attracting skilfully, with due regard for the danger of arousing the brute. She permits us to observe the practical workings of an intelligent girl's campaign for a husband. She uses all the little "ways" employed by women to entrap and make fools of the men, whether for marriage or not. She is admirably supported by a live cast. The scenario by Alice Eyton and direction by Walter Edwards are without flaw. Taken altogether, "A Lady in Love," as presented at the Rialto, is a bang-up light comedy, suited to any audience not absolutely primitive.

The Story.

"A Lady in Love" is Barbara when she elopes from a convent with Burton Sedgewick, degenerate brother of her guardian. She discovers before the marriage is consummated that he has a wife and little child. He disappears. She takes the wife and child to her guardian and explains things. Even if the first marriage was of doubtful legality, the child makes it of greater importance. Guardian George Sedgwick advises immediate divorce proceedings. Barbara carelessly allows matters to stand until she meets Brent, the man she wants, when he enters her room in search of a burglar. She conceals from him during the courtship that she is in a tangled situation and goes on a second visit to her guardian, this time insisting on a divorce. He sends for his lawyer, who turns out to be Brent. From that moment Barbara is on tenterhooks to keep Brent enslaved and at a distance until she can get rid of her supposed husband.

The riddle is solved through a foolish escapade of the guardian's wife. The latter goes to keep an appointment with a scoundrel in his apartment, but Barbara is before here to save the situation, and does so. At the apartment, somewhat intoxicated, is Burton, the man she married. Through his carelessness she gets possession of evidence showing that his marriage with the mother of his child is legal. Brent has followed her without loss of faith. Indeed, he has suspected the complication and aids in solving it at the end. Barbara is still a lady in love, but this time it is with a man worth while, and, at last, she is free to make that love endure in marriage.

"Empty Arms"

Gail Kane Plays Role of Woman Who Tried to Avoid Duties of Motherhood in Photoplay Libraries, Inc., Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A SUCCESSFUL selling campaign of the motherhood film, "Empty Arms," which is being handled by the Photoplay Libraries, Inc., has been waged for the past few months. From the excellent results obtained by the salesmen of the film, it is judged that it is one of the most satisfactory of the state rights pictures.

Gail Kane plays the feminine lead and does excellent work in a difficult role. The production is of a sensational nature and will appeal to a certain class of audience. The picture is cleverly constructed and is played by a competent cast, all of whom are well able to portray the characters allotted to them.

Cast.

Diane Summers.....Gail Kane
Bruce Gordon.....Thurston Hall
Philip Darnton.....J. Herbert Frank
Frances Kingsley.....Irene Blackwell
Randolph Hayes.....Warren Chandler
Gregory Summers.....Howard Truesdell
Story by Willard King Bradley.
Direction by Frank Reicher.
A Park-Whiteside Production.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

The story of "Empty Arms" has for its principal feminine character Diane Summers, who hesitates to give her promise of marriage to her lover, Bruce Gordon, because she is unwilling to become a mother. The reading of literature on the subject of motherhood, and the fact that her mother and a dear friend have both died under such circumstances, has imbedded a fear in her mind which she is unable to overcome. Finally, after much persuasion on the part of her lover, she agrees to marry him on a basis of friendship, the carrying out of which agreement is the cause of unhappiness.

After several months Gordon goes to his ranch in the West, and while he is away his wife is called to visit a friend who has lived with and posed as the wife of Philip Darnton, a libertine. This woman has become a mother and has been cast off by Darnton. Later a visit to a mysterious room on the upper floor of her home by Diane, the key of which has been given her by her husband on his departure, reveals a fully equipped nursery, which has been prepared by Gordon previous to their marriage. Under the influence of what she has seen, both in the humble home of the happy though unprotected mother and in the empty nursery in her own home, she starts on a journey to her husband's ranch.

The train on which she is riding is wrecked and she is taken to the home of Philip Darnton, where the appearance of her husband on the scene saves her from assault by Darnton. The scene then shifts three or four years hence to a scene in the nursery where two children are being cared for by Diane.

"The Desert Scorpion"

Empire State Film Story of Cattlemen and Sheepherders in Conflict, Featuring Edmund F. Cobb.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Desert Scorpion" is the story of a man who is driven by injustice to become a holdup expert of the plains. In a general way it is along the familiar lines of the old cowboy stories of the dime-novel type which appeared during the days of one-reel productions. There is much riding of horsemen over dusty roads, a cattle stampede, the falsely accused hero, some rescues and some burning shacks. The star is not remarkable, and his support inadequate. There is little psychology, the characters being moved about amid settings all-to-obviously put up with small regard for the illusion of reality. The story itself is not a bad one—the handling and typing is largely at fault. Only a fair state-right proposition.

Cast.

The Sheepherder.....Edmund F. Cobb
The Cattle King.....Claire Hatton
The Daughter.....Vida Johnson
The Sheriff.....Otis Thayer
Director, Otis Thayer.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

The Sheepherder has no intention of becoming a "Desert Scorpion" when he and his followers settle on land claimed by the cattlemen. They are warned to move on and, failing to do so, a feud is started which results in the ruthless burning of the sheepherder's home. There is an honest sheriff, and he knows all this is the work of the cattlemen, but he is prejudiced against the sheepherder, who is falsely accused of ruining the sheriff's daughter. The sheepherder has been in love with the cattle king's daughter, but, when she turns against him and decides to marry a villainous "Easterner," the sheepherder decides to set his face against law and order and against cattlemen in particular. He robs the cattle king's bank of eighteen thousand dollars to reimburse the sheepherders for their losses.

When the cattle king's daughter is about to wed the villainous easterner, the sheepherder holds up the express wagon carrying her bridal bouquet. This he takes to the sheriff's daughter, who has sought refuge in his cabin. The unfortunate girl is about to become a mother. The sheepherder rides to where the wedding of the cattle king's daughter is about to take place and holds up the assembled guests. He steals away the bride and carries her off to nurse the sick girl. They are traced, and there and then all is revealed.

It is the villainous easterner who ruined the girl. The sheepherder is cleared, even of robbing the bank—it was just repayment for homes burned and property restored. The cattle king's daughter now turns to the sheepherder, and the minister is recalled to perform a service between them.

The Story.

In the beginning of the story a young man of today, who has made up his mind to marry an actress, comes to ask the consent of his uncle, who is the Bishop of New York. When the old man endeavors to dissuade him from his purpose, the youth accuses him of having forgotten what it is to be young and eagerly in love. Thereupon the Bishop leans back in his armchair by the fire and tells the story of his own love, over forty years before for the famous opera singer, Cavallini. At the conclusion of this recital of the old romance, the young man insists that he is more than ever determined to marry the woman he has chosen; and the Bishop awakened to sympathy by his own pathetic recollection, finally consents and gives the youth his blessings.

It is at a soiree in the lower Fifth avenue mansion of a wealthy merchant that the young rector first lays eyes upon La Cavallini. He falls in love with her at once and she rallies him for his guilelessness; but during the course of a very short period that follows she learns to love this innocent young man, with a love that she had never felt before. Therefore when he asks her to marry him, she cannot help confessing to him that her past life has been unchaste. He believes so deeply in her inherent purity that he is willing to forgive the errors of youth; and he is still urging her eagerly to be his wife when he discovers that she has recently been the mistress of the wealthy merchant. The merchant has been his best friend and this blow breaks the heart of the young rector. Then, late at night, he goes to her apartment with the purpose of saving her soul.

But, although he knows it not, her soul has already risen high above his reach, on the wings of the great love that he has taught her. He exhorts her to repent and then, amazed by the terrible and thrilling nearness of her, he breaks down and takes her into his arms. He implores her to surrender herself to his passion, but she loves him like an angel mothering a child, and sends him away from her forever.

There is a cast of favorites, who should be mentioned in your advertising, and an effort should be made to reach all who have seen the stage play. Don't try circus methods. "TheCourage of MargeO'Doone"

Albert E. Smith Presents Vitagraph Production Telling Powerful Northwest Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A BEAUTIFUL story, located in the snow-clad regions of the great Northwest, which piles one real thrill upon another, is found in "The Courage of Marge O'Doone." The subject is a screen adaptation of a story by James Oliver Curwood and has been directed in forcible style by David Smith. It makes on the whole a worthy companion to "The River's End," a story by the same author.

The snow settings give a fine atmosphere to the narrative and quickly carry the spectator out of his everyday surroundings. Dog teams and sledges are in evidence all through the piece. One of the effective points of the production is the manner in which it makes use of animals, large and small, as a consistent feature of the plot, with the inevitable appeal to the spectator. The heroine's full-grown, pet bear is something of a novelty, and there is altogether a genuine wildness about the events occurring in the final reels. A weird and uncanny effect has been achieved, without in any sense being depressing. Instead, the action stirs the blood mightily at certain big melodramatic moments. The bear fight is a strong feature.

Pauline Starke does something quite unusual in her portrayal of Marge, conveying a full sense of her mountain shyness, underlying which is a native fierceness and a complete ability to look out for herself. David Raine, as portrayed by Niles Welch, is a sympathetic and likable hero. The characters of Michael O'Doone and his wife are in excellent hands and there are two most hateable villains.

As a whole "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is an outdoor subject of first rank, carrying an appealing story and abundantly supplied with suspenseful melodramatic moments.

Cast.

Story by James Oliver Curwood.

Length, 6,500 Feet.

The Story.

Michael O'Doone and his wife and daughter, Marge, live in a cabin in the great Northwest. One day, when the earth is clothed in a heavy fall of snow, Michael is called to the home of a friendly Indian to help care for a sick member of the tribe. On the trip Michael meets with a bad slide down the side of a cliff and is laid up for some time thereafter.

During the absence of her husband Mrs. O'Doone and her infant daughter are carried away by Buck Tavish, a trapper who has long admired Michael's wife. Mrs. O'Doone has temporarily lost her reason in her anxiety over her husband's prolonged absence. She recovers her mental forces after reaching Tavish's cabin and flees in search of Michael, leaving the child behind. All three become separated for a long period of years.

The hero, David Raine, finds a photograph of a girl left on the train by a woman passenger. He is on his way into the Northwest. He takes the photograph and determines to find the girl, following an inscription on the back giving certain instructions. She is some 1,500 miles further north. He journeys part way in company with a man known as Father Roland, an individual who is not a priest, but who spends his days in helping others, owing to some great suffering of his own.

David eventually finds the girl, whose name is Marge O'Doone. He brings her back to Father Roland's cabin, after a series of extraordinary adventures. Father Roland turns out to be Michael O'Doone, the girl's father, and to complete the happy reunion the mother appears at the cabin after her long search.

Supplementing the press book stunts, have cards printed on one side "Sakewawin," using bold type. On the other give the definition and an advertisement for the play. Used ten days in advance, these will work very effectively.

"The Flapper"

Selznick Presents Olive Thomas in a Bright Comedy of Romantic Girlhood.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

LIGHT as a snowflake in theme and treatment, "The Flapper" is exceptionally bright in character-revealing subtitles which will bring quick laughter among spectators blessed with the saving grace of our people a sense of humor. "The Flapper" is no old, creaking vehicle for a star to ride in—it is a genuine screen comedy able to stand on its own merits. It humor is delicately of the kind that establishes our common humanity, revealing those little human weaknesses we sympa-thetically recognize as having been our own once upon a time.

Able direction adds considerably to the general charm, though there is apparently too much use of unnecessary scenes, but they contribute satisfactorily to the atmosphere of reality and counterbalance some extravagance of action. Miss Thomas gives a highly intelligent interpretation of her role as a "flapper," a youngster trying to appear mature and experienced. In full appreciation of its meaning, she plays the part as if she loved it. Her enthusiasm and pleasing personality are big factors. Elaborate ensembles handsomely staged complete the sum of values, until "The Flapper" must be ranked very high as an amusing entertainment.

Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

"The Flapper" is Ginger King, small-town girl of sixteen, who detests its narrow environment and rebels against the restrictions of a fashionable school. She longs for romantic adventure and gets it on a runaway sleigh-ride with a boy she kows at a neighboring military school. His horse bolts and she is tossed into a snowdrift. She is picked up later by interesting Richard Channing. To impress him that she is no mere chit, she makes a date to meet him at a country club dance. She keeps it in an improvised toilet and by hiring a man to draw her there on a sled. She is discovered and brought back ignominiously, after an appetizing taste of "life."

There is no holding Ginger after this experience. During her vacation, on her way home, she encounters two crooks who have cleaned boarding school and other places of jewelry and fine raiment. They recognize Ginger in a moment of peril and decide to pass the stolen goods over to her for safekeeping until they can make a clean getaway, arranging to recover the stolen property later on.

Once in possession of the mysterious suitcases containing the loot, Ginger's curiosity is too much for her. She opens them and finds a great treasure, besides a package of letters written by the male crook to the girl. She has an idea. She addresses the letters to herself to give an impression. This she follows up by appearing in the home town rigged as a vamp, openly declaring that she is no longer an innocent girl, but a woman with a dark past. Only when her pretense is taken seriously and the thieves caught does she come to her senses and once more return to her natural character, a sweet little ingenue, now completely cured of her romanticism.

"The Bottom of the World"

Sir Ernest Shackleton's Wonderful Antarctic Picture Is Now Released in Two Parts by Robertson-Cole.

By Edward Weitzel.

ONE of the most marvelous dramas ever shown on the screen is the Sir Ernest Shackleton travel picture, "The Bottom of the World." The search of the fearless explorer for the South Pole reveals a conflict between the strength and endurance of man and the forces of nature that will appeal to the imagination of every kind of audience. But the most dramatic figure of all is the staunch ship in which the explorers set out for the Antarctic Sea. You see her sail proudly out of the harbor, saluted by all the craft at anchor and looking fit to defy any fate. The views among the ice fields are all of astounding beauty, and the life of the explorers after the ship is stopped by the ice pack is full of interest.

The first note of alarm is sounded when the boat's rudder is damaged by the pressure of the ice, and the drama begins to gather force when the crew abandons the ship. The efforts of the commander and his men to save their vessel is watched with deep interest, but the sympathy of the beholder is drawn in a greater degree to the doomed craft, when it is seen that there is no saving her from the grasp of her relentless enemy. Slowly but surely an unseen power drags her down until, crushed and beaten, her masts and upper rigging already a wreck, she disappears beneath the ice field. The tragedy of the "Endurance" is a marvelous spectacle.

The struggle for existence made by the crew over the ice and the courageous trip of 800 miles in an open boat undertaken by Shackleton and a few of his men to the nearest settlement for help, while the rest of the sailors set up tents on the ice field, is another of the thrilling incidents. This thrill is repeated when the rescued men sail safely into the whaling station that marks the farthest south human habitation on the globe. The picture is in two parts.

One of the Traveler's Aid series shows the work of the "Big Sister" division, who look out for inexperienced girls entering the city from the outside.

The third subject points to the engineering skill of Arthur Powell Davis, who is now director-in-chief of the United States Reclamation Service and president of the American Society of Civil Engineers. In his study he is seen planning one of the greatest engineering feats ever attempted, that of subjugating the Snake River of Idaho and the Colorado River. "Frivolous Wives" Society Shams Treated in Familiar Style in Picture Presented by Fidelity Company.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

THERE is not enough that is essentially new or vital in the story of "Frivolous Wives" or in its treatment, to classify the picture as extraordinary. The plot is a purely conventional one, unrelieved by original touches. But if for no other reason than because of its title the production will attract attention. Such an expose of human insincerity and superficiality is always popular screen entertainment with some fans, but which is brought about to suit the selfish interests of outsiders, is the culmination of a series of disconnected incidents.

The subject is treated in a dilatory and sometimes ambiguous style, and the whole suffers from incompetent directing. Attractive settings have been selected, and among the out-of-door scenes, one on the beach is particularly pleasing.

The cast is comprised of some of the less-known players who, for the most part, accomplish good results with mediocre roles. Vera Sisson and Kathleen Kirkham, as contrasting feminine types, are effective. Rodolpho di Valentini's amateurishness detracts somewhat from his performance as the scheming count.

The Story.

Mrs. John MacMillan, unknown to her husband and step-daughter, Mary, is engaged in an absorbing flirtation with a nobleman, several years her junior, Count Roberto di San Fraccini. While Mary and her sweetheart Douglas, an ambitious young engineer, are happily whiling away the time until Douglas can have secured enough to warrant them marrying, Mrs. Macmillan and the Count contrive a selfish scheme.

The older woman has overheard an unknown man threaten her husband with exposure for his connection with a murder, unless he agrees to pay his blackmailer a huge sum of money. She lets the Count in on the secret and the Count decides to get the money for himself. The most simple way they decide is for him to make love to Mary, marry her, and secure a large dowry.

He begins paying Mary marked attentions, but she does not love him. He finally proposes, and explains that she will save her father from life imprisonment if she will consent to the marriage. She forces herself to make the sacrifice for her father's sake. Douglas is broken-hearted. Mary's and Roberto's relationship is that of marriage in name only, as neither of them is in love. Roberto continues his affair with Mrs. Macmillan, and during a motor ride their car meets with an accident, and she is killed. Roberto leaves hurriedly as he is afraid of consequences. Through Douglas' untiring efforts, Mary's father's name has been cleared of guilt and her marriage with Roberto is annulled by the church.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

The Prizes

FROM the few answers to the prize question now in hand, we are inclined to think a misapprehension exists as to just what is wanted. For the benefit of all and sundry we will reprint the questions.

From the various optical, electrical and mechanical standpoints, what improvements do you consider as most essential for the benefit of motion picture projection? Explain, in detail, exactly what benefit would result from the adoption of the idea you present.

What improvement in projection apparatus and projection methods do you believe will be accomplished during the next five years.

There, those are the questions, for the best answers to which we are offering half a thousand dollars, in three cash prizes of $350 first, $100 second and $50 third.

The board of award will be John Auerbach, the President of the American Projection Society or some other one designated by that body, and the editor. The time limit has been set at noon, June first, but this will possibly be somewhat extended, as it has been suggested that the time is too short. If an extension is decided upon due notice will be given.

For particulars in greater detail see page 270, April 10 issue.

Proposed New York Law

Due to the untiring efforts of brother Edgar Stewart, New York City, backed by a committee from Local 306, the following bill was introduced in the last legislature, though too late we believe, for action at that session.

We print the bill in full, from Assembly Bulletin No. 1865, to the end that New York men may know what is planned, and make constructive comment thereon if they so desire. Any proposals for change, addition or subtraction from the bill, either by unions or individuals, should be forwarded to the editor, be placed in the hands of brother Stewart.

The bill, as we understand it, applies only to cities of the first class.

The Bill.

AN ACT

To amend the general city law, in relation to licenses to operate moving picture apparatus.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Section eighteen of chapter twenty-six of the laws of nineteen hundred and nine, entitled "An act in relation to cities, constituting chapter twenty-one of the consolidated laws," as added by chapter two hundred and fifty-two of the laws of nineteen hundred and eleven, and amended by chapter one hundred and eighty-four of the laws of nineteen hundred and sixteen, is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 18. License to operate moving picture projection apparatus. It shall not be lawful for any person or persons, save as excepted in section eighteen-a of this article, to operate any moving picture projection apparatus and its connections involving the use of a combustible film in or upon the premises of any public or private building or place of public assemblage, in a city of the first-class unless such person or persons so operating such apparatus is duly licensed as hereinafter provided. Any person desiring to act as [such operator] a motion picture projectionist shall make application for a license to so act to the mayor or licensing authority designated by the mayor, unless the charter of said city so designates, which officer shall furnish to each applicant blank forms of application which the applicant shall fill out. Such officer shall appoint a board of examiners, of not less than three examiners to determine the fitness of applicants for license. The board shall consist of one city employee, one moving picture projectionist who has had not less than five years' experience as such moving picture projectionist and one employer of moving picture projectionists. The board of examiners shall certify to the licensing authority the result of the examination of each applicant for license. The moving picture projectionist and the employer of moving picture projectionists members of the board of examiners shall serve without compensation. Such officer shall in conjunction with the board of examiners as herein provided make rules and regulations governing the examination of applicants and the issuance of licenses and certificates. [A license shall not be granted to an applicant unless he shall have served as an apprentice under a licensed operator, for a period of not less than six months prior to the date of the application; the application must be made in writing, and contain a verified statement to that effect; it must be accompanied by the affidavit of the licensed operator to the same effect; before entering upon the period of apprenticeship the applicant must register his name and address with the officer issuing such license]. Provided that each applicant for a license shall be examined by the board of examiners as herein provided as to his practical knowledge of moving picture projection apparatus; the electrical connections thereof; also the optical system and the various safety and fire prevention devices of a moving picture projecting apparatus. Each applicant shall give a practical demonstration of his ability to project moving pictures, and if found competent as to his ability to operate moving picture projection apparatus and its connections shall receive within six days a license as herein provided. Such license may be revoked or suspended at any time by the officer issuing the same. Every license shall continue in force for one year from the date of issue unless sooner revoked or suspended. Every license, unless revoked or suspended as herein provided, may at the end of one year from the date of issue thereof be renewed by the officer issuing it in his discretion upon application and with or without further examination as he may direct. Every application for renewal of license must be made within the thirty days previous to the expiration of such license. With every license granted there shall be issued to every person obtaining such license a certificate, certifying that the person named therein is duly authorized to operate moving picture projection appratus and its connections. Such certificate shall be displayed in a conspicuous place in the room where the person to whom it is issued operates moving picture projection apparatus and its connections. No person shall be eligible to procure a license unless he shall be of full age. Each application for a license must be accompanied by the affidavit of a licensed moving picture projectionist to the effect that the applicant has served as an assistant to such licensed moving picture projectionist for a period of not less than six months prior to the date of the application, except any person who has had full charge of moving picture projection apparatus and its connections may present his own affidavit stating that he has not less than six months' experience as a moving picture projectionist. The licensing authority may require that the affidavit be corroborated. Any person twenty-one years of age or more desiring to act as an assistant to the holder of a license shall register his name, age, address and place of employment as such assistant on a form furnished for the purpose by the licensing authority; the said licensing authority may issue a permit allowing such a person to assist a licensed moving picture projectionist in a booth or inclosure; but such assistant shall not himself operate a moving picture projection apparatus and its connections, except under the personal supervision of the holder of a license. The permit shall be for the term of one year from the date of issue thereof, unless sooner revoked or suspended, but may be renewed by the licensing authority in his discretion. It is further provided that no license shall be granted to an applicant unless he shall have served as an assistant to the holder of a license for not less than six months, or instead thereof shall have had not less than six months' experience as a moving picture projectionist prior to the date of application for license. Any person offending against the provisions of this section, as well as any person who employs or permits a person not licensed as herein provided to operate moving picture projection apparatus and its connections, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding the sum of one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding three months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

Assembly, No. 1865.

The moving picture machine operator, or projectionist, of today is the manager of tomorrow's moving picture theatre. Richardson's Department in Moving Picture World is advising the projectionist how to become the best moving picture showman.

Notice to All.

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Don't "guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

Address Moving Picture World, either 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City; Garrick Building, Chicago, Ill., or Wright & Callender Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

Duluth Local a Live Wire

Some weeks ago we made note of the fact that Duluth local union 509 was taking on a course of study, and we started running a series of questions on optics, for the benefit of their class in projection optics and for the benefit of such others as care to avail themselves of the opportunity for accumulating unto themselves additional knowledge on that highly important branch of projection lore. Brother Kitzman, chairman of the committee in charge of the optical class of the Duluth local now writes:

Let me say, brother Richardson, that our men appreciate your help; also we are well pleased to know that other locals will be able to take up the study at the same time. Inclosed find nine dollars, for which send six lens charts and two copies of Motion Picture Optics. Our men have all started in the right way by getting lens charts, a handbook, etc.

I think brother Kitzman is in error as to the title of the books required. What he wants is probably "Optic Projection," an excellent work by Simon Henry and Henry Phelps Gage.

Yes, the Duluth men have started right. It is an astounding thing that there are still a large number of projectionists who do not own one single thing in the way of books bearing on their profession, or even so much as a lens chart.

They read nothing, study nothing and make no effort to advance in knowledge, though they are right there when there is a chance for more money. They want the coin all right, but make no effort to give efficient service in return for it.

Daytona, Florida

J. A. Rehkopf, projectionist New Daytona Theatre, Daytona, Florida, sends the following letter, which is also signed by W. K. Perkins, projectionist, Lyric Theatre, and Harold M. Pellet, projectionist, Chrystal Theatre, Daytona:

Friend Richardson: Met you once in the long ago. It was in the office of the American Film Service, Chicago, when that concern was quartered in the American Trust Building of that city.

Some considerable time ago, wasn't it?

This letter is to let you know that we of this little Florida city are interested in your efforts to improve projection nationally; also I wanted to say hello.

Things have changed some in the projection field since 1908, haven't they, but we still have the same trouble with incompetent men in charge of projection. I believe the unions were the cause of the keeping of incompetents in the business in the beginning. That was why I cut loose from the Chicago local some years ago. It admitted any old "crank twister," if he had the price, though I guess that has been stopped of late years.

Record Breaking Season.

We have just finished a record breaking tourist season here, and now have a chance to breathe easy for a while.

The New Daytona, where I work, closes next week until next winter season. The other two houses remain open the year round. They are all operated by the Chrystal Amusement Company, and as we have no competition everything comes our way.

We have no Chief Projectionist. Each man is entirely responsible for his own equipment, makes his own repairs, etc. We are not restricted when it comes to purchasing repair parts.

Use Alternating Current.

A C is the rule here, and we use Columbia Special A C carbons. Have had some trouble with them recently, and have sent samples to the factory, but have not yet had report as to the finding. Have never had a projection critic visit us, but we believe we know when things are as they should be and do our best to keep them that way.

Mr. Titus, president of the company, wants the best, and is willing to pay the price to get it. Our running time is two to five and seven to eleven daily, except Sundays, which we have free. Our salary is thirty-five dollars per, so take it up one side and down the other we are perhaps a bit better off than most projectionists in larger cities.

If you need a wee bit rest next winter take a run down to Florida and spend a little time in Daytona. We'll do the honors, and when you leave it will be with that "want to go back" feeling.

How Memory Jumps.

And right in the very last line he says: "As this letter is not for publication, you may heave it into the waste basket and I'll have something interesting later." Well, dang you, it's going to get itself publicationed anyhow. Chatty letters such as this ARE interesting, don't make any mistake about it either.

The American Film Exchange! Lord, man, how memory jumped the chasm of years, and we again looked upon Van Ronckle's little six by eight office, and his desk piled high with a jumble of letters, papers, checks, contracts and so forth. It was the standing joke of Chicago exchanges that when Van interviewed two customers at once he hung the cuspidor out of the window to make more room. And did he do a business? I'll tell the wide world he did. How he did in those cigar box quarters only Von Ronckle knows. It was the joke and the wonder of the business at that time. Wonder where Van Ronckle is now?

Unions Not to Blame.

You are in error in blaming the union for the retention of the incompetent, because as a matter of fact there were nothing but incompetents (myself included) then, and the union must forsooth take them in. But we will cheerfully admit that the Chicago local was pretty awful—so much so that we refused point blank to join it. We have been in labor unions ever since 1884, and the old Chicago local was the worst we ever knew of anywhere.

But of late years most unions have tightened the lines somewhat, though it is a very hard problem to handle. The union proceeds on the theory that the non-union projectionist is a menace, even though incompetent, but there is a perhaps equally grave danger in taking him in, and there you are.

We think the unions, as a whole, are trying to do the best they can with this problem. Unions are now chiefly at fault in not making some real effort to compel their members to educate themselves in their profession, and put themselves in position to do credit to the organization and justice to their employer, the public, the exchange, the producer and the artists whose art they must reproduce.

Your President is wise in understanding that the man who wants the best must be willing to pay a commensurate price. One does NOT get a high grade shoe for the price of a brogan. My compliments to Mr. Titus.

If I ever get down to Florida again I will try to visit your little city. Have been there once, many years ago. Seems to me I remember a street in Daytona where the branches of great trees form a complete arch, and from them depend long stringers of moss.

Carbon Capacity

Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Florida, writes:

In April 17 issue, Question No. 3 of the optical questions asks what is the economical limit of a projection carbon, and the answer is given as about five amperes below the point where needling or penciling begins.

My own answer to this would be as follows:

For A C 7/9 cored 80 amperes, ¾ cored 70 amperes, ⅝ cored 60 amperes and 9/16 cored 50 amperes.

For D C ¾ cored 55 amperes, ⅝ cored 40 to 45 amperes, ½ inch cored 20 amperes and 9/16 cored 25 amperes.

For solid lower, D C, ⅝ fifty amperes, ½ forty amperes, 9/16 forty to forty-five amperes and 7/16 twenty-five amperes.

I woud ask that you correct the foregoing if you find it to be wrong at any point, as I am not sure of it.

Those first ten questions seem simple, but if one attempts to trace them out to their finer points it will be necessary to do some digging, and that is precisely what I am doing. Only wish you would continue to ask ten questions every week, for it certainly will cause all men who have any real ambition to study, and that is what we all need.

Impossible to Check.

It would be impossible to check up the carbon capacity chart you present, because I think it will be found that different makes of carbon will vary considerably in carrying capacity; also the point has been raised recently that current from different generators acts differently on carbons. It will therefore, it seems to me, be up to the projectionist to select the carbons he proposes to use, and then ascertain for himself just what the amperage capacity of that particular carbon, on that particular current is, based on the proposition that the economical limit is about five amperes below the needling or penciling point.

My regards to the Tampa men. And bye the way, what ever happened to friend Barnhill, of Miami, and his charming better half. I have recollections of strenuous, though very pleasant hours of entertainment in those two of Florida's most beautiful cities, Miami and Tampa. My best regards to all the very cordial, wholesouled folks whom I met in those two gems of the sunny Southland.

The Old Argument

Recently B. Ludesher, Alpena, Michigan, wrote concerning wounded soldiers and schools for projectionists. I commented on same and sent him a carbon copy. Brother Ludesher is here again, with the following:

I did not mean that every soldier should be taught projection, but only such as are incapacitated for heavy manual labor. They, or some of them, might well be taught the trade—if it is a trade.

And now with regard to another matter. You will note I said "if it is a trade." Well, I want to write of that, and trust you will be able to understand my meaning, even though I do not make myself very clear.

Discharged.

After my discharge from the army I made quite a number of stops on my way home, seeking a position in every city, little or big, I came to. In one of them I introduced myself to a manager, who said he needed a GOOD man, with emphasis on the "good." The work was seven nights a week and three matinees. On matinee days it would be two to five and five to about eleven. He wanted a man who would be an all-around man. When I named thirty-five dollars a week he nearly fell off the box he was sitting on.

"Why, man," said he, "I can get all the men I want to do the same work for twenty dollars"! To prove his statement he took me to one of his houses, and told me to go up and see his projectionist, which I did.

Now, Rich, this chap was getting some considerable picture. It was really all that a man could expect. The projection room was clean. The man sat at his machine all the time I talked with him and kept a steady light all through the show. After the show I invited him out to eat, and during the conversation asked what he received as pay, to which he replied: "Twenty dollars a week."

Said he had learned projection while the other projectionist was away in the army, and that all the experience he had had was one year.

To my inquiry as to why he did not demand decent remuneration he replied to the effect that if he asked for more money he would promptly be told to get out. "The manager can get all the men he wants for twenty," was his summing up of the situation.

And there are many situations like that all over the country. On my way to the train next day the manager met me and asked if I would consider his proposition. He was promptly told there was nothing doing. I could make more than that husking pumpkins or digging the lowly sewer.

Arguments Rejected.

I laid before him several arguments, one of which was that by employing a cheap man at the end of a year he would lose the difference in wages in wear and tear on machinery alone.

He wanted to know how I could prove to him that it would be a good investment to pay me fifteen dollars more than the prevailing wage, to which I replied by offering to go to work, and unless I could convince him I was worth the increase he might keep the entire week's pay, but he got cold feet. Said he could save enough in a year by paying twenty to buy two new projectors, allow-

I hope I have made my meaning clear.

Why It Is So.

You have, friend Ludesher. I fully understand the situation. It is not a new one, and projectionists are in goodly measure themselves to blame that it exists. This, by reason of the fact that they have, taken as a whole, taken little pains to impress upon managers something of the importance of their position.

For instance, the manager goes up to the projection room and finds the projectionist ten feet away from his projectors, rubbering out of a window, while the motor and arc control run the show.

Does this tend to impress him with the importance of the projectionist? Does it not rather convey the idea that trimming the lamp, oiling 'round and threading is about all there is to projection—that the rest of it is done by the arc control and the motor?

Is the average projectionist able to impress the manager with the fact that he is possessed of much knowledge. Can he talk intelligently and convincingly on auditorium lighting as applied to projection results?

Can he tell the manager the actual keystone effect which will result from a given condition?

Can he name the relatively good and bad points of the two leading projectors, and do it intelligently?

Can he give the manager concrete reasons why a high grade condenser lens will give better results?

Can he talk intelligently on objective diameters, three-lens condenser advantages and disadvantages, three-lens objectives and their advantages and disadvantages, or on any other one of the hundreds of things vital to his profession.

A Trade or Profession.

Projection is a trade or a profession—whichever the individual makes it. Most of them make it a mere trade, and then do not half learn the trade. Can you deny it?

Probably the incongruity of a twenty-dollar-a-week man reproducing, and to some extent re-directing a hundred thousand dollar photoplay never entered the mind of the "manager" in question. Having secured a given production he has done his full duty. How it is interpreted on the screen matters not, so long as there is a good light, which latter may be had at the expense of as much as fifty per cent. unnecessary waste.

These matters are of little moment to him because he knows nothing of them. He has been trained to believe the projectionist is of slight importance, and the projectionist is himself largely to blame.

Bell and Howell Distributors

We are in receipt of the following letter from the Precision Machine Company:

We notice that in answering an inquiry from Poland, New York, regarding Bell and Howell and Powers' Inductors you said, in effect, that the Poland party would undoubtedly be better served by using the Power Inductor because of the fact that the factory where they are made would be located nearby, which fact would make for better service than could be given by the makers of the Bell and Howell.

Precision Company Distributors.

We would call your attention to the fact that this company is distributor for the Bell and Howell Inductor, and that as such distributor we have office and service stations in Albany, Buffalo and Auburn, New York. We feel that we are able to serve any user of the Bell and Howell or the Simplex products quite as efficiently from either of these points, or through our own factories, as they could possibly be served by any one else.

Please be assured that we call your attention to this matter only to the end that you may be advised of our facilities should occasion arise to answer another, similar query.

All right, gentlemen. Never having been advised, so far as I know, that you were distributors for the B. & H. Inductor, I answered Poland as seemed best from the information at hand. I will bear in mind the facts you have set forth and act accordingly in future. I am obliged to you for the information.

Camera Plans Wanted

W. J. Neville, Cincinnati, Ohio, says he is very anxious to build an up-to-date motion picture camera and wants to know where he can get plans and specifications for same.

Don't know, friend Neville. Late model, up-to-date cameras are, we think, rather well covered with pretty strong patents. You could get the "plans and specifications" in the patent office, I suppose, but whether one is permitted to make a patented article for his own use we are not sure. Anyhow that is about all the suggestion we could make in the matter.

Notching Pliers

The editor has had several inquiries for the film notching pliers described on page 203 of the handbook. This is a really excellent tool, and one which should be in every exchange. We would also commend it to projectionists and theatre managers. Why does not some one get hold of the plier who will advertise and push it. It's a good thing, shove it along.

ATTENTION- Mr. O'Brien

Gentlemen:-

On February 23rd, we ordered from you: One Three Unit - Motor Generator Set consisting of 1-150 H. P. 3 phase, 2200 volt motor, and 2-80 K. W. generators, to be installed upon our trailer complete, with panel board instruments, oil switch, auto starter etc., and on March 7th, same was delivered to us and immediately sent on location.

Since that date we have used it daily, and can cheerfully say it has more than satisfied us in every respect.

At one time under extraordinary conditions, the set was carrying 100% overload, and did it easily.

We also wish to comment on the systematic way in which your organization handled the assembling of our generator, considering the limited time you had to do so.

Thanking you for past favors and promptness in all business dealings, we are

Help Out Your Ventilating System and Make the Theatre Look Cool and Airy

THE hot weather will soon be upon us with a rush and it is none too early to place one's order for seat covers.

Seat covers have many points to recommend them to the consideration of both exhibitor and patron. Many houses that are cozy and comfortable during the winter appear absolutely stuffy when warm weather arrives. This stuffiness may be instantly removed by the application of properly selected and newly laundried chair covers.

Every one knows how much cooler and pleasanter a living room appears with its plush or damask covered furniture wearing a summer mask of denim or crash, and the same cooling effect can be obtained in a picture theatre by the same means.

Moreover, there is a distinct air of cleanliness in newly laundried seat coverings that goes far to increase the comfort and happiness of the patrons.

A New Field for Decoration.

A new field for decoration has recently been opened up by the Dwyer Bros. & Company, manufacturers of the D B theatre chair covers, which are being placed in many of the larger houses in the United States and are now being purchased by such circuits as the Loew Enterprises, Rowland & Clark in Pittsburgh, Signal Amusement Co., Chattanooga, and many others of like size, who can readily see the economy in these covers and also the artistic value of same.

In the D B covers the highest ideals of comfort and beauty are realized. They are made from materials that have been selected from the finest and most durable weaves that the textile industries have to offer and are manufactured in the Dwyer Company's own factory by the most skilled workmen, pattern makers and designers.

The colors and designs will harmonize with any color scheme and will appeal to the most discriminating persons, and their cool, clean and inviting appearance creates new patrons.

Covers Easily Attached.

The covers are easily put on either veneer or upholstered chair backs or bottoms and do not require any special tools. They are made to special order only, cut and tailored to the design of the chair back. Exact measurements are taken of the purchaser's actual seat backs and patterns are cut at the factory with extreme precision, so that they will conform to the individual curves of chairs.

They are made in four different styles: Style A being the cover covering the entire chair back, both front and rear. Style B, covering the seat bottom. Style C, covering the entire front and one-quarter of the rear of chair back. Style D, covering the entire front and one-half of the rear chair back, as per the accompanying photographs.

In material, a wide range of choice is possible. The covering may be of a lemon finished herring-bone weave, which not only is of durable material, but in which the colors are fast and will not run.

The material is cold water shrunk before being made, and therefore keeps its shape in spite of repeated laundering.

The standard material now being furnished by the Dwyer Company may be obtained in plain tan bordered with a white tape, a tan and white wide stripe, each stripe one-half inch wide, one-quarter inch tan and white stripes, and brown, tan and white stripe.

Effects in Initials and Stripes.

The left hand cover has initial and stripes in orange; the center one has center stripe of light blue; the right hand cover has orange initial on dark blue stripe, but the camera was color blind.

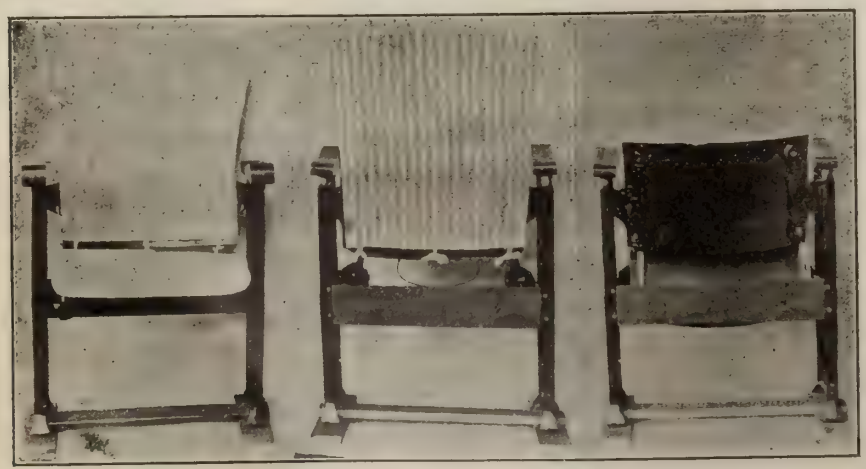
Special Fabrics Available.

In addition to these, the Dwyer Company have purchased a quantity of Palm Beach material in white, cream and brown, and a satin-finished damask in cream or white which it is prepared to furnish for covering material.

A very pleasing and distinct effect may be obtained by a combination of house initials with plain or striped material, and also by the use of figured stuff. These special effects can best be appreciated by referring to the photographs of actual covers illustrated herewith.

The Dwyer Company have published a folder on the subject of seat covers. It contains much valuable information and should be in the hands of every progressive exhibitor and house manager. It will be sent on request by the Dwyer Bros. & Company, 520 Broadway, Cincinnati, Ohio, if the Moving Picture World is mentioned when writing for same.

Samples will also be cheerfully submitted by the Dwyer Company to any theatre owner who is desirous of equipping his house with covers, no matter what size or design his chairs may be.



Patterns of Dwyer Seat Covers.

Left to right: Styles A and B, front view; style A, rear view, and style C, rear view. Style D not shown, covers half of seat back.

New House for Russellville, Ky.

A. Mitchell, proprietor of the Dixie Theatre of Russellville, Ky., has purchased the Farnsworth building on East Second street and will convert it into a 700-seat house, in which 500 seats will be on the lower floor.

The house will be equipped with a large stage so that road shows and vaudeville acts may be given. The equipment of the house will include two Simplex projecting machines, a Monsoon ventilating system, and a Rembush Gold Fibre screen.

After the new house has opened the Dixie will be used for pictures exclusively.

The Power's #6B Cameragraph installed for us by your company about one year ago, has given us excellent satisfaction. We had the machine equipped for Mazda Lamps.

Our machine has been in constant use, and considering the fact that at least ten different persons handle the machine, our expense for lamps has been very small indeed. We have used six and ninehundred Watt lamps, and find both of them very satisfactory.

Receipts and Posters

BEFORE an audience ever get to your box-office they look at your posters, which are more important to you than a show-window is to a merchant. As they study those posters they make up their minds whether to go into your theatre, or whether to stay out. The posters decide them!

The actual quality of the film shown is a minor matter. It is not what he is going to see but rather what he is seeing that counts. His mind is made up while he looks at the posters! The poster is the sample that you show him, the poster is your ticket salesman, and if it is a RITCHEY poster it is bound to sell the maximum number of tickets. It follows inevitably that a fine film without RITCHEY posters is not as profitable a proposition for you as an inferior film with RITCHEY posters. If you had RITCHEY posters all the time your annual receipts would be vastly increased. To obtain the profits you are justly entitled to you must have them. If you insist upon it you will get them. Not otherwise.

In this matter of posters the exhibitor's interest, and the interest of the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. are identical. You need our product for your success, we need your support for ours. You pay for the finest posters that can be made, you are entitled to have them, we make them.

Voice your demand for RITCHEY posters!

Wins High Praise from Trade Critics

"One of the most successful and inspiring love stories that has been presented on the screen . . . . the screen play is no less absorbing than the stage play was and is free from that enemy of the good drama known as 'padding.'"—Moving Picture World.

"'Romance' is a picture of remarkable charm. It has been worth waiting for and unfolds on the screen a succession of maddening love scenes which positively thrill. It is the sort of thing to delight the discriminating and appeal to the masses."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"There is no doubt about the drawing power of 'Romance,' particularly in metropolitan quarters. It will bring out people that seldom come to the picture houses. The older ones, many of whom saw the original play when presented something over six years ago, and those who are familiar with the tragic yet beautiful character of the romance presented, will turn out en masse to see the picture. It is an unusual love story carrying a deep appeal and should appeal especially to the better class of audience."—Wid's Daily

"The verdict is sure to be 'an artistic production' . . . . The picture will certainly appeal to those in search of romance or those who have lost it in the days when love was young."—Motion Picture News.

"'Romance' is a drama in every sense of the word—a credit to the motion picture art."—Harrison's Reports.

"'Romance' is eminently fitted for the screen. It has all the elements of appeal for screen fans."
—New York Morning Telegraph

One Convention Yet Possible

EVERY day is bringing additional evidence that the idea of holding two conventions in Cleveland is repugnant to a great many exhibitors. We are referring, of course, to the gatherings representatives of the Theatre Owners and of the recent sessions in Chicago. Just at this writing word has come from Alfred S. Black, president of the old League, in which he gives notice that the convention originally slated for Chicago at the end of the month will be held in Cleveland simultaneous with the other or others. That definitely sets the stage for a real get-together—that is, it completes the preliminaries necessary to bringing within reach of each other the several organization factors.

One of the outstanding and upstanding bits of evidence of the determination of exhibitors to have peace even if they have to fight for it is the telegram received from President Steffes of the United Theatrical Protective League of the Northwest, in which it is declared that if there are to be two meetings or a split of any kind the thirty local delegates from that body will remain at home.

ANOTHER equally forceful "exhibit" is the telegram from Willard Patterson, the soft-spoken Southerner who defied precedent and practically unaided called a national convention, in which he declares that he favors one convention at Cleveland. Mr. Patterson says that personally he intends to bend every effort in the direction of one gathering.

The inclusion on a registration committee of a representative of every exhibitor body in the country may have influence in bringing all the exhibitors under the Winton's roof June 8. "The decision at Chicago was that the delegates should attend 'the' Cleveland convention, not 'a' Cleveland convention," said the Moving Picture World last week. This declaration is being affirmed now by men who were present at the Patterson gathering.

"Let us go to the Winton and sit in with the bunch, meet them fairly and squarely and give them a chance to do the same by us," was the suggestion by one man prominent in Chicago. "If there is an attempt to put over anything we believe to be seriously wrong there is no string on us—we can go elsewhere. But I believe we should start together and at least give the other fellows credit for being business men."

THE Committee of Seventeen appointed recently at Chicago will meet in New York June 3 or 4. At that time the question of a separate convention for the Chicago contingent will be taken up and settled. If Mr. Rembusch is right in calling an independent session his action will be affirmed by his associates. If there has been a misunderstanding or if there may have been taken action that upon examination under a brighter light proves to have been ill-advised it is a simple matter to restore the situation to just what it was at adjournment in Chicago April 27. The coming week may have important influence on exhibitor organization in the United States. It should be a period of give and take, of conciliation, of good-will.

Capitol Eliminates Opera

THE transformation of the Capitol Theatre into a straight motion picture house and the appointment of Mr. Rothapfel to direct the presentations at "the world's largest theatre" is a vindication of unadulterated screen entertainment. The mixture of musical comedy and vaudeville and opera with motion pictures has not met with enthusiastic public favor. The installation of the summer policy will go further to popularize the big house with New Yorkers and the throngs of strangers who congregate on Broadway. The low price at matinees will be 30 cents and the top price for the best chairs at night will be $1. With a seating capacity of over five thousand Mr. Rothapfel will have abundant opportunity of indulging in his favorite pastime and "Go get 'em!"

The World Stands on Its Record

ONE of our contemporaries, in explaining at length its version of a squabble with a former client, intimates that as other trade papers still are carrying the advertising of the company in question they cannot be printing honest reviews of its pictures and "perhaps they will care to explain why."

Just to make the record clear so far as the Moving Picture World is concerned it may be said no reviews are being omitted from its columns. As to the accuracy and honesty of the writers of these reviews and as to the faithfulness with which they interpret the viewpoint of the public the subscribers of the World are quite well able to judge for themselves.

New York Has Deposits Law

NEW YORK exhibitors again have achieved what in other states up to this time has proved to be the impossible. Governor Smith of the Empire State has signed the Cotillo bill, which provides that, beginning immediately, all deposit moneys not only shall be segregated, but that they shall bear interest. An accompanying measure nullifies any waiver of the provisions of the main bill.

As was to have been expected, the legislation was combated by the distributing organizations. As was not to have been expected the measure was ordered sent to the Governor for signature without a dissenting vote. All other considerations aside, the result shows what may be accomplished by organization—and work.

Cleveland Advertising Club Gets After Stock Syndicate

A CAMPAIGN to curb illegal sales of stock in concerns promoted in Cleveland, was started May 15 by the better business commission of the Cleveland Advertising Club, and the first victim was a motion picture company. Frank W. Packer, 51 years old, and Harriett E. Mills, 33, were taken into custody by city detectives aided by officials of the club, charged with selling stock of the Fidelity Picture Play Syndicate, after their license to dispose of stock in Ohio had been revoked by the state securities commissioner, April 22.

The Fidelity Picture Play Syndicate maintained offices at 1834 Prospect avenue. The officials swooped down on them and besides taking accused, seized the books of the concern, which showed that between 300 and 400 Clevelanders, mostly of the poorer classes, had bought stock at from $10 to $14 per share.

James L. Lind, attorney for the better business commission, announced that he personally would do all he can to have the accused convicted, and that other similar action will be taken against companies in Cleveland selling stock. The unusual point about the Fidelity Company is that it sold stock with hardly any advertising in the city.

Wants Harmony Between Showmen and Association

LOUIS J. SELZNICK addressed the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at a luncheon held at the Hotel Astor, New York, on Tuesday, May 25. After complimenting the exhibitors on the brains and ability of the men chosen to represent them at the Cleveland convention, he said he hoped they would stand together and accomplish results.

He ventured to say he could not see how the different questions of the industry could be solved without the co-operation of all branches and he could not understand why the exhibitors and producers should not work in harmony with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry upon all questions effecting the whole industry. He said he would take a stand for such a policy and fight for it at the Cleveland meeting of the National Association.

Federated Exchanges Hold Meet

The Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., in convention assembled at Hotel Astor, New York, week of May 24, elected the following officers: J. L. Freidman, Chicago, president; J. E. Pearce, New Orleans, vice president; D. Chatkin, San Francisco, secretary; Sam Grand, Boston, treasurer. These, together with A. G. White, New York; Harry Charnas, of Cleveland, and Ben Amsterdam, of Philadelphia, constitute the board of directors. Harry Charnas is chairman of the purchasing committee. The Federated Exchanges has been organized under the laws of Delaware. A full report of the convention will be published next week.

Among those who attended were J. I. Friedman, Celebrated Players, Chicago; D. Chatkin and Marion Kohn, San Francisco; J. J. Allen, Toronto; Mr. Kyler, Supreme Photoplays, Denver; Sam Werner, United Film Service, St. Louis; Al Kahn, Crescent Film Company, Kansas City; Ralph Wettstein, Midwest Distributing Company, Milwaukee, and J. E. Pearce, Pearce Films, New Orleans.

Theatre Manager Courted Law Suit with False Advertising

NEWSPAPER advertising published for a theatre in Los Angeles may result in a law suit against the management of the house by Cecil B. DeMille. The protested displays announced "Gloria Swanson, Cecil B. DeMille's Famous Star in 'You Can't Believe Everything'" as an attraction.

The advertisement further stated that the picture was "A New Triumph for Gloria Swanson." "Positively the First Time in Los Angeles" was another line in the copy. The facts of the case, as set forth in telegrams from Los Angeles, are these:

The management of the theatre complained of secured an old release featuring Gloria Swanson, titled "You Can't Believe Everything," and advertised Miss Swanson as Cecil B. DeMille's star. At Mr. DeMille's request Attorney James, representing the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, threatened suit.

Advertisements, signed by Mr. De Mille were inserted in all the Los Angeles newspapers stating the facts. The result was that the advertisement was withdrawn.

Argus Takes Swanson Company

On June 1, 1920, the Swanson Theatre Equipment Company, with branches in Des Moines, Iowa, Omaha, Nebraska and Salt Lake City, Utah, and the home office in Denver, Colorado, will dispose of its entire interest in what is known as the Swanson Theatre Equipment Company, a Colorado corporation, to the Argus Enterprises, Inc., of Cleveland, Ohio.

Collection of Theatre Taxes Shows Increase of $2,000,000

AN increase of nearly two million dollars is shown in the admission taxes collected during March as compared with those of the same month in 1918, according to figures just made public by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Collections from this source during the month aggregated $7,085,123.74, as compared with $5,186,875.33 during March of last year.

With the March collections the total admissions taxes derived during the first three-quarters of the present fiscal year amount to $54,489,499.82, an increase of 50 per cent. over the collections for the corresponding period of the last fiscal year, which totaled $35,026,947.99.

During the month of March, also, $21,906.49 was collected from the seating tax and $565,854.47 from moving picture films leased and licensed. Total collections from all sources during March were reported as $813,631,862.90, making the total for the first three-quarters $3,933,495,754.27.

Columbus Theatre Sale Has Quarter Million Overturn

BENJAMIN HEIDINGSFELD, Cincinnati attorney, acting for the Cincinnati & Columbus Amusement Company, has closed a deal for the purchase of the Colonial Theatre, Columbus, which at present is being operated as a moving picture theatre. The corporation, it is understood, is controlled by Mr. Heidingsfeld, I. Libson, of the Libson Amusement Company, and the Harris interests, of Pittsburgh.

The building is in the rear of the Deshler Hotel, on Broad street, and has a seating capacity of 2,000. Among the sellers were Rud K. Hynicka and August Kirkert, of Cincinnati, and Edward Hart, of Cincinnati and New York City.

They acquired the property some years ago from James Howell, who erected the theatre. It is understood that the deal involves approximately a quarter of a million dollars.

Calder Bill on Importations

Moving picture men who may inadvertently, in importing motion picture films from foreign countries, undervalue them would be materially benefited by the passage of the bill just introduced in Congress by Senator Calder of New York. The tariff act of 1913 imposes a penalty of 75 per cent. of the appraised value of an article when such article is brought into the United States under a declared value that is below actual value. Except where undervaluation is manifestly a clerical error, the law provides such an entry shall be held to be presumptively fraudulent.

The Calder bill would permit the importer in such cases to appeal to Secretary of the Treasury, who, in turn, would have authority to remit the penalty. It has the indorsement of the Treasury Department and the Tariff Commission. It has been referred to the Senate Finance Committee.

American Photoplayer to Move

The American Photoplayer Company will move shortly to its new quarters on the tenth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, where its eastern executive office and sales rooms will be located. As has been the firm's policy in the past, it will also have a large show room in which will be installed a number of photoplayers, as well as Robert Morton Orchestrelle organ.

Should Residential Neighborhoods Bar Theatres? That Is Question Agitating Syracuse Officials

JUST what is the physical relation of a neighborhood picture house to the physical aspects of a certain neighborhood is the question which is puzzling certain legislators in Syracuse, N. Y. Whether a picture theatre can be considered as violating the residential sanctity of a residential section is also involved.

James Kernan, sealer of weights and measures for Syracuse, decided to build a picture house in Seymour street. Inquiry at the bureau of buildings developed that there appeared to be no reason why the house might not be built. After a site for the house had been excavated, a sudden halt was called in the operations when it was discovered that there was an ordinance reserving that particular block for residential purposes.

It seems that in Syracuse, by city ordinance, many blocks in residential sections are closed to business enterprises. The ordinance for this particular block in Seymour street was passed when a coal yard sought to invade the block. Now it apparently bars the theatre, but Kernan is hopeful that the owners of property in the block will take the attitude that his theatre will be an asset to the block and will offer no hindrance to untangling the legal red tape.

Exhibitor Disagreement Over Meetings Reaches Crisis With Western Ultimatum

Minneapolis Body Won't Visit Cleveland Unless Agreements Are Reached

Willard C. Patterson and Sig Samuels Will Work for One Exhibitor Convention

DEVELOPMENTS in the controversy now agitating exhibitor ranks regarding a national convention in Cleveland on June 8 to 11 have come thick and fast the past week, and although the conflict seems to be raging as hotly as before, some men in the industry believe they detect indications that an agreement, or at least an armistice, may be in sight.

Here are the high lights of the past week:

The United Theatrical Protective League of the Northwest issues an ultimatum in which it is declared that its delegation of thirty will not leave for Cleveland "if there are two meetings or a split of any kind."

Willard C. Patterson deplores the disagreement and asks for one convention, and his telegram seems to indicate that misunderstandings may have caused the whole trouble. He will make every effort to formulate one convention.

Sounding a call for a mass meeting of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America in Cleveland, President Frank J. Rembusch says that its single purpose will be to keep producers out of the exhibiting field and that he hopes that "the two national bodies now existing and the newly proposed organization may blend into one association." He adds that he favors separate conventions, with a get-together on the final days.

At the request of the Cleveland convention committee, Temporary Chairman Sydney S. Cohen, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America appoints an arrangements committee representing every film shipping zone.

President Alfred S. Black, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America announces his decision to call the convention of the old organization in Cleveland instead of in Chicago, believing that "it is better to have a thrashing out of many problems in one city at one time."

Mr. Cohen protests trade paper statements that there is "a split in exhibitors' ranks."

Cohen Names Arrangements Committee Representing Film Shipping Sections

ALMOST interesting development in the preparations for the great national exhibitors' convention at the Hotel Winton, Cleveland, June 8 to 11, is the action taken by the Cleveland convention committee in asking the temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Sydney S. Cohen, to appoint a committee of exhibitors representing every film shipping zone to take charge of the arrangements for the convention and the matter of registration.

The request to Chairman Cohen came about in this way. The Cleveland committee, consisting of Henry H. Lustig, chairman; W. J. Slimm, treasurer, and Samuel Bullock, secretary, regretted to read that exception had been taken by the promoter of the second convention to the committee's treatment of the sub-committee of the Chicago conference, consisting of Mr. Kress of Ohio, Mr. Farley of Alabama and Mr. Van Praag of Kansas.

Statement of Committee.

It is a matter of history that these three men visited Cleveland and, in the language of the Cleveland committee, expressed absolute satisfaction with the arrangements in hand and plans outlined. Not only Mr. Van Praag, but also his associates on the sub-committee, have duly and emphatically registered their appreciation of the courteous treatment they received at the hands of the Cleveland arrangement committee.

In connection with this matter, the Cleveland convention committee has issued a statement which completely covers the ground and which, no doubt, will be read with interest by the exhibitors who are interested in the coming convention at the Hotel Winton.

Here is the statement:

Cleveland regrets the necessity for issuing this statement, inasmuch as we are proceeding with the convention arrangements with only one thought in mind—harmony, as expressed in the trade papers, issue of May 22. Since then we regret to announce we have been informed that F. J. Rembusch has engaged the Cleveland Hotel assembly hall and reserved a block of rooms 'for a convention of motion picture exhibitors.'

This information is direct from the hotel management. Whatever Mr. Rembusch's object may be in thus ignoring our committee will be hard for Mr. Rembusch to explain, in view of his insistent demand for harmony and "no politics" at the Patterson meeting at Chicago, as reported by Mr. Bullock.

We sent a representative to that meeting, Sam Bullock, our executive secretary, with a message to deliver. We have evidence that he delivered that message on the floor on Tuesday, April 27, by consent of Mr. Patterson, to whom it was addressed. Part of that message follows:

"May we be pardoned for inquiring if it is your intention to initiate a new national exhibitor organization or merely to get an expression of sentiment from the assembled exhibitors and prepare to crystallize that sentiment into action at a convention later? If that is your intention we are with you heart and soul. If, however, some overzealous exhibitors, smarting under present and prospective abuses, should prematurely undertake to start a national organization with such little preparation, there could be only one result—failure, with producer influence in control. It has always been so in the past and our tentative national organization will have nothing to do with such a proposition."

Mr. Bullock gave further details and invited all present to come to Cleveland and help a national theatre owner organization. A motion followed that an investigating committee be appointed on the producers' attitude; said committee to report its findings to the Cleveland convention on June 8, 9 and 10. The meeting adjourned without any further authority being conferred upon anyone.

The committee of seventeen then met and a sub-committee of three, Mr. Kress of Ohio, Mr. Farley of Alabama and Mr. Van Praag of Kansas, was authorized to wait upon our Cleveland chairman to ascertain certain details. They visited Cleveland and expressed absolute satisfaction over the arrangements in hand and plans outlined, and all three made reservations at the Winton immediately.

That was real harmonious co-operation, but a discordant note appeared this week under date line of Cleveland, carrying the information that "the Hotel Cleveland will be the headquarters of the 'Chicago convention' contingent for the session beginning June 8." This is a literal quotation.

Was this necessary? If so, an intimation by the sub-committee would have met with instant response by our committee. Was it authorized by the committee of seventeen or by vote of the Patterson gathering prior to adjournment? Mr. Bullock says he stayed until that meeting broke up and every one had subscribed $1 for the woman stenographer as they passed out.

In conclusion, we are ready at all times, and are now, to engage halls or rooms for any exhibitor or exhibitor organization, but we never deemed it necessary to pre-empt such places for ulterior motives, and though we could interfere with Mr. Rembusch's arrangements, if necessary, at this time, we are satisfied to waive that prerogative, merely regretting the discourtesy tendered this committee, whatever the motive, by Mr. Rembusch.

With a welcome to all and malice toward none,

Fraternally yours,
H. H. LUSTIG, Chairman.
W. H. SLIMM, Treasurer.
SAM BULLOCK, Secretary.
Convention Committee on Arrangements.

Personnel of Committee.

In commenting on the action of the Cleveland arrangements committee, Temporary Chairman Cohen said that he would gladly comply with its request for the appointment of a committee on arrangements and registration. Mr. Cohen said he could not sufficiently commend the spirit of the position taken by the Cleveland arrangements committee. Pursuant to its request a committee on arrangements and registration has been appointed covering practically every one of the film shipping zones of the country. The names and addresses, organizations and offices of the appointees are as follows:

Disclaim Interest in Exposition.

The committee will convene at the Hotel Winton on June 7 for its first important business meeting.

The temporary officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America desire to make it very plain to the entire industry, and particularly the producers and supply men, that they have no connection with or interest in an exposition which, for some reason best known to the promoters of the enterprise, has been advertised for the same days as the convention at the Hotel Winton.

The temporary officials of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America declare that exhibitors do not want any financial assistance such as has heretofore been collected at every national convention in the guise of money for space, booths, etc. They say that the convention at the Hotel Winton will be a business convention pure and simple, and that if the exhibitors wish to do justice to only the most urgent problems now confronting them, they will have no time left and certainly no inclination to attend any so-called exposition.

A letter has been sent out by the temporary officials to every producer and supply firm, emphasizing the fact that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have arranged no exposition and that any person who solicits space for such an exposition on the pretense of acting on behalf of or for the benefit of the organized exhibitors, has no authority from them to do so.

The following is the text of the report made to Chairman Rembusch of the Chicago conference called by W. C. Patterson on April 26, 1920, made by the sub-committee of three appointed on that occasion:

"That we heartily indorse and approve the arrangements that have been made for the convention called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the Hotel Winton, June 8, 9 and 10."

H. W. KRESS, chairman, Piqua, O.
H. C. FARLEY, Montgomery, Ala.
M. VAN PRAAG, Kansas City.

"Union With Whom and What?" Query of Sydney S. Cohen, New York

Editor Moving Picture World:

IN justice to the organized exhibitors of those states which called their convention at Cleveland in advance of the Chicago conference, we desire to protest against the report in your publication speaking of a "split in exhibitors' ranks" and giving the impression that the exhibitors of the country are divided into factions.

Exhibitors in almost every state in the Union, all of them having a record for achievements and feeling the need of a national body, conferred and corresponded for months with a view to holding a national convention and forming a permanent national organization. The utmost harmony prevailed in all conferences and discussions, no matter where held. Exhibitors by the hundreds signified their intention of joining a national organzation. Though widely scattered over the biggest country in the world, there was a singular unanimity among these exhibitors.

Hits at Rembusch.

In the South, Willard C. Patterson, a prominent exhibitor of Atlanta, issued a call for a conference which was attended by many exhibitors. These exhibitors recognized the importance of the Cleveland convention called by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, by instructing their committee to make its report to that convention.

Now weeks after the original dates have been set, one man, with no authority other than such as he may choose to confer on himself, calls a second meeting for the same time and the same place, at a different hotel. Does this justify printing columns about "dissensions in exhibitors' ranks?" Does it justify editorials urging union? Union with whom and with what? The exhibitors of the country must not stop short in their formation of a national body.

An independent and fearless trade press has nothing to fear from a strong united exhibitor organization on national lines. We exhibitors like independence not only in our own ranks, but in other branches as well, and we will line up solidly with every publication which is not entirely dominated by its advertisers.

Cites First National As Proving That Exhibitors Can and Will Hold Together

By J. D. WILLIAMS, General Manager First National.

ON to Cleveland! It is in every issue of the trade journals. Exhibitors met on a recent Southern trip were saying it. Producers and distributors are echoing it. Visiting theatre owners, in New York from many territories, talk enthusiastically about the next big chance to mold a national league of exhibitors, representative of every section, free from petty politics, nation broad in scope, and determined in its course of defense for individual interests.

Similar attempts in the past make it a big order to fill, and a great undertaking for the exhibitors whose unusual initiative and business acumen give it an impelling force. It is a purpose beset with dangers and difficulties, surrounded by countless pitfalls, but with possibilities of such magnitude if it succeeds that it is worthy of every ounce of support, encouragement and counsel that can come to it from anywhere.

It is doubtful if any group of independent exhibitors, or any individual theatre owners, passively or intensively interested in the outcome at Cleveland, realizes so keenly what tests of mutual confidence, of steadfast resistance to insidious, destructive influences, are certain to follow and attack the ambitions of the national league to be solidified at Cleveland as the exhibitors who, three years ago, joined hands in a national co-operative and defensive structure which was and is fundamentally identical to the composite unit soon to be erected.

Its Most Essential Features.

Their theatre interests were threatened then with dangers equally as great as the independent exhibitor menaces upon which the Cleveland assembly will unite and act. So they got together and organized First National Exhibitors' Circuit. This is neither a brief nor a plaudit for that co-operative body. Instead, I shall set forth the essential features which have made it succeed as a national unit of exhibitors, knowing that in such a recital of facts heretofore unheralded there are practical points of guidance for the exhibitors who will gather in Oho for a purpose that is similar in many respects.

Endured Much Ridicule.

First, the exhibitors who merged their respective desires for relief from oppressive conditions began with a definite, well established plan. They confined themselves to the big, important phases of the menacing conditions they confronted, and they applied themselves strictly to determining the best and quickest means for eliminating them.

When it became known that a number of exhibitors had formed a co-operative organization the majority opinion throughout the industry was one of scoffing and ridicule. "It won't last." The members were taunted individually. Professional tale bearers lost no opportunity to relate, every time they encountered a member alone, stories of alleged questionable methods and ulterior motives harbored by one or more of the other members.

Warns Against Malicious Gossip.

Similar experiences will befall the exhibitors selected to administer the affairs of a national league. The solution, for the future, as in the past, is the same. Pay no attention whatever to gossip, rumor or vague insinuations affecting the loyalty, integrity and sincerity of any league official. Stick together and resent such tactics as vehemently as you would attack them if they affected an intimate personal friend. Be prepared for gossip and malicious attacks.

Care, discretion and mature consideration should precede the selection of executives for a national league. To them is intrusted the problem of leadership, direction and progress. Once a majority vote has delegated authority of this kind, the only practical and safe policy is for every member to cast his allegiance 100 per cent. to the elected officials, without regard to previous inclinations. First National members have never wavered for an instant in thorough and encouraging support of the executives they have chosen. Every exhibitor in that co-operative group has been staunch and unshakable in personal allegiance.

On to Cleveland—but with individual exhibitor determination to hurdle all petty differences, to allow nothing to halt action on the big, basic dangers which can be overcome only through organization, to grant office to the most capable, and then to be loyal to them as the choice of the majority—thus, every independent exhibitor will create, for himself and for his fellows, an asset beyond value.

Patterson Flouts Rumors That Chicago Postponement Was Diplomatic Strategy

RUMORS which have reached Willard C. Patterson, manager of Sig Samuel's Criterion Theatre at Atlanta, to the effect that the plan which he sought to consummate at his Chicago mass meeting for a concerted national opposition by independent exhibitors against producer operation of theatres, had fallen of its own weight, and that the postponement of definite action until the assembly in Cleveland on June 8 was a bit of diplomatic strategy to cover failure, are ridiculed by him in an outline of the platform he will recommend as the basis on which independent theatre owners can be merged into a national organization.

"An official evidence of sincerity and regard for the opinions of exhibitor absentees," Mr. Patterson declares, "manifest in the willingness of the theatre owners present in Chicago to accept the assurances of various league executives and promoters of the Cleveland meeting that the exhibitor representation there would be more adequate to the purpose, apparently have been perverted to serve ulterior motives from some quarter or other.

What Chicago Wanted.

"We were asked, in Chicago, to form the convention into a permanent organization, with a committee of seventeen which would gather facts in New York, and reconvene the new national unit, with its committee report, in Cleveland, so that out of the various exhibitor alliances which will attend there can be formed a substantial country-wide organization to meet national issues which concern the welfare of independent exhibitors.

"It was further proposed in Chicago, both by the theatre owners who responded to my call for the meeting and by representatives of the state leagues which will meet in Cleveland, that the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, with the members pledged at the Hotel Congress, would constitute an excellent beginning for a new national league.

Who Sponsored the Rumors?

"I do not know who sponsored the rumors, but in comparison to facts they are ridiculous. We are going into Cleveland as an organization, with our accomplishments in Chicago as proof of our determination to get somewhere as a national exhibitor council. We have no politics to play. There is no individual supporting the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America who has any personal ambitions to gratify. There is no one seeking fame, glory or power through executive preference.

"What I want to see come out of the Cleveland meeting—and I am voicing the wish of the great majority of independent exhibitors who were in Chicago on April 26 and 27—is a working body of theatre owners solidly pledged to combat, through co-operation and collective action, the producer-exhibitor menace as the greatest danger confronting us as exhibitors, and prepared in every way to function quickly and efficiently on all other national conditions affecting its members.

Declares for Individual Voting.

"In deciding the question which will be brought before the exhibitors at Cleveland, every theatre owner present should vote on an individual basis, and not through unit expressions. Any form of organization which will permit state league control of a national league will not, in the long run, prove a practical defense body for independent exhibitors. Membership in a national league should be strictly individual, entirely apart from state, city or territorial league affiliations.

"Within their own boundaries state leagues are a wonderfully valuable and essential aid to exhibitor welfare in matters of state concern, but the moment a state league of sufficient size and strength in membership to influence a national league action through group or unit voting attempts to intrude itself as a unit, there will be a measure of domination unavoidable with such a course, and the result will not be progressive. There are countless problems of national significance which only a national league can solve."

"Bury the Hatchet"—Patterson

George Blaisdell,
Moving Picture World:

Committee of seventeen appointed at Chicago meeting was instructed to make report to original Cleveland convention. I do not doubt the sincerity of Rembusch, but think he is making a mistake in calling a second convention unless he has positive information that the Chicago committe would not be recognized on the flood. Independent exhibitors need men of the executive ability of both Rembusch and Cohen. For the good of the cause they should get together.

There are too many problems, both factions will agree, to split now. Let's bury the hatchet and build up one big organization along lines of honesty of purpose. Personally, I have no political ambitions, but will put forth every effort to bring all factions together and help formulate ways and means to protect the independent exhibitor.

Regards.

W. C. PATTERSON.

Poetical Punch Given by Sam Bullock to "Organization Pulmotor" Program

INASMUCH as the necessity for real exhibitor organization is causing all exhibitors to turn their thoughts toward Cleveland, it behooves every independent exhibitor to study well what practical plan of organization he will decide to support with his vote at the convention, for it will be the first national gathering in many years where every bona-fide exhibitor will be his own free agent and as such treated absolutely "on the level," regardless of the size of his theatre or his (or her) investment.

We have proved by bitter experience that the various forces, both within and without the industry, have so far succeeded with their plans because of "class" distinction, self-asserted, within our own exhibitor ranks, though the fact remains that a compact organization of all "classes," from "first-runs" down to "commercials," will alone render the exhibitor immune from most of these attacks and impositions.

The dominant question, therefore, is not merely organization, but:

First, "What plan of organization shall we adopt?"

Second, "How shall it be financed?"

Third, "How shall its finances be safeguarded against grafters and organization wreckers?"

These three essentials have never yet been worked out at any national exhibitor convention heretofore held, but the Cleveland convention offers the opportunity, and the temper of those exhibitors who have expressed their intention to be present indicate that they will stand for no "monkey business" nor camouflaged propositions.

The writer, as chairman of resolutions committee, was primarily responsible for the adoption of the Delmonico resolution when the Chicago Convention consented to merge the Exhibitors' League with the producers—the N. A. M. P. I.—some years ago. It was not a merger. It was a "submerger" and we were submerged. However, organization pulmotors have been working steadily and Cleveland's Lake Erie ozone will quickly restore those not altogether "done for." Let us guard against being "Delmonicoed" again.

At Cleveland no select minority gathering of so-called big exhibitors should be permitted to flash a roll to finance an organization and then claim the paternal right to control it. Such spectacular stunts are "stale stuff" and embarrassing to the "80-per-center" when you must have with you or fail.

Incidentally, the Cleveland convention committee is arranging for the biggest exhibitor gathering ever held and no one is authorized to solicit or accept any financial

Rembusch Sounds Clarion Call for Mass Meeting of Independents in Cleveland

Editor Moving Picture World:

THE Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America was organized at Chicago on April 27 into a permanent national exhibitor body for the single purpose of insisting that producers get out of the theatre business. We are calling a nation-wide meeting of all exhibitors in America to hear the report of our directors at a Cleveland mass meeting opening on June 8 under our auspices and with our officers in charge.

The first order of business will be the report of the committee which had conferences with the producers, and we hope and request that every exhibitor in America be present. We have selected the Hotel Cleveland for our meeting place but will change the location if more suitable to all concerned.

Mr. Black may decide to call a meeting in Cleveland of the old National League for the same week. The more conventions the better because it means more exhibitors at Cleveland. I hope that the two national bodies now existing and the newly proposed organization may blend into one association, but if this is not possible, I wish we may agree to work together along the same lines.

FRANK J. REMBUSCH.

assistance or advertising display of any kind from any producer anywhere, but our services are at their disposal freely to procure hotel reservations or assembly halls at any hotel except the Hotel Winton, which is reserved exclusively for bona-fide independent exhibitors and the trade press.

The "lighter side" of the convention gathering will be well taken care of, of which more anon, except that Ringling Brothers are making a special detour to hit Cleveland on the lake front for the special benefit of the "hicks" from Broadway and the Chicago "Loop" district. And Carpentier, the French scrapper, goes on at League Park on the night of June 7 as an inducement to the "boys" to get here early.

The reservations are coming in
From all along the line,
From Alabam and the Golden Gate
The "boys" are marking time.
From the Texas plains to old Oshkosh
We can hear the rebels yell,
"The second week in June, b'gosh,
My show can guttahell!"

SAM BULLOCK,
Secretary Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association.

Rembusch Favors Separate Conventions, with a Get-Together on the Final Day

ANSWERING various statements directed against myself, please publish these facts. There are three national conventions of exhibitors called for Cleveland, June 8, 9, 10, and 11, to wit: Theatre Owners' Association by Cohen, Independent Picture Exhibitors called together by Patterson and the old National League by Alfred Black. Cohen's organization does not agree with the two others regarding organization policies, therefore I have suggested that each organization be given one day and all go as one body to all three meetings, and on the last day of convention eliminate the three and all join together into one big permanent organization.

Independents want one day to report on their movement to force all producers out of theatre business. The old league after ten years of service is entitled to consideration. These propositions have been wired to Mr. Lustig, chairman of Cleveland Exhibitors, with request for a positive reply, but he gives only evasive answers. Therefore the presumption is they are playing politics.

Charges Advertising Scheme.

Lustig, Bullock, Van Praag and Cohen are leaders of Theatre Owners and expect to control all convention meetings in order to put over their movement, which, as per their contract, is a film advertising scheme that allows them to censor all pictures and control the industrial film business.

Last year they bolted the St. Louis National Convention and have belittled all organization activities except their own during the past year. I predict that they will bolt this year again. Last year they were voted down 200 to 7. They did not submit to a majority last year. Will they this year? They refused to meet the officers of the old organization at Utica for a conciliation.

May Not Attend.

These are simple cold facts, and while they have as much right to go into the film business as anyone else, it is my belief that we will never have a national organization worth while unless it is founded on broad principles without any moneymaking schemes. We have tried expositions, balls, insurance schemes, running trade journals, and this film advertising scheme will bring us grief and disaster same as heretofore.

There are so many angles to this industry and so many wheels in wheels that the right kind of national organization must be entirely free from any moneymaking schemes and supported entirely by cash dues sufficient to function on a big scale.

I have been so ill with tonsilitis that unless I improve rapidly I will not be able to be at Cleveland. My hope is that every exhibitor will go to Cleveland and fight for the right kind of national organization, because you won't get it in any other way. Stay with the meeting and abide with the majority.

Van Praag's attack on me is not unbiased. It is impossible to answer the great amount of mail coming in.

Cleveland exhibitors will have to secure hall large enough for thousands at this rate.

FRANK REMBUSCH.

"Get Together or We Stay Home" Say Thirty Northwest Delegates

THESE two messages, one to the Moving Picture World from the president of the United Theatrical Protective League of the Northwest, and the reply of Sydney S. Cohen, temporary chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to one of the same tenor, are self-explanatory:

Minneapolis, May 25.

Editor Moving Picture World:

AT a meeting of the United Theatrical Protective League of the Northwest held this morning it was unanimously decided that our delegation of thirty from this territory will not leave for Cleveland if there are two meetings or a split of any kind. We realize that a national meeting is very necessary at this time, but petty politics and all other factional fights must be eliminated. If only one meeting is held in Cleveland, we will be there thirty strong.

W. A. STEFFES, President.

W. A. Steffes, President United Theatrical Protective League of the Northwest, Minneapolis:

Convention at Hotel Winton in Cleveland, June 8 to 11, was called in response to decisions of men representing thirty-two states, including your own. Sub-committee of three appointed by chairman of Chicago conference which you attended, consisting of Messrs. Kress, Farley and Van Praag, has reported unanimously in favor of convention at Hotel Winton. We must keep faith with our sister states. Have designated you as member of committee on arrangements and registration, composed of representatives of every organized exhibitors body in the United States.

SYDNEY S. COHEN,
Temporary Chairman Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"Associated" Will Meet in Cleveland During Convention

THE Associated Exhibitors, Inc., will be represented in Cleveland during convention week by an almost 100 per cent. representation of its exhibitor-members—a group of independent theatre men in which is mirrored the ideals behind the independent exhibitors of America.

That Associated intends to fight with and for independent exhibitors is indicated in the fact that it will hold not only a meeting of the board of directors, but also will have convened other members and officers from almost every point in the United States.

Virtually every franchise holder in Associated already has given assurance of attendance. Advices received in New York from F. C. Quimby, general manager of Associated, who recently arrived in Los Angeles, and who expects also to attend the convention, are to the effect that never before in the history of the industry have exhibitors been so aroused over the situation as they are at present. The consensus is that for any real progress to be made politics must be wiped out; each individual

Massachusetts Censorship Bill Lives Despite Adverse Action of Committee

Roll Call Vote of 20 to 15 Rejects Recommendation of Senate Ways and Means Group That Measure "Ought Not to Pass"—Expect Only One More Contest—Bishop Lawrence and Judge Brackett Clash

Boston, May 27, 1920.

Censorship Bill passed to be engrossed by the Senate by a vote of 23 to 13. The increase of three votes for the bill over the third reading was caused by the shift of Senators Churchill of Plymouth, and Tarbell of Worcester, from the opposition, and by the affirmative vote of Senator Martin of Holyoke, who previously was absent before the final vote was taken. Senator Hardy of Huntington, moved that the bill be amended by providing it should become effective only in such cities and town as accept the act by a referendum. The motion was defeated, 22 to 14, after Senators Walsh, Carrick, Knox and McLane characterized it an attempt to defeat the bill.

EFFORTS to "kill" the moving picture censorship bill in Massachusetts failed in the Senate on Monday, May 24, when that body by a roll call vote of 20 to 15 voted against rejecting the measure. This action was taken despite the fact that the Senate Ways and Means Committee had recommended that the bill "ought not to pass."

A bitter debate in the Senate preceded the voting. Senators charged that among the lobbyists for the bill is a member of the Department of Public Safety, the board to be vested with censorship powers. Senators pleaded that there are plenty of laws covering the situation now; they urged self-government for cities, and they warned that in a few years true moral reformers will become tired of administering the censorship law and that it will then fall into the hands of "grafters."

Debate was opened by Senator Curran, of Boston, member of the Ways and Means Committee, who said the proposed law is unnecessary because laws are now on the statutes penalizing persons giving immoral or objectionable entertainments. He told of forty pictures shown in Boston characterized as immoral by the supporters of the present legislation. These same forty pictures, Senator Curran said, are on the screen in Pennsylvania, which has a censorship law.

Senator George H. Carrick, of Cambridge, said that censorship is desired by the Children's Mission, the Cambridge Neighborhood Club, the Methodist Church, Bishop Lawrence, President Lowell of Harvard, the Episcopal Church, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, various women's clubs, the suffrage clubs.

Senator Quinn, of Swampscott, opposed the bill. He declared that an agent of the Department of Public Safety, to which the censorship would be given, was lobbying against the bill in the Senate. "What kind of censorship could we expect from an organization of that kind?" he asked.

Any senator who would stand up and vote against the bill is "crazy," declared Senator John Jackson Walsh, of Boston. He said that there are men in the picture business who would exhibit in public nude women for a price. He argued there should be no protection in the law for the moral scavenger.

"To listen to some of the arguments here one would think that a representative form of government had gone by," said Senator Hardy, of Huntington, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. "This bill is designed to place a conservator over the people; to create an office to be filled by one man who will tell all the people of this state what they shall see and hear and read and think. I protest against it as an unwarranted centralization of authority which takes away from cities and towns their right to govern themselves as they see fit."

"This bill," said Senator Griswold, of Greenfield, "provides that there shall be a censorship board, but the bill is so drawn that the censor may reject a film, although it does not say he shall. This bill sets up a principle opposed to the bill of rights."

Senator Hardy, of Fitchburg, member of the Ways and Means Committee, declared: "I don't want any person to tell me or my family what we may see in the moving pictures. Censorship resolves into a matter of difference of opinion. I hope we will not make any more laws that will take power away from cities and towns. There is altogether too much centralization legislation going around."

On the standing vote on the question of rejecting the bill, the vote was 14 Yes, 18 No. On the roll call the vote was 15 Yes, 20 No.

BISHOP WILLIAM LAWRENCE of the Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts entered the battle in that state over a motion picture censorship bill by appearing before the Senate Ways and Means Committee at a public hearing in the State House, Boston, May 19. Arguing in favor of the measure, the Bishop scathingly attacked the so-called "sex films."

Judge J. Albert Brackett, who is handling the case for the opponents of the bill took up the challenge by introducing a letter written by the churchman in 1918 indorsing a "sex film" and a newspaper interview in which Bishop Lawrence said there is value in showing sex problems in order to prevent the spread of the social evil.

To Benjamin Green, then manager of the Strand Theatre, Chelsea, Bishop Lawrence wrote: "I saw the film 'Damaged Goods' with Dr. Mahoney and others. I indorse Dr. Mahoney's letter on the subject, although I should be ready to put the age limit at sixteen years."

Dr. F. X. Mahoney, Health Commissioner of Boston at the time, had written Mr. Green as follows: "After seeing the film 'Damaged Goods,' as shown in the Department of the State Police, I will say that I saw nothing which, in my opinion, should not allow the film to be displayed to the public."

"'Damaged Goods,'" Judge Brackett said, "is one of the films that the proponents of the bill have cited in arguing that a censorship law is necessary."

Bishop Lawrence, speaking first, said: "It has been a matter of surprise to me to find the sentiment that I have found in favor of some sort of examination of motion pictures for the protection not only of the younger people but of adults as well. There is no such appeal from thousands of people for the censorship of the newspapers as there is for regulation of the motion picture, and it seems to me that the latter is our job just now.

Represents "Moral Sentiment."

"Those who are here and those who are on the list presented by Mr. Clark (Preston Clark handling the case of the proponents) represent the moral sentiment of the people. They are waking up to the great influence of the movies. People may argue that mothers and heads of families who are most concerned with the effects of the movies upon their children should complain to the local authorities, and the fact that they have not done so goes to prove that there is nothing to complain about.

"Well, let us take the case of a poor working woman in a big industrial city. Her daughter is going perpetually to the movies and occasionally getting stained by what she sees there. Now, it must be manifest that the mother is not going to leave her work and go off to see the mayor or chief of police. But if there is in existence a well ordered, legal committee to duly consider these things for the public and talk these things out with the managers of the movies, then we will have the result of steady improvement, with the possibility of 100 per cent. of the people going to the movies instead of 90 per cent.

"Personally, I do not go to the movies as often as I want to because I am afraid of getting caught with a play that I don't want to be seen at, and I never know what the play is going to be.

"The movie is very different from the regular theatre play in this, that you can tell about the latter from the advertising and from the comments made about it during the course of its appearance, which usually runs over a period of at least two or three weeks. In the case of the movies a very excellent play may be advertised, but then in between may be put something that may spoil the whole performance, and you have no way of knowing anything about it in advance.

"There is danger of demoralization of the youth from this condition. It is not the picturing of open vice that does the damage, for that simply disgusts people. The pictures which injures is not indecent, it is not obscene, it is not filthy, but it is put on in such a spectacular way that it appeals to the imagination, and before they know it the boy or girl has been caught up in the principles for which the particular movie stands and their moral sense blunted or a bit degraded. They do not know it, but they have gone one step down in their moral character. That boy or girl cannot be protected today because they do not know what they are going to see."

Let Mothers Guard Morals of Young.

Representatives of the State Motion Picture Committee, various women's clubs and the State Grange followed Bishop Lawrence in favor of the bill.

The first speaker for the opponents was Representative Frank B. Phinney, of Boston, who declared that the bill is a danger to democracy. "It is un-American and undemocratic," he said. "Only two countries —Russia and Germany—have tried censorship. We do not want to follow in the footsteps of either of them."

Representative George W. Webster, one of the members of the lower house who voted against the measure, said that the placing of a censorship in the hands of a small group would give them an autocratic and political power. He did not believe that a majority of the women of the state favored the bill and he himself was willing that the women should guard the morals of the children rather than have the power vested in such a board.

Judge Brackett Sums Up.

"You can't satisfy every one so long as two people have individual minds," declared Judge Brackett in summing up for the opponents. "If you pass this bill you are going to throttle an industry."

Judge Brackett then told of the differences of opinion over Mary Pickford's "Poor Little Rich Girl." "The exhibitor must be protected by some sane law," he continued. "He has the right to know what he can purchase and show. The courts can determine what is vicious, what is moral, etc. Do not let a board of censorship usurp the power and the rights of the courts. The reformers blame all childish folly on to the moving pictures. Why, when I was ten years old I read a dime novel and then started off for the West.

"I guess we all have played Indian. Yet a woman came here from Malden, claiming she was a social settlement worker, and said she saw a child with a mask and that the child got the idea from a motion picture. You can't trace crimes to the pictures. The place to regulate children is in the homes. Don't children get wrong ideas in the dance halls on the streets and elsewhere? I don't think it is fair to attribute every wrong a child does to the motion pictures."

Senators Nod Approval.

Senators who had been listening gravely to Judge Brackett nodded their heads in approval as he continued: "Are you going to entertain the great masses of people with travelogues? Do they want namby-pamby films? Of course they don't. If you try to do that you will interfere with attendance. There will be no more interest in the movies. People will become bored and stop going.

"The Pennsylvania censorship law which is held up here as an example cannot be compared to the law presented in this state. But even in Pennsylvania they even censor the topics of the day and the pictures of current events, but the people see the same words and pictures in the newspapers."

"The people want something and they get it; that's the idea, isn't it?" broke in Senator Harding, with a smile.

"Why, certainly," said Judge Brackett.

"That's the whole story," replied the Senator. "This bill would deprive people of what they want."

Holds Bill Unconstitutional.

Judge Brackett told of the situation in Ohio. "There are two phases to this question," he continued. "You can't settle it by law because its ethical. What is being done in Massachusetts? Paid women lobbyists have been at the heels of every legislator since the session started. If these people have so much reform in their breasts, why don't they try by the laws we have at present to stop the films they complain about? I'll tell you why: because even their attorneys know they haven't a case to obtain a conviction. That's the truth. It seems a pitiful thing to say that our laws are not enforced. Suppose some boys broke into the homes of some of these reformers. Wouldn't they go to the law? Would they stop to argue? Would they say it is nobody's business? No.

"Now, you've got to make some changes in this bill if it's to become a law. There is no redress in the courts for its violation." Judge Brackett indicated that it could not be held to be constitutional. He told of the laws already on the statute books—the license laws by which improper films can be stopped. He declared there was no necessity for the proposed censorship bill.

As Judge Brackett concluded the senatorial committeemen nodded their heads in approval.

Michael J. Lyden, ten years a motion picture exhibitor, with three theatres in Greater Boston, told how the exhibitor is always eager to cater to the public and give it what it wants. He told of ridiculous cuts made by the Pennsylvania censors in "The Miracle Man."

While A. J. Casey, Boston's city censor, was registering the disapproval of Mayor Peters of the bill he was asked by Senator Harding if it wasn't true that "fellows at fifty like to tell the youngster of twenty-one what he ought to do and what he ought not to do." "That's right," said Mr. Casey.

The hearing was on the point of being closed when the proponents again wanted to give some more testimony. Miss Amy Wood, secretary of the motion picture committee, spoke briefly.

Then Miss Hilda A. Headstrome, of the committee, began an attack on Mr. Leyden for pointing to the war work of the industry. She said the proponents would be glad to see the bill referred to a referendum of the people. When she spoke of "paid lobbyists of the motion picture industry" Judge Brackett interrupted to say: "You are always careless with facts; we have no paid lobbyists."

Next Judge Brackett disputed her statement that the dance hall license law was put on the statutes without a precedent. Further, he disagreed with her intimation that he had misquoted the stenographic report of a previous hearing. Judge Brackett declined to keep up correcting her "misstatements" all night and the hearing was closed.

Death Ends Career of Hal Reid, Active Playwright, Player and Screen Writer

At his home in West New York, N. J., Saturday night, May 22, James Hallock Reid, well known under his professional name, Hal Reid, died in his fifty-seventh year. He had been for a long time ill, but his condition did not become alarming until a few days before his death.

His son, Wallace Reid, known to screen fame as a Famous Player-Lasky star, two other sons, a daughter and a widow survive the deceased. Interment was held in the Old Stone Church Cemetery, Highlands, N. J., morning of May 25.

Started as Stage Personality.

Hal Reid won his way on the legitimate stage in the days when melodrama flourished and verile actors made bold strokes in depicting heroic roles. He applied himself to playwriting, after several seasons as an actor, and from his pen fell several plays that were conspicuous successes in their day.

Of these "Human Hearts" was a remarkable example. For years that play toured the country playing big towns and little with unvarying success and when films began to absorb public attention and stage dramas of the "thriller" type waned "Human Hearts" was made into photoplay going on into even smaller places than it had visited as a stage offering.

Took Sensational Thaw Films.

In February, 1914, Mr. Reid "broke into" film-notoriety most sensationally. Harry Thaw, the murderer who has gained what may well be termed "renown" by his ability to dodge the executioner; had just escaped from Mattewan, a New York State Hospital for criminal insane. Thaw fled toward Canada, but was apprehended in New Hampshire.

Thaw's legion of lawyers found a way to quibble in court and Hal Reid was there with his camera when, in Concord, N. H., a Federal Court Judge took under advisement the murderer's standing in law. The Thaw case was "hot news," and Reid's film was exploited with an expediency that created a sensation in filmdom.

Lately Produced "The Confession."

Later on Reid was connected with various film enterprises and concerns. His last occupation was in writing and producing "The Confession," a feature still circulating under direction of the National Film Corporation, of which Joe Brandt is general manager. For a long time Reid worked with Brandt in promoting and exploiting "The Confession" in territory where it played.

Bunk Breath of Life to Showmanship, But It Must Be Adequately Backed Up

Certain Amount of Faking Perfectly Good Form, Says Bennett—Hit Them in the Eye and Forget Ad Borders

By WHITMAN BENNETT

IN the years since I left the advertising and press agency end of the show business there has come about one great change. The occupation is undoubtedly more respectable—and undoubtedly less amusing and less imaginative.

In fact, it seems to me that many of the boys are sitting in their nice offices behind their big desks working so hard at figures and routine they are really no longer press agents at all. They have forgotten how to burn incense to the natural god of all showmen—old Mr. Bunk.

Those of us who are on the level with ourselves all know that Bunk is the soul and germ of showmanship. In one generation he appears in the guise of Mr. Phineas T. Barnum and in another generation as "America's greatest producer." It is not only the advertising end of the show business to which a certain amount of bunk is as the breath of life, but the whole show business itself to the very core. There is, for artists, the bunk of making the public imagine you are an ingenue, or a villain, or a wonderful hero; for the manager, the bunk of persuading audiences they really see what they expected to see (this is where the press agent also comes in), and, for the promoter, the bunk of being sure of success. In the picture business there also appears to be a new and fascinating bunk, which grows in the district of high finance.

Bunk Does Not Mean Cheating.

By bunk I do not refer to cheating. The real art is to have the bunk and then be able to back it up; the touch of boastful, romantic something that was in the heart of D'Artagnan should also be in the soul of every true showman. A certain amount of faking (lying is such a harsh word) is perfectly good form. Why, even the camera does it with all its fake exposures! The fine art of story-telling for the advantage of the public which so dearly loves to be "strung along" should not be entirely forgotten. Let us not forget an art which newspapers did not hesitate to foster and which so many good fellows helped to create.

It seems to me the best "stunt" I ever knew was that of the Hippodrome press agent who took an elephant down to Coney Island and then backed him into the water. He sent for the newspaper men and, showing them the elephant in the water, said he was a Hippodrome elephant who had come this far on his morning swim. Obviously, the elephant had swum over to the Island, as otherwise his head would be turned in the other direction.

It Was a Mighty Good Yarn, Anyway.

Now, it is not to be presumed that all the newspaper men seriously believed that story—said elephant having been taken to Coney on the boat, of course—but it made a mighty good yarn and the papers all carried it. The simplicity of this has always appealed to me more than any of my own endeavors in the days when I was general press agent for the Shuberts; even more than the famous Anna Held milk baths or the time when they put tanbark before what is now the Republic Theatre so that the delicate Mrs. Pat Campbell shouldn't be troubled during rehearsals by the sound of passing vehicles. The more you know about Mrs. Campbell the more this story will appeal to you.

Of course, you could no longer press-agent Trilby by having a hypnotized girl wander around the country (this was actually done), and perhaps that real genius, the late Willie Hammerstein, would no longer, if alive, be able to manufacture his sensations first and put them on in vaudeville the week following. White paper is scarce and the war, however much it helped faking by cable, reduced local news to very restricted limits. But the world is swinging back to normal, and you can't convince me that the public has lost its taste for a good yarn and that editors will not print ingenious inventions—especially if they like the inventors and are confident there will be no bad comebacks afterward.

At a recent weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Whitman Bennett talked of the press agent and his problems.

As Mr. Bennett, before he became a director of production and later an independent producer, had enjoyed a wide experience as a publicizing showman, he brought to his subject a knowledge and a perspective out of the ordinary. The Moving Picture World felt the story sent out by the association was too skeletonized to do Mr. Whitman justice. Accordingly it requested the producer to outline it in writing for the benefit of our subscribers. He complied, and here it is, minus even a trace of blue pencil. We are sure all showmen will agree with us it is well worth reading. . .

A truly ingeniously advertised film is so rare that it is a nine days' wonder. It may be true that whereas the managers have millions for "magazines of national circulation" they have nothing in expense allowances; and it may be true that the head press agent, instead of having his time to think out good stunts, is wrapped up in financial budgets concerning advertising appropriations. If this is indeed the case, then it is up to the press agents to fight with their bosses until they see the light.

Get Flash and Forget Ad's Border.

Just let the advertising motion picture manager—no matter how financial his upbringing—get one taste of the blood of really good individualized feature advertising and he will need no further argument to be completely converted. The matter can even be argued in the language of the budget expert—it is a case of less for general trade-mark advertising and more for specific merchandising.

The first big press agent who will say to himself each night as he creeps into his trundle-bed, "How can I get a flash that will hit them in the eye?" and forget all about the border of his next advertisement for the XYZ Monthly Ladies' Boudoir, will just be bound to make a big hit.

Picture Theatres the Biggest Advertisers.

For the picture business—at the same time that the technique of picture-making is growing further and further from stage producing—is growing to be more and more of a show business. In most towns the picture theatres today are not less important than the legitimate theatres, but more important and bigger advertisers in the newspapers. The old cry of the picture press agent, that he has no theatre to work from, is out of date.

It is true that much of the work must be locally by the picture exhibitors, but, then, that is only the problem of handing him the right ammunition. I met an awfully big bunch of exhibitors in Chicago recently, and, believe me, they are showmen to a greater extent than the New York financiers who own the big companies. Perhaps they used to be dubs—but no more. Give them the right examples in the trade papers and in the hints you mail to them and in the character of the lithography and see how they'll turn to and make things hum!

Business Methods Menace to Ingenuity.

I don't want the press agents of today to imagine that I am taking exception to their work. I suppose if I were still in the game I would be the worst offender of the bunch. But, being out of that department of the work, I have a better perspective; and it seems to me that the creeping paralysis of too much business methods, which is becoming such a menace to the producing work, is also having its effect on the advertising work. A bunch of us are ready to fight Mr. Big Business in producing. A bunch of press agents should take on the same argument. It's sure to be a lot of fun—and without fun the jolly face of Mr. Bunk fades out in a soft-focus longshot.

I love the picture business and the show business, and if they abolished pictures and shows and the only thing left to do was to run an old-time medicine show I had rather do that than be a broker in Wall Street.

Wilstach Showman of First Water.

Some of you will remember the late Claxton Wilstach, than whom there was no finer gentleman in the show business. For many years Claxton was the manager of Sothern and Marlowe's companies, and he used to stand in the lobby wearing a full managerial evening suit plus a high hat. Also, he wore, I think, real gloves on opening nights. One evening, some years ago, I was at Coney Island and went into a diving Venus show. And there was Claxton Wilstach, not as a spectator, but as the presiding officer of the place. At the moment I entered he was giving the "lecture" —about the six most beautiful girls of Coney Island, etc., and I think he had in a neat allusion to Venus arising from the sea. He was delivering this lecture in a good, resounding voice, and obviously enjoyed it. I took a seat in the front row. Mr. Wilstach gave me a funny look, but went right on spieling.

Later I learned that the regular lecturer was ill and Wilstach had decided to do the job himself, because he happened to have an interest in the show.

Instead of being ashamed, he was having the time of his life. THAT, gentlemen, was a showman. I don't doubt but what he would have been just as willing to "bark" on the sidewalk. And, believe me, it must have been a great relief from Shakespeare.

It's a wonderful game to keep our feet on the ground, hold fast to a sense of humor and have no respect for any kind of business but honest, industrious, imaginative show business. The moment we try to play the financier's game we are the losers. At our own game, if we stick to it, nobody can touch us.

I've often wished that I could be the press agent of the Winter Garden again just for a week—but I suppose I should botch the job if it came my way. It does not betoken any lack of appreciation for really artistic things—pictures or plays. As a matter of fact, I fear I'm something of a production highbrow. But, highbrow or lowbrow, let's never completely forget MR. BUNK, for the dear public loves him and Heaven knows we need him in our business.

Again The World Warns Exhibitors to Beware of Photoplay Slide Salesmen

EARL M. FORSYTHE, of the Star Theatre, Canonsburg, Pa., writes the Moving Picture World that a salesman representing himself as from the office of this paper has sold a number of Canonsburg merchants a set of photoplay star cards carrying a line of advertising for his house in return for the Star Theatre showing for thirty days a slide bearing the names of the business men.

Manager Forsythe Misinformed.

"Within the past week three of these same merchants have taken the writer to task for an alleged misrepresentation of the scheme on the part of your representative," writes Mr. Forsythe. "It seems from their statements that your man told the merchants that they were to have a separate slide thrown on our screen for a period of thirty days. I would hardly have believed the statement had not three of those who went into the scheme came to me personally and made their complaint.

"I feel that it is due you to know that your man is making such misleading statements and not only injuring your company and himself but is working a game that is strictly against my principles as an exhibitor and am sure would not be countenanced for a moment by any exhibitor. Better get after him at once."

Fraud and Misrepresentation.

Mr. Forsythe is assured that if any person represented himself as a seller of slides and having any connection with this paper that person is a fraud. In our issue of March 27, on page 2092, we exposed the work of two solicitors who had been operating in Cleveland. These persons presented cards bearing close typographical resemblance to those carried by representatives of Moving Picture World, except it was "Motion" instead of Moving. The address of the "Motion" Picture World was given as Suite 511 Hartford Building, Chicago.

Where in the first instance there was indicated an intention to play upon the business prestige of the Moving Picture World, the occurrence reported by Mr. Forsythe cannot be characterized merely as misrepresentation. We have no direct evidence the offenders in the first instance are the same parties as are those complained of by Mr. Forsythe, but there is strong circumstantial evidence that they are, not the least of which is a blank presented to possible customers in Cleveland two lines of which read: "This is to certify that we agree to run the above slide for a term of 30 days" and signed at the bottom "Motion Picture World."

The Moving Picture World has but one authorized traveling representative, Nat Bregstein, and he is not concerned in slides or any other business that is not directly connected with the publishing of a trade paper.

If any exhibitors are approached by or have knowledge of the operations of any persons in a way similar to that described by Mr. Forsythe they will confer a favor on this paper by notifying it immediately by wire.

Christie Completes First Two Comedies To Be Released by Educational Company

SCORES of congratulations were received during the past week by E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation, on acquiring the distribution of Christie Comedies. Many of these inquired the dates of the first release.

Under the contract signed with Charles H. Christie, representing his company, Educational is to distribute all of the two-reel Christie Comedies, but will handle none of those already released. Work on the new product was started at the time that the Educational and Christie companies came to an agreement, with the result that two of the comedies have been completed. The whole effort of the studios have been centered on these productions, made under the personal direction of Al E. Christie and with the entire talent of the Christie forces.

"Kiss Me, Caroline" will be the first of these. Bobby Vernon is the featured player while the cast includes Neal Burns, Vera Stedman, Teddy Sampson, a number of other well-known players and the Christie Follies Girls. "A Seaside Siren" is the second production, this featuring Fay Tincher with an equally notable supporting cast and introducing the Christie Bathing Girls in costumes suitable for the warm season. The settings of both of these pictures are promised as unusually elaborate and a large footage was taken to insure the very pick of the product.

Production at the Christie studios is so far advanced that there will be no trouble in providing one of these two-reel comedies every two weeks. Vernon and Miss Tinches will be featured in a number of them, while still others will be presented by all-star casts. Colleen Moore is yet to appear in two more of the Christie Comedies, having been devoting a portion of her time recently to feature roles in Marshall Neilan productions.

"Kiss Me, Caroline," which is scheduled for release the week of July 4, will be the initial offering through Educational.

Cleveland Newspaper Contest Keeps Fans Watching Screens

THE Cleveland Press has inaugurated in its motion picture department an idea that seems to be interesting to its readers. The paper asked that the photoplays be watched for errors of stars and directors and report them. The first batch printed were the following:

Eugene O'Brien picks up a canvass he has been painting, puts it under his arm, and walks off with it in "The Broken Melody." It's a wonderful climate where paint dries so quickly.

Bill Farnum recovers a box of rifles from a wreck and floats it ashore in "Wings of the Morning." I thought rifles were heavier than that.

Norma Talmadge pours tea for guests in "She Loves and Lies" but she doesn't offer them any sugar or cream, and none of her guests seemed to notice it. But many in the audience did.

A fellow buys shoes, a suit and a straw hat for $5 in "Checkers." I wonder where?

Wanda Hawley rides in Wallace Reid's car in "Double Speed." She wears a little hat when she climbs in the car, and an automobile bonnet when she climbs out.

The idea is not new but is effective.

Canada Abolishes Onerous Reel Tax; Heavily Increases Annual License Fees

MOVING picture exhibitors of Canada have received with jubilation the news from Ottawa, the Canadian capital, that the reel tax has been abolished by the federal government. The announcement was contained in the annual budget speech before the House of Commons by Sir Henry Drayton, Federal Minister of Finance, when he presented the national estimates and tariff amendments on Tuesday, May 18. Sir Henry announced that the repeal of the reel tax would take effect on the following day.

The exhibitors were apparently extremely fortunate in securing this concession from the government, because a heavy excise tax has been imposed on many articles of merchandise, and all manufacturers, jobbers and importers of manufactured articles have been called upon to pay a 1 per cent. sales tax, which is not to be passed to retailers.

Only One Other Tax Reduction.

Practically the only other tax reduction arranged by the Minister of Finance consisted of the abolishment of a special war duty of 7½ per cent. which had been collected on numerous commodities which are imported. Various so-called luxuries have been hard hit by taxes of from 10 to 20 per cent. which are to be paid by consumers at time of purchase.

The abolishment of the reel tax of 15 cents a reel a day was due entirely to the request which was laid before Sir Henry Drayton last fall by a deputation of moving picture theatre men representing the exhibitor associations in Ontario, Manitoba and Quebec. These officials gave facts and figures to show how the theatre business in Canada is being taxed from all angles, and it was also shown that the reel tax had proved to be an excessive burden for the small theatre owner.

Amendment Clauses Confuse.

After a long conference, Sir Henry practically assured the delegation that the tax would be repealed. That deputation included J. C. Brady and Thomas Scott, of Toronto, representing the Moving Picture Exhibibitors' Protective Association of Ontario; George Graham, Winnipeg, president of the Manitoba Exhibitors' Association; W. M. Gladish, of Ottawa, and several others.

Much confusion has arisen among the business men of the Dominion regarding the interpretation of many of the amendment clauses presented by Sir Henry and the exact extent of some of the tax features has not been defined. It is understood, however, that the importers of moving picture films from all other countries will be called upon to pay the 1 per cent. sales tax on these importations.

May Tax Distributers.

Intimation was made by the Minister of Finance several months ago that the federar government would collect something from the importers and distributers of films to replace the reel tax that would be abolished. The good news regarding the abolishment of the reel tax was released in time for the convention of Ontario exhibitors, which was scheduled to be held in Toronto late in May.

License Fees Increased

Peter Smith, Provincial Treasurer of Ontario, has announcd heavy increases in the annual license fees for moving picture theatres and exchanges and for the censoring of moving pictures for presentation in Ontario. Traveling film shows, operators' license fees and other features of the moving picture business are also affected, and it is interesting to note that the provincial increases were announced practically simultaneously with the news that the federal government had abolished the reel tax.

The new scale for theatre license is as follows: On theatres in municipalities of 10,000 or more the new tax is 35 cents a seat a year, as compared with the former rate of 25 cents a seat. In municipalities of 5,000 to 10,000 theatres will pay 25 cents a seat instead of 20 cents. Municipalities between 3,000 and 5,000 will pay 20 cents a seat in place of the flat rate of $75 for the whole theatre; municipalities of 1,500 to 3,000, 15 cents a seat instead of the old flat rate of $50. In municipalities of less than 1,500 the charge has been fixed at 10 cents in lieu of a fee that had been fixed by the Provincial Treasurer for individual cases.

Exchanges Hard Hit.

The film exchanges doing business in Ontario are hard hit in that exchange license fees and censorship charges are doubled. The exchanges will now pay $400 a year instead of $200, and they will pay $4 a reel for the censorship of pictures instead of $2. Licenses for traveling moving picture shows are increased from $200 to $300. Vaudeville acts will pay a fee of $1 whether they play one night or fifty-two weeks within Ontario.

Moving picture operators will now pay a fee of $15 for their examinations, which is an increase of $7, and $5 for the annual renewal of the license in place of $3.

It is also announced that patriotic or charity entertainments of all kinds will now be required to pay regular fees. This will cover moving picture shows in churches and elsewhere, it is understood.

The changes are due to come into effect when theatre licenses become renewable for the year in June, the new scale being made effective by order in council and not by amendment of the theatres and cinematographs' act by the provincial Legislature.

No Increased Admission Prices.

Early comment by the exhibitors of Toronto indicated that the new provincial fees would not bring a raise in admission prices at the theatres. Clarence Robson, manager of the Regent and Strand theatres, announced that the fee increases would likely not cause any material difference in prices of admission. It was also pointed out that the heavy increase for the exchanges would not affect the theatres to any great extent and no raising of admission prices would result from this cause.

Roden Resigns from Universal

Robert F. Roden, assistant to John C. Brownell, Universal's scenario chief, has resigned to devote his time to the writing of original stories, continuities and reconstruction work. His resignation was reluctantly accepted.

Roden has been in the moving picture field for several years. He has been with Universal for the last ten months. Previously he was a newspaper special writer and a bibliographer.

Rosalie Ashton Writing for Spitz

Rosalie Ashton, continuity writer and playwright, is now engaged on a series of special stories for Eugene Spitz, independent producer, with studios at 361 West 125th street and 219 East 124th street. According to Mr. Spitz's announcement, Miss Ashton is writing a special production which he will produce within the near future and also preparing material for a series of short productions.

American Films Practically Unknown in Balkan States, Says A. J. Xydias

By C. S. SEWELL

THERE are practically no American films being exhibited in the Balkan States or Turkey, the only ones I saw on an extended and thorough trip through this section of the world being a Sessue Hayakawa picture in Constantinople, a Fox feature in Bucharest, and 'Intolerance' in Athens," says Anthony J. Xydias, who has returned to America after a visit to these countries made especially to study film conditions.

"After visiting all the theatres of prominence, as well as many of the smaller ones, I found that American films are almost unknown. This was also practically true of Italy at the time of my visit, during September and October, as not a single theatre in Milan, Rome, Venice or Naples was showing an American picture, and my information is to the effect that less than two per cent. of the pictures shown in Italy are of American make.

"In Greece, about twenty-five per cent. of the films are French and seventy-five per cent. Italian, and practically all of the pictures shown in Constantinople as well as in Roumania and the remainder of the Balkans, as well as in Turkey in Asia, are of Italian make. American stars are very little known to the picture fans, a majority of whom have never even heard of Charlie Chaplin."

Low Prices for Films.

Mr. Xydias' investigation leads him to the conclusion that this is due to the very low prices, based on American standards, that are paid for pictures. Three or four hundred dollars is all that can be obtained for the rights to the average five-reel feature for one or two of these countries, which is less than many first run houses in the United States pay for a few days' showing. And at the present time this condition is made worse by the prevailing exchange rates.

Distribution methods, Mr. Xydias believes, are largely responsible for this situation, as film exchanges are practically unknown. It is true that Gaumont and Pathe have exchanges in Athens but a great majority of the distribution is handled on an entirely different basis. A prominent theatre will buy a print outright, and after showing will sublease it to the smaller houses, obtaining altogether probably from thirty to sixty days' booking at $10 to $15 each.

Week showings prevail even in the smaller houses, as the large theatres run pictures for a week, and the little fellow has to hold on to the picture he has until the big exhibitor has finished his run.

Rentals Based on Footage.

"Society stories appear to be the best liked, although there is a substantial demand for the kind of films that would probably not pass the censors in America," says Mr. Xydias. "Features must not run over five reels or comedies over one reel. As the rental price is based on so much a foot, the exhibitor does not want any extra footage. He will not use a two-reel comedy, but wants it confined to one reel. Neither does a six or seven reel feature appeal to him.

Nothwithstanding the prevailing method of distribution, Mr. Xydias believes that an exchange supplying the Balkan states with American films could be made to pay. He considers Constantinople would be the best location, as all of the principal cities of this section are readily accessible by rail or water routes.

The best of the Balkan states from a picture standpoint is Roumania, with about 150 theatres, about 50 of which are located in Bucharest. Greece has about 35 and Turkey the same, the majority being in Constantinople. There are about a dozen in Bulgaria, six being in Sofia, and the same condition exists in Serbia. Lack of coal has proved to be a great handicap for the exhibitors.

Most of the houses are of the store-front type, but in the larger cities there are large houses, usually converted opera houses, which, though first class in many respects, would utterly fail to pass the fire standards of American cities. All classes of patronage are attracted, and there are three classes of admissions—first, second and third. The cheapest seats, third class, are nearest the screen, and are not upholstered; the second class seats are of cane, while the first class seats are heavily upholstered. The men in the audiences keep their hats on and smoke continually during the performances. The average prices range from 25 cents to $1 for admission.

Anthony J. Xydias
Who has just returned from Europe, where he studied conditions in the Balkan States and Turkey.

Employes Are Tip Hounds.

The continental system of tipping prevails in all of these countries, and when you enter a theatre you must expect to tip at least twenty-five per cent. of your admission price, if not more. You tip to be shown to your seat, you tip for a program, and for various other things, and if you don't tip, you are liable to have the usher turn a flashlight on you so that everyone can see you are a "cheap skate," says Mr. Xydias.

From our standpoint the projection is bad, but this is due largely to the absence of importation of machines during the war. All of the machines are of French or German manufacture and have seen better days.

Managers Read the World.

One thing that particularly impressed Mr. Xydias was the fact that in practically every one of the leading theatres in the Italian cities as well as Constantinople, Athens, Bucharest, Sofia, Belgrade and other points, he found copies of the Moving Picture World in the theatre managers' offices.

Mr. Xydias' wife accompanied him, and, as noted in our issue of July 26, before he sailed, he made this trip to visit his parents, now residing in Constantinople, and also to make a study at first hand of film conditions with a view of exporting pictures to the Balkan states. Although the outlook is not particularly encouraging, he has decided to try out this market, and has established the Balkan-American Film Exporting Company, with offices in Room 518 Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, and will handle films, machines and accessories.

Economic conditions, transportation, hotels, etc., were in bad shape, but he found many things of interest and is glad that he made the trip. He reports that he did not have the slightest trouble in visiting any of the countries he desired, thanks to his United States passport, which acted as an open sesame, although it was sometimes annoying to be awakened two or three times in one night to have his passport revised by some official.

Grainger Making Fast Trip to Los Angeles and Return

WHAT will probably prove a record in the way of "flying trips" for film men between California and New York in the itinerary of J. R. Grainger, Eastern representative of Marshall Neilan Productions, who left Grand Central Station on the evening of Wednesday, May 19, to spend a few hours in Los Angeles and take the next train back to New York.

Mr. Grainger goes to the West Coast to consult with Mr. Neilan and obtain his signature to a contract which involves the picturization of a famous story of international prominence. This is made necessary by the stipulations in an option on this story held by the Neilan organization and which expires May 29. Mr. Grainger will spend seventeen hours in Los Angeles.

Although the title of the story is not made public, it was stated at the New York offices of the Neilan organization that the subject is a popular novel of international popularity which has had several elaborate stage presentations here and abroad during the past twenty years. Mr. Neilan plans to produce the story in the very near future, taking scenes in several Eastern localities in the United States and then staging the major part of the plot abroad when he arrives there next August. Marion Fairfax will prepare the script.

The story will be the first big film of this kind ever attempted by Marshall Neilan, and as soon as the details are finally settled full particulars are promised.

Archainbaud Back from Miami

George Archainbaud, who recently signed a long-term contract to direct exclusively for Selznick Pictures Corporation, has returned from a month's visit to Miami and the Bahamas, where he directed the filming of exterior scenes for "Marooned Hearts," featuring Zena Keefe and Conway Tearle, according to an announcement this week.

Lillian Gish Leaves David W. Griffith to Star for Frohman Amusement Company

LILLIAN GISH, who during her entire screen career appeared under the direction of David W. Griffith, has severed her connections with the Griffith organization and signed a contract with the Frohman Amusement Corporation to star in productions to be made by that company for a period of three years. This announcement has upset a tradition which was commonly accepted to be irrevocable, namely, that Miss Gish would during the balance of her screen career appear solely under the Griffith management.

The severance of her business relationship with the Griffith organization was determined upon only after numerous conferences between Albert Gray, representing both Mr. Griffith and Miss Gish, and William L. Sherill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. In face of the liberal offer made by Mr. Sherrill and the advantageous terms of the contract, Mr. Griffith did not feel that he was justified in standing in the star's way of acquiring a fortune. He felt that her ability as one of the greatest living dramatic ingenues should be capitalized to her benefit and this could best be done by having her star alone in extraordinary attractions.

Miss Gish's Biography.

Miss Gish was born at Springfield, Ohio, in 1895, and inaugurated her stage career in 1902. In 1912 she was engaged by Mr. Griffith for the Biograph stock and went with him to Reliance-Majestic and Fine Arts. Hers was the featured part in every big Griffith production and exhibitors and the public associate her great ability and marked services with "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World," "The Great Love," "The Greatest Thing in Life," "Romance of Happy Valley," "True Heart Susie," "The Greatest Question" and "Broken Blossoms." It was this last production that once and for all established Miss Gish as a star of the first magnitude.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation will produce only special productions in which Miss Gish is to be starred, and the entire investiture will be in keeping with the star's reputation. There will be no more than five productions a year, the first production to be commenced between August 1 and August 15 of this year, after the completion of Miss Gish's services in "Way Down East," now nearing completion under Mr. Griffith's direction.

William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, waxed enthusiastic concerning Miss Gish.

"I have been considering every available star in motion pictures and narrowed the selection down to only three," he said, "and Miss Gish is the first one of the trio with whom I opened negotiations. I believe that her wistfulness, her unique and inherent dramatic ability, places her in a class entirely alone. Exhibitors and the public may expect that we will be exceedingly cautious in picking the vehicles in which Miss Gish is to appear, having in mind the necessity of dramatic productions that will permit the public to have the full benefit of her talents.

"This announcement is merely the first of several that we hope to make within a very short time and each of them will be in line with our announced policy of bigger and better productions and a larger output. We expect to have two producing units in the East and two in the West, and whether Miss Gish will start her first picture in New York or Los Angeles depends upon the story in which she is to appear."

Lillian Gish
Just signed by the Frohman Amusement Corporation as a star in her own right.

Von Stroheim Back in Universal City

Erich von Stroheim, Universal director, has returned to Universal City after a month passed in New York supervising the final editing of his latest screen production, "The Devil's Pass Key." Immediately upon arriving at the coast he began work upon a new picture, the third under his contract with Universal.

Although he has not made public the details of the projected picture, it is known that it will be laid in Europe just as "The Devil's Pass Key" and his first picture, "Blind Husbands." Von Stroheim says he intends to confine himself to European atmospheric stories, because of his intimate acquaintance with European life and customs.

Pathe Receives Congratulatory Letters on Its Features, Serials and Comedies

THE surest evidence of the continued increase in the quality of Pathe's product is contained in the volume of praise-bearing letters which daily reach the home office. This favorable exhibitor comment is general with the entire Pathe output, including serials, comedies, the Pathe News and features which Pathe is now distributing.

As an example of the type of comment being submitted on its attractions, Pathe offers the following letter from K. Moreland, general manager of the Moreland Circuit in Nebraska and Iowa, regarding "Other Men's Shoes," Edgar Lewis' first big production for Pathe release:

"I want to call your attention to one of the very best feature films it has ever been my pleasure to see, much less show. This picture is 'Other Men's Shoes.' It will be shown in all our houses again, and I want to tell you now that this will be the only picture we ever thought worthy of a repeat showing."

Pays Tribute to "Haunted Spooks."

The success of Harold Lloyd's two-reel comedies in the larger cities has been the criterion for their reception in the smaller communities, Pathe asserts. To bear out this contention, the following letter from A. C. King, of the Empress Theatre, Zumbrota, Minn., is cited:

"'Haunted Spooks,' which I showed Saturday and Sunday, is the best comedy I have played, and it brought in more money than anything I have given on Saturday and Sunday, with one exception. That was a $150 special. I raised my prices and I believe I had more satisfied patrons than ever before."

Reverting to serials, William F. Kuschke, manager of the Royal, in Caddo, Okla., asserts he questioned the drawing ability of Jack Dempsey in "Daredevil Jack." But he finally booked the serial, with the following result:

"I wish unsolicited to express my appreciation of your wonderful serial, 'Daredevil Jack.' I suppose I was a bit skeptical when booking this owing to adverse newspaper criticisms, but the opening episode proved I was wrong. I broke all attendance records."

The Pathe News comes in regularly for its share of exhibitor apreciation.

The "Bringing Up Father" series of comedies, which International releases through Pathe are enjoying unusual popularity. So successful are the results attained with the comedies by Harry Goldberg, manager of the Sun Theatre, Omaha, that he dispatched the following wire to director of exchanges, Elmer R. Pearson:

"First 'Bringing Up Father' just finished a week's run at our Sun Theatre to a very satisfactory business. 'Bringing Up Father' cartoons very popular in this locality and Johnny Ray makes an ideal Jiggs. Our audiences immensely pleased."

Ora Carew Has Good Part in New Eugene O'Brien Vehicle

THE cast of Eugene O'Brien's latest Selznick picture, "The Figurehead," includes the name of Ora Carew, who plays an important role in the production. Miss Carew also appeared prominently in "Blind Youth," a National Picture Theatres production released in March.

While known as a screen player who has appeared in many successes, Miss Carew began her stage career in vaudeville. Later she played in dramatic stock companies, but scored her notable successes playing soubrette roles at the famous Gaiety Theatre in San Francisco, prior to joining the ranks of screen players.

Other prominent members of the cast include Anna Q. Nilsson, who plays the leading feminine role in support of Mr. O'Brien; Edwin Stevens, Joseph Girard, Frances Parks and Kate Price.

"The Figurehead" is from the pen of John Lynch, Selznick scenario editor, who has many screen plays to his credit. R. Cecil Smith adapted the story for the screen. Robert Ellis directed.

Kraus Heads Boston Branch

Al Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has appointed H. I. Kraus as manager of the branch office in Boston. Mr. Kraus already has begun his new duties.

Before going to Boston Mr. Kraus was sales manager in the Famous Players-Lasky office in Detroit, and previous to that was a salesman in the Denver exchange.

If Baseball Is Entitled to Free Space In Newspapers Why Aren't the Movies?

Where Attendances at Ball Games Total 100,000 Daily Picture Theatres Attract 1,737,000 Faithful Fans

By HUNT STROMBERG
Director Publicity and Advertising Thomas H. Ince Studios

WHEN the New York headquarters of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers recently compiled figures definitely proving that the combined patronage in 15,000 theatres devoted exclusively to cinema presentation reached the amazing 5,000,000 mark, a minority of doubting editors sat up and took notice. When the A. M. P. A. further proved, following extensive study and research, that the percentage weight leaned on the feminine side of the scale—again proving that the tremendous purchasing power of the fairer of the species is solidly behind the silent drama—another very small minority of skeptical editors, in turning the pages of their daily and Sunday editions and noting the amount of "free space" accorded sports in general and baseball in particular, sat up erect and began to think!

Result:

Granting that baseball, the major American sport, and the chief competitor of the movies, so far as recreational "publicity" is concerned, is altogether deserving of the tremendous volume of complimentary newspaper space accorded it, the progressive, alert editors of the country are awakening to the full realization that in the systematic and generous presentation of motion picture news, features and pictorials, there lies the foundation for reader-prestige and circulation-stimulation that has "five million and then some" active supporters as the "reason why!"

Attendance Compared.

The publicity and exploitation department of the Thomas H. Ince Studios recently concluded a sweeping search for actual facts and figures to determine and make public the comparative daily patronage of baseball and motion pictures. Through the earnest co-operation of scores of sporting editors, men prominent in sporting circles and officials of the major league ball clubs, it was found that the average daily attendance of baseball games in the major cities hit close to the 100,000 mark.

The average daily motion picture attendance in the same major league cities, according to authentic figures of executives of exhibitors' leagues, is approximately 1,737,000. These figures, which, by the way, give baseball the benefit of every doubt, as sporting and statistical experts will agree, reveal the interesting fact that the daily patronage extended to baseball is but 5 per cent. of the numbers which slip the coins to the picture man's girl in the box office.

Baseball Here Six Months of Year.

It will be noted that the eight major league baseball cities are utilized as a basis for comparison for the very logical reasons that the key cities are representative of the American public's support of sports and motion pictures and, in proportion to population as compared with all other cities, reflect the percentage of actual admissions recorded by baseball and motion picture magnates.

It also is emphasized—and here's another radiant "retainer" for picture men who love an argument—that baseball, like most all branches of the sporting fraternity, occupies the center of the stage for periods only. Excluding the spring training season, special post-season exhibition and benefit games, etc., baseball monopolizes the spotlight for six months of the year. Football comes, sees and conquers for but three months. Boxing has its inning in winter months only, unless some guy like Jack Dempsey decides it's time to dethrone a Jess Willard and pulls a boiling over bowl on a midsummer afternoon down Ohio way.

Screen Is With Us Always.

Tennis, sweet and swift sport that it is, boasts of a longer season than other outdoor pastimes because the tropical states, according to their national advertising, at least, shout the good word that the rackets can swing and the balls can bounce while the other more or less "unfortunate" states must slip and shiver in gobs of gloom—and snow! Even Old Man Golf, the saving grace of hundreds of thousands of men who seek to limber up the muscles and fool the tides of time, must acknowledge its limitations in states other than the tropical ones.

On the other hand, motion pictures hold forth in "rain or shine," as P. T. Barnum would beg to bark. Seasons to the motion picture man are as unknown as the tongue of the Sphinx. All of which is illuminating because it reiterates the pleasant fact that the silver sheet is uppermost in the minds and activities of millions of Americans for no fewer than 365 days of the year.

This article would never have been written were it not for the fact that in my intensive correspondence with managing editors and photoplay editors on representative dailies throughout the country, it is intimated by a very few—ever so few—that motion picture news and features at the best are worthy of a "stick or two," or, in the case of the larger exhibitor-advertisers, "just enough space" to represent the size and cost of the paid agate lineage of "card" insertion.

Even this would be tolerable were it not for the fact that the Thomas H. Ince promotion headquarters subscribe to hundreds of daily and Sunday newspapers and, as good service has it, receives clippings and page layouts from a flock of well-conducted press clipping bureaus. The inclination to compare space accorded sports and motion pictures is irresistible. For instance, we examined a certain respected and widely circulated metropolitan newspaper and found that two entire pages were devoted exclusively to sports, with baseball commandeering fourteen of the sixteen columns. 'Way down at the bottom of column ten were two paid advertisements, one measuring thirty-five agate lines on two and announcing "baseball today," etc.; the other twenty lines on one, calmly and politely informed that the Crescent Boxing Club was staging a whirlwind match between "Left-jab Kelly" and "Kid-the-Kayo."

Turning the pages, we found the "motion picture section" cramped up opposite the well-known and friend-in-need "want-ad section," with six of the eight columns fairly fuming with paid advertisements of seven exhibitors and (this is sad) one column devoted to current and coming cinema attractions, and the other column bearing a glowing account of a runaway couple at the age of seventy-seven!

What We Told the M. E.

The managing editor of one very big metropolitan newspaper rejected a series of articles on Thomas H. Ince's methods of production. He was perturbed that we should even think of offering the series as a news feature, rather than paid advertising matter. Wrote he: "It's great stuff, and we'll be glad to run it top of page, island position, for 40 cents the line!"

Wrote we:

"Why do you consider this feature material as advertising when you devote a page a day and a section on Sunday to illuminous features on the kings of the diamond, et al? Do more people attend baseball than pictures? Are more men, women and children interested in reading about the Tantrums of Ty than about the advice, hints and production information of a recognized leader in filmdom? Do baseball clubs advertise more than motion picture exhibitors? Does baseball add more value to

These Figures Tell the Tale

A RANDOM edition of newspapers selected at random gives the following table, showing the comparative space accorded baseball news and motion picture news in twenty-one metropolitan newspapers. Note the column score of exhibitor advertising. Baseball club advertising is strangely "among the missing":

municipal property value than the picture theatre?"—and some more arguments which, I hasten to add, served to convince this well-meaning, but narrow-visioned, managing editor that intelligently prepared and edited motion picture articles would act and react to the triple advantage of the newspaper, its clientele of readers who have a right to a side menu of news and views that affects their main diversion and "indoor sport," and the studio that engages high-priced writers to conceive and distribute sane news features on personages that greet and delight millions of persons daily through the infinite channels of the screen.

A Commercial Message.

To veteran newspaper and advertising men there is a deeper, more commercial message behind the fact that 5,000,000 persons a day patronize the picture theatre. No one will deny that the masses of persons supporting the movies exercise a stronger, more consistent buying power than the classes which throng the grandstand and the bleachers.

Merchandising notables have proved time and time again that the retail merchants—the bulwark of a newspaper's advertising columns—must look to the family as a whole, and to the women in particular, for their chief revenue. Many big newspapers and magazines adopt and exploit slogans reading: "The Paper That Goes Home!" "The Paper the Family Reads!" and other advertising lines designed to drive home the fact that such and such a paper caters to the high-class circulation which responds quickly to merchant sales announcements.

Most Papers Feature Picture News.

Conceding that all progressive newspapers strive for this "home" and "family" circulation on paid subscription, rather than a cheap "street" distribution, it is quite conclusive that the adequate presentation of picture news and layouts, appealing as it does to all members of the family from little Johnnie clear up to movie-loving great grandmother, serve as a circulation stimulus that cannot be questioned nor underestimated. Many newspapers, in fact, discovering a "sliding" circulation, have installed pictorial supplements and motion picture pages as the safest, surest and quickest way to increase circulation.

Thanks to the experience, broad knowledge of news requirements and modern progressiveness of hundreds of capable managing editors and photoplay critics, the great majority of American newspapers are featuring picture news to the limit of their print-paper facilities. They are adding pep and interest to their feature pages by giving the public what it wants and in the quantities wanted.

Some newspapers and their editors, however, cling to the also time-worn and ancient theory that intimate "close-ups" on anything other than horrible murder, divorce scandals, elopements, society gossip (most of this appealing to only a very few exclusive elites), political eruptions, etc., must be tossed to the waste basket or inserted at "paid rates" despite the fact that 5,000,000 individuals attend the picture theatre each day, and the others, excluding the newborn who haven't as yet peeped into a movie-mad world, sit at home, relax in the street cars or go to bed and—turn to the movie page following a slant at page one and its report on Bryan's familiar hat and the presidential ring!

Equity Takes Hotel Astor Ballroom for Premiere of "For the Soul of Rafael"

AFTER a wait of many months, during which time a score of technical and production experts worked night and day at the Los Angeles plant of the Garson studios, Equity Pictures Corporation announced last week the world premiere of "For the Soul of Rafael" for 3 p. m. Wednesday, May 26, in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor.

Much interest is attached to Marah Ellis Ryan's romance of early California life, for the fact that since its first edition, published by A. C. McClurg & Co. in 1905, more than 2,000,000 copies of Mrs. Ryan's book have been sold, and, according to the estimates of the publishers, there is a copy in every fifth family in the United States.

In its screen form "For the Soul of Rafael," according to critics who witnessed the premiere of the picture at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, at least equals the original story in strength of appeal, intensity of action and thrilling episodes. Harry Garson, president and general director of the Garson studios, planned to make this production as important to the screen industry as the novel was to American literature.

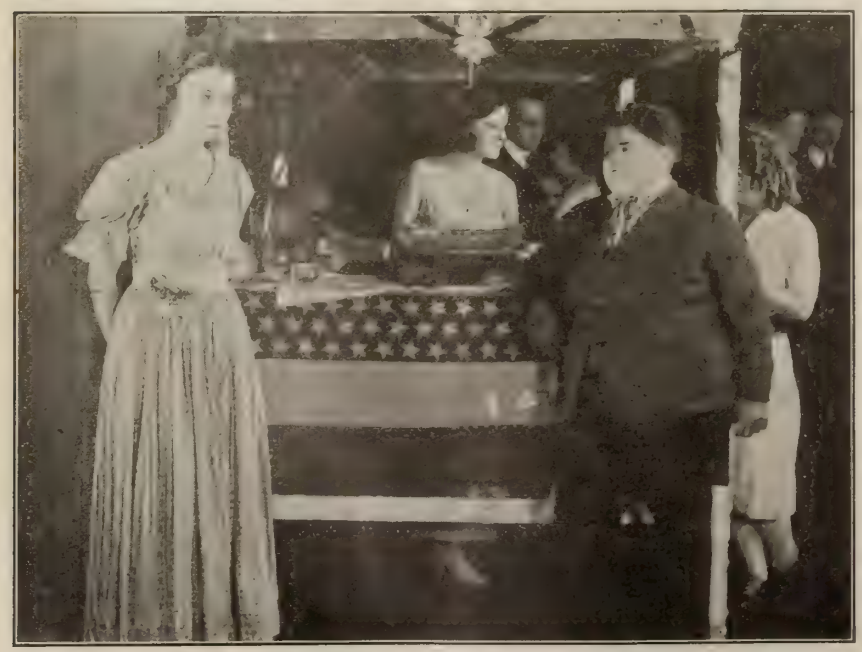
Original Locales Filmed.

Every important mission, from Los Angeles in the south to Mount Shasta in the north, was visited for the purpose of securing apropos locales for the story, and many of the scenes were taken in the exact locations and buildings described in the book. Many natives of the small settlements in which the missions are located have been used, and 200 Indians were secured for roles they portray every day.

"For the Soul of Rafael," in addition to boasting Clara Kimball Young in the important role of Marta Raquel Estavan, announces as members of the supporting cast some of the best known stage and screen players. J. Frank Glendon plays the part of Keith Bryton. The remaining members of the cast are Bertram Grassby, Eugene Besserer, Juan de la Cruz, Ruth King, Helene Sullivan, Paula Merritt, Maude Emery and Edward M. Kimball.

To Be Released About May 30.

The picture will be seen at a prominent Broadway theatre about May 30, when it opens in sixty-three cities for longer runs than is usually accorded a feature. It is now being converted into a grand opera, arrangements having been inaugurated with the first showing of the picture at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles. Madame Frances Alda, the famous grand opera singer, who has been visiting in Los Angeles for several weeks past, witnessed the taking of many scenes of the picture and said it afforded especially good operatic material. Marah Ellis Ryan is writing the libretto.



"Ladies First," Says the Fat Boy to ZaSu Pitts.

A scene from "The Heart of Twenty," which is a Robertson-Cole production. Looks as if he could put several bowls of punch away himself.

De Mille Back in Los Angeles; Starts Cutting Latest Picture

CECIL B. DE MILLE'S return to Los Angeles from New York, following the signing of his latest five-year contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, marked renewed activity on the final work of whipping "Something to Think About" into shape for release.

The latest Cecil B. De Mille special production was completed some weeks ago, but the task of cutting and titling the picture has required weeks of hard work. This work is always done under the personal supervision of Mr. De Mille and his trip East halted this work for the period of his absence.

Jeanie Macpherson, author of the scenario, is responsible for the subtitles which will go into the finished production and she has continued her activities during Mr. De-Mille's absence.

"Something to Think About" is reported to mark a complete departure in theme from its immediate predecessors among Cecil B. De Mille productions. The cast includes a notable group of players headed by Elliott Dexter, who returns to the screen in this picture after an absence of nearly a year; Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts, Monte Blue and Claire McDowell are the other featured members of the cast.

Character Special Is Completed

Ellis A. Wollf, sales manager of Character Pictures Corporation, announces the completion of its special production, "The Isle of Destiny," by Mack Arthur, featuring Paul Gilmore, Hazel Hudson and Frank Williams.

Louise Huff Answers That Important Question, Why Are Southern Girls Flirts?

By EDWARD WEITZEL

THERE is one secret in Louise Huff's life that she finds impossible to keep hidden. So determined is it to betray itself that every time the newest of the Selznick stars opens her mouth to speak the secret pops out. She is a mighty-proud-of-it daughter of Dixieland and her accent has that mellow drawl so pleasant to the ear and so proper, coming from a native of the state of Georgia who was born on the Peachtree street of her home town. I have no definite information concerning this last and most important chronologic detail, but members of the best Georgia families, I am told, always pick out a town that boasts a Peachtree street and see to it that they first open their eyes inside one of the houses on this particular thoroughfare. And Miss Louise Huff is not a person, I feel positive, who would neglect her duty even at such an early moment in her existence.

One of a large and carefully reared family of Huffs, she was taught at a tender age to speak the truth, and continued to speak it, assisted by her charming accent, until the day of her debut as a member of a traveling dramatic company. That day the wisdom of always stating things exactly as they are received a rude shock. Seated at the dinner table in the leading hotel of the small town where they were to open that night and surrounded by members of the company, and the usual choice collection of commercial drummers, the excited and happy little actress took advantage of a lull in the conversation and spake thoughtfully but not wisely, thus:

"I reckon we'll give a right good performance tonight, if we don't forget our lines."

Why the Drummers Laughed.

The roar of laughter from the drummers and the looks of horror on the faces of the other members of the company told Miss Louise Huff that her remark had not been a brilliant success, in spite of its strict adherence to veracity. Even the charm of a simon pure Southern accent did not mitigate the offense, as she learned after a tearful and vigorous exchange of speech between herself and the manager, the owner of the company supplying the vigor and the youngest member of the troupe the tears.

"Don't you know better than to let on to those drummers that we are breaking in the show tonight?" the manager demanded when the commercial gentlemen left the table; "they'll spread the news all over town."

"But I should think that would make folks want to come to the performance. I've read in the papers that opening nights are always crowded in New York," pleaded the culprit.

"In New York—yes! not in a one-night stand! They've been stung too often by poor opening performances. I've a good mind to put you on the first train and send you home."

The angry manager did not carry out his dreadful threat, but it caused Miss Huff to make a vow, then and there, never to speak the truth again. Of course, the only time she kept this vow was when she broke it; but ever since then her particular brand of candor has been tempered with considerable well-chosen caution.

Why Southern Girls Flirt.

My interview with Miss Huff took place at the Selznick studio over in Fort Lee, and as I arrived during the noon hour most of the interview was obtained while the star, publicity dispenser Oliphant and myself sat at lunch in the restaurant connected with the studio. I am sorry to admit that Miss Huff's costume was not what it should have been for so informal an occasion. The girl was there in every sense of the word, but a lunch table is scarcely the time or the place for the elaborate evening gown and resplendent wrap she was wearing, although they were, as one of her beaux from the South might have said, "Mighty becoming!" And, after all, no reasonable interviewer would expect a star to change her frock in the midst of making a scene just because he had dropped in to lunch.

One of the first things I learned was that Miss Louise Huff has a warm place in her heart for all of her Southern beaux, partly because they all know how to make pretty speeches to a woman and have the art of harmless flirtation on the tips of their tongues.

"Do all Southern girls flirt?" I asked.

Miss Huff looked at me in surprise.

A Five O'Clock Te—Picture.
Louise Huff, Selznick star, seen in a home "set."

"Why, yes," she replied; "but we don't mean anything by it; neither do the boys. They say pretty things to us and we encourage the boys to keep on saying them, but it is just a graceful custom that makes it easier for a young fellow to say such things in earnest when the right girl comes along."

"Isn't there something about flirting in your first Selznick picture?"

"Yes. That's why it's called 'The Dangerous Paradise.' I play the part of Ivis Vanastor, a Northern girl who has a Southern girl's love of flirting and who has learned that in society only the married woman have any freedom. She is constantly under the eye of a chaperon and makes up her mind to play the married women's game even if she has to resort to a pretended husband."

Ivis Vanastor's Dangerous Paradise.

"Is there anyone in particular she wants to flirt with?" was my next question.

Again Miss Huff looked at me in surprise—but this time her glance conveyed something more—gentle pity for my callow ignorance.

"Why, certainly!" she exclaimed; "there always is! You see," she went on, "Ivis lives with her aunt who wants to marry her off to some elderly old chap, but the girl is infatuated with a handsome youth who doesn't know his own heart and who refuses to flirt when Ivis manages to find a chance to encourage him."

"That chap must have been born about thirteen miles south of the North Pole," said I.

"He surely wasn't born in Georgia," said Miss Huff. "Ivis," she continued, "is an heiress. On her eighteenth birthday she goes to New York to see her lawyers and learns that her aunt no longer has any power over her. So she hits upon a great scheme. She hires a nice respectable old fellow to pretend to be her husband, and they set up housekeeping in a handsome Newport cottage which is part of her inheritance. When the young chap believes Ivis has married another he suddenly discovers that he is madly in love with her himself."

"This is where the dangerous paradise comes in?"

"Yes."

"How do matters turn out?"

I am quite sure that Miss Huff would have satisfied my curiosity, but Director Earle had a prior engagement with her on the floor above, and the lunch party went upstairs and that elaborate evening gown and resplendent wrap were more stunning than ever under the gleam of the studio lights.

Takes Entire Pathe Product for Latin American Territory

AFTER two months in New York investigating the film market Francisco di Domenico, senior partner of Domenico Hermanos & Cia. of Bogota, Colombia, S. A., has contracted for the Pathe productions for several years to come in the territories of Colombia, Venezuela, Central America, Panama, including the Canal Zone, Jamaica, Guiana, the Lesser Antilles and Hayti. The deal is one of the most important ever negotiated in the South American field and marks the beginning of a great expansion on the part of the South American firm.

Mr. di Domenico said that his organization is already in control of a chain of theatres in Colombia and work would soon be started on several new theatres. The great theatre of the company in Barranquilla has a seating capacity of 6,600 and it is the intention of the owners to increase this capacity to 12,000, making the theatre the largest of its kind in the world.

"The people of South America have the greatest admiration for good films," Mr. di Domenico said. "They are an old and cultured people and are exceedingly particular about their entertainment, but it must be said that American serials have charmed them. The movie is the great popular entertainment today, and it will remain so permanently.

Rogers Joins Press Staff of Ince

Bogard Rogers, widely known as a writer of press copy, has been added to the Thomas H. Ince publicity and advertising headquarters in Culver City. He will contribute special stories for publication in the trade journals and assist in the preparation of the new Ince magazine, "The Silversheet."

Formal Opening of Fox Studio Building May 24 Marked by Impressive Exercises

GALA scenes and impressive ceremonies marked the formal opening on Monday, May 24, of the new William Fox motion picture studio and administration building on West Fifty-fifth street. Men prominent in the official life of two states joined in making the affair one of the most successful of its kind ever undertaken. Among the speakers, in addition to Mr. Fox, were Governor Edward I. Edwards, of New Jersey; Supreme Court Justice Charles L. Guy, and the Rev. Joseph Silverman, of the Temple Eman-u-El on Fifth Avenue. Admission was by card.

Long before the dedicatory exercises started, long lines of invited guests were shown through the big picture producing building. The doors of the new structure were thrown open shortly after 12.30 to those invited.

After visiting the many executive offices on the main floor the guests were directed to the large studio on the top floor, where they were able to get an intimate glimpse of the methods used in making screen productions. Several companies were working.

Many Floral Pieces Received.

To add to the brilliancy of the affair, a full uniformed band played selection on the studio floor, keeping the crowd in good spirits until the opening exercises started. The various executive offices were filled with floral displays—the private offices of William Fox, president; Jack Leo, vice-president, and John C. Eisele, treasurer, each resembling a fine florist's shop.

It was 4.30 before the official opening exercises were begun, following the general inspection of the building. The eastern part of the studio was converted into a hall, with a large platform on which were seated the speakers. Saul S. Rogers, general counsel of Fox Film Corporation, was chairman. He introduced Governor Edwards as the first speaker.

The Governor touched briefly upon the career of Mr. Fox and extended his sincere wishes for continued success and prosperity. He pointed to the motion picture industry as "the big educational feature of the present day," and also to the work done by Mr. Fox during the war "as something worthy of the highest praise."

Justice Charles L. Guy, introduced as an "ardent movie fan," touched upon the rise of the motion picture industry, which he said had come to be an educational institution, the same as the daily newspaper—in fact, a "larger press." "As long as I have been on the Supreme Court bench," he said, "and it's a long time, I have acted on thousands of divorce cases. If the motion picture had attained the popularity and influence in former years that it now possesses, I'm sure that at least fifty per cent. of those divorce proceedings never would have been instituted."

Pays Tribute to Fox.

Rabbi Silverman paid a high tribute to the career of William Fox and dwelt upon the relationship between the church and the theatre. He praised enthusiastically the work done by the motion picture and felicitated Mr. Fox upon his work in helping to place the industry on its present high level, and in developing in so notable a degree the artistic element in screen production.

Mr. Fox, the last speaker of the day, was formally presented with a set of engrossed resolutions of congratulation from his employes. Chairman Rogers made the presentation speech.

In responding, Mr. Fox told of the conditions surrounding the motion picture eighteen years ago, when he first entered the business as a showman. "I seem to be bewildered today," he said. "If anyone had told me eighteen years ago that today a clergyman, a Supreme Court Justice and a Governor of one of the greatest states in the Union would be on the same platform praising the motion picture as it has been praised here, I would surely have thought there was something radically wrong with him."

In closing his remarks Mr. Fox pledged that every picture made in this new building would be clean, educational and able to stand the acid test of the most critical.

Employes Participate in Raising Colors.

At preliminary exercises in the morning a large American flag was unfurled atop the new building, the employes of the various departments of Fox Film Corporation who were in the service during the war taking part. The colors were raised to bugle call sounded by Bugler Billy Allen, of the First New York Field Artillery.

Rear-Admiral J. H. Gleason, in command of the Third Naval District, sent his regrets—he being in Washington for the meeting for the Selection Board. He was represented by his aide, Lieutenant-Commander Elmer de Loss Langworthy. Other officers of the Navy present were Captain O. P. Jackson, Captain P. Symington, Captain Norris, Captain Charles A. Adams, Commander W. S. Anderson, Lieutenant-Commander Van de Leer, Lieutenant Norris, Lieutenant Westod and Lieutenant McClure.

General Robert Lee Bullard, of Governor's Island, commanding the Department of the East, was represented by his chief of staff, Colonel William Weigel. Colonel Bootes and Lieutenant H. W. Miller, of the Marines, also were present. Among the observers and observed was Robert Brower, veteran player and one of the earliest screen artists. He was one of the original Edison Company.

The immense mass of floral offerings was distributed at the close of the day among the various hospitals of the city.

Film Transportation Bill Awaits Wilson's Signature

THE House of Representatives has accepted the Senate's amendments to the bill including lewd and lascivious motion picture films in the list of things which it is unlawful to transport in interstate commerce, and the bill has been sent to the President for his signature.

The bill amends the penal code by including obscene motion picture films among the articles that are not permitted to be transported in interstate commerce, and a penalty of not more than $5,000 fine or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, is provided as punishment for violation of the prohibition.

There was no objection to the measure as passed by the House when it was brought before the Senate committee on the judiciary, but the committee found that some words had inadvertently been omitted from the bill and they were inserted. The only important change was to include a clause prohibiting the exportation of objectionable films, as well as their importation and transmission in interstate commerce.

To Represent Read in the Orient

Robert Raphael, a prominent young Los Angeles business man, has been delegated by J. Parker Read, Jr., producer of the Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth photoplay productions, to handle the organization's publicity in the Orient. Of late the Nipponese have shown a marked tendency toward the movies and the many fan publications that have sprung up in the last year or two rival even our own in comparative circulation.

Mr. Raphael will visit all of the prominent Japanese newspapers, including Monthly Kinema Review, Nippon Hashi, Kinema Record and Hongo. The fan magazines also are to be supplied with a regular news service. He expects to be gone a year.

Universal Names Louis Baum Northwest Division Manager

LOU BAUM, manager of the Universal branch exchange in Cincinnati, has been appointed division manager of Chicago and the entire northwest division for Universal, it is announced by H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges. This is the most important change in the Universal sales force in many months.

His headquarters will be in Chicago.

Promotion Well Deserved.

Mr. Baum's promotion, says Mr. Berman, is a result of his phenomenal management of the Cincinnati exchange during the last eighteen months. In that brief time he built up the exchange from a losing proposition to a highly profitable subsidiary.

Maigne Returns from Coast

Charles Maigne has returned to the East after several months spent in directing pictures for the Famoous Players-Lasky Corporation on the Coast, whither he went upon completion of "The Copperhead." He is awaiting the arrival in two weeks of Thomas Meighan, who is finishing "Conrad in Quest of His Youth" under the direction of William DeMille and who will come East to work under Mr. Maigne's direction in "The Frontier of the Stars," by Albert Payson Terhune.

Was a Very Busy Person.

While on the Coast Mr. Maigne directed two productions, "The Fighting Chance," by Robert W. Chambers, with a special cast, and "A Cumberland Romance," adapted from John Fox, Jr.'s "The Mountain Europa," starring Mary Miles Minter, for which latter production he was loaned to Realart.

Kosmik Films Start Big Undertakings with May Yohe "Hope Diamond" Serial

L. C. WHEELER, who is associated with George Kleine as treasurer of Kosmik Films, Inc., says that the making of "The Hope Diamond Mystery," now in course of production, is only the beginning of extensive and intensive picture operations for the organization. "Kosmik Films was organized for the production of serials and features," says Mr. Wheeler.

"We have made arrangements to build a large studio, the site has already been decided on, and we will enter the picture making field in a big way. We plan to turn out films of the big feature class. Stories are now being arranged for and plans are going forward for an early beginning on the first picture.

George Kleine's Name An Asset.

"George Kleine is too well known to the trade and to the exhibitors to need anything like an extended introduction. Mr. Kleine will bring all of his experience and the resources of his organization into the work, and this should be a guarantee that our operations will be high-class all the way through.

"We are making our bow to the public with 'The Hope Diamond Mystery,' the first serial George Kleine has made since 'Gloria's Romance.' We believe we have a new idea in a serial in 'The Hope Diamond Mystery'; we know we have an unusual story, and we are going to try to set a high standard in transferring it to the screen because we want to put it in the best houses, where a good serial rightfully belongs.

Serial to Be Finished, Then Sold.

"We will not ask the exhibitor to take our word that the serial is going to be superlative in every way, we are going to prove it to him by the simple means of waiting to release it until it is finished. Then we will allow the exhibitor to look the whole fifteen episodes over before we ask him to book it.

"We have arranged a campaign of advertising, publicity and exploitation that can not help but awaken great interest in the minds of the public. The Hearst newspapers will carry a double-page fiction version of the story simultaneously with the release of the film.

"May Yohe, who wrote the story for 'The Hope Diamond Mystery,' has written a novel called "The Story of My Life,' which will be published about the same time the first episodes are shown, and as Miss Yohe has put the story of her life into the film. there will be a direct connection between the book and the serial.

Miss Yohe to Appear in Person.

"May Yohe not only is the author of the serial; she appears in the cast. Arrangements are being made to have her make personal appearances at theatres running the serial.

"The story of the famous Hope diamond is well known. The sinister influence that is supposed to hover over the gem have made it a subject for magazine and newspaper writers for years.

"Countless stories have been written about the Hope diamond and the part it has played in the life of May Yohe, the beautiful actress who came into possession of the stone through her marriage with Lord Francis Hope. The serial will present human document of the most intense kind.

Story Is Known World-Wide.

"We feel that we have a rare find in Miss Yohe. The story of the Hope diamond is good enough for a serial just as it is, but with the story written by the woman who once owned it and wore it, and was a victime to its baleful influence, we know we have something out of the ordinary.

"When Mr. Kleine, who is president of Kosmik Films, Inc., and I decided to make the serial, we talked it over and came to the conclusion that if a serial was made right, we would have to spend money and time and thought on it.

"Many serials start off with a good story, good cast, big sets, and after three or four episodes half the cast is killed off, stock sets are used, and the story is allowed to sag down and only picked up in the final episodes. In 'The Hope Diamond Mystery' the story and everything else is sustained and kept up to the last in the same manner that it starts out.

"If anything, some of the sets in the middle are more lavish than at any other point of the story. The English episodes showing the mansion of Lord Francis Hope and the surroundings of May Yohe when she was a member of the English nobility, carry sets that will compare favorably with any big feature equipment of the present time.

Will Have Unusual Settings.

"To get the East Indian atmosphere we built several very lavish sets. There is a long street with hundreds of natives, a magnificent temple, and a number of East Indian bazaars.

"We are going to give the exhibitor that books the serial a good run for his money. We expect to be finished with the picture in a few weeks.

"The entire foreign rights to the serial will be controlled by Beck, Van Siclen & Company. We have received offers for the English, Indian and French rights to the picture already, but no contracts have been closed as yet, and will not be until all of the fifteen episodes are completed and we can show the world just what we have."

Arthur Leslie at Hopatcong

New York Governor Signs Bill Affecting Deposits

A WIRE has just been received at the offices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York to the effect that Governor Smith has signed the bill which provides that all producing companies exacting deposits or so-called advance payments from exhibitors, must hereafter segregate deposit moneys and keep them in separate accounts, bearing interest, and all interest accruing thereon must be paid to the exhibitor.

The bill establishes a new departure in the business legislation of the state. The act takes effect immediately. The bill, which had been introduced by Senator Cotillo, was accompanied by a measure declaring any waiver of its provisions null and void. This last bill also passed both houses of the legislature and has now received the signature of the governor. There had been most active and determined opposition to this legislation from the time it was proposed in the legislature.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

WE have been gladdened by a number of arrivals this week; saddened by one or two departures and the announcement of several more; enlivened by the details of the annual bathing suit parade at Venice, and bored by a reformer crying from the hilltops in a loud voice, "Tut, tut on such doings!"

Of course, the movies won the honors in the bathing suit parade. Helen Darling of Christie's carried away the first prize. I would like to describe the prize-winning outfit of the parade at length, but it is difficult to write a piece about a one-piece bathing suit, there is so little length to it. It starts so quick and ends so soon, one really gets finished before one fairly gets started. It was blue, however, and of silk—armless, limbless, backless—but Helen wore a beautiful and costly ermine cloak with it. It was some "tout ensemble."

Many Greet Petrova.

Olga Petrova is in our fair city, singing "Pretty Polly" and "There, Little Girl, Don't Cry" at the Orpheum Theatre, just like she used to before she started acting in Metro movies, and getting away with it with the same eclat and sang froid, than for which no other player is more justly famous.

Many people of the colony are going down to the theatre and listening to Olga warble, and many are going around back stage and saying "Hello" to her, and flappers are standing in the lobby and apostrophising her portraits with "Why, oh, why did she ever quit the pictures?"

Epidemic of Wanderlust.

It seems as though every one has got the itch of foreign travel in their heels. Bill Duncan is getting ready to go to South America to make a serial written by Captain Smith and Cleveland Moffat. Bill will beat it along about July 1. Bill Russell is going to Calgary, Canada, to make a mounted police story. Winifred Westover has started for Stockholm, where she will transfer Ibsen plays and large chunks of Swedish atmosphere to the screen. (Note. I have refrained from the "Doll's House, Bring the Kiddies" gag," although this would be a good place to pull it. At times I regret that I am not a press agent.)

Ethel Clayton Off for Europe.

Ethel Clayton is also packing steamer trunks. Ethel will step around over the map of Europe, do a little Baedeker-ing and a little Cook-ing, before she settles down to making films in the new Famous Players-Lasky studio in London. I wish Ethel would go around and call on Mr. and Mrs. Dave Morrissey. I'll bet Dave and the Missus would just love to see somebody from Filmland. Dave is publicity director for William Fox Films in London. Madlaine Traverse is going to New York and from there step over to Paris.

Harry Rapf and the Selznick players are getting ready to go back to New York. King Vidor and Bill Parker have already gone. Gloria Swanson was to go, but something happened to postpone the trip, and she will console herself with a couple of weeks at Coronado.

Sol Lesser is back from Chicago, where he went for the convention and took in New York as a side trip. Dave Bershon, First National exchange manager, who went with Sol, returned with him, likewise Ham Beall.

Helen Was Such a Darling in Her Bathing Suit That She Copped First Prize

By GIEBLER

Watched Her Double Work.

The people of England talk like the people of Boston. The Australian intonation, judging from a sample of Miss Bremer's syllables, is more fullflavored than the English article. I don't mean that there is anything of Bow Bells in it, but it is softer, somehow, and more intriguing—just as port wine is more full flavored, yet sweeter, and carries a bigger kick than vin rouge, blanche, ordinaire, dago red, or any of the other ordinary vins.

I saw Miss Breamer at the Mayflower studios at Brunton, where she is taking the leading part in the screen adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' novel, "Athalie." Sidney Franklin, who is directing "Athalie," was working on a scene surrounded on three sides by a rain storm with thunder and lightning effects.

Franklin Insists on Realism.

Miss Breamer was off to one side talking to Chet Franklin, Sid's brother, who was visiting at the studio, and watching her double work in the scene. To keep people from saying "Purty soft for them movie queens," it should be explained that the scene was one where Miss Bremer simply had to have a double. The other player was impersonating her when she was only three weeks old.

Miss Breamer said they had a terrible time finding that baby. Sid Franklin, who is a stickler for realism, ordered the property man to get a child that looked like Miss Breamer, and insisted that it have brown hair. Hair of any kind or color is scarce among infants of that age. "And babies with wigs do look so peculiar, don't you know."

He Got the Baby—a Boy.

The property man ran himself ragged, but he brought in a baby.

"It's not exactly the kind you want," he said, "but it's the best I could find. Take it or leave it."

They looked the baby over; it resembled Miss Breamer, it had beautiful brown hair—it even cried with an Australian accent.

"It's perfect," everybody told the property man. "What do you mean, not the kind of baby we want?"

"Why, the durn thing's a boy," he said.

"Athalie" is going to be in the "classy stuff" catalogue of films, and it is almost finished, in fact it will be in the cutting room by the time this is in print.

Athalie Shown at Three Ages.

Conrad Nagle plays the leading part opposite Miss Breamer, and Rosemary Theby, Edward Martindale, Sam De Grasse and a lot more are in the cast.

The film follows the story by Chambers very closely. The scene that Sid Franklin was making when I was at the studio shows the death of Athalie's mother, who died sh rtly after the child was born, and while a storm was raging.

Athalie is shown at three periods of her life in the play, first as a baby, then at ten—this impersonation is taken by May Ginnachi—and later when she has grown up when Sylvia assumes the part and works out the strange and dramatic story of her life.

Sylvia Breamer Shown Directing Her Director.

Sid Franklin is the dethroned individual, directing for Mayflower. They are just taking a rest between scenes during the filming of "Athalie." Sylvia's saying: "Scene 49 calls for you to flop over that 1,500-foot cliff. Now make it realistic and be sure and land on the bale of hay so as not to be injured."

Realart's New Star Is Bebe Daniels, Now Named "The Good Little Bad Girl"

ORRIS KOHN announces another well-known leading woman for a tardom under the Realart banner. ne it is Bebe Daniels, who has at- nuch favorable comment lately in les for Cecil B. DeMille produc- with Wallace Reid in several of ecent pictures. Miss Daniels is pe of Castilian beauty. She has "The Good Little Bad Girl," to succinctly as possible, the new t line of productions she is to r the screen as a Realartist.

ew star is the fifth in the Realart The announcement that she has signed comes within a few months of deal by which Wanda Hawley was ued to the Realart list and just as the company's sale force had concluded a noteworthy and successful campaign in behalf of Miss Hawley's first picture.

Descendant of Spanish Royalty.

Bebe Daniels was born in Dallas, Tex., nineteen years ago. She is a descendant of relatives of the Spanish Empress Josephine, and this royal blood flows in the veins of the young actress who has achieved stardom as the result of her talent, beauty and close application to her work.

Miss Daniel's grandmother came from Castile, the ancient and historic city of Spain, and it is from this line that she inherited her beautiful alabaster skin and hair of ebony hue. Miss Daniels' mother is pure Spanish also, but came from South America, while her father was Scotch. Her maternal great grandfather was governor of Columbia and her grandfather was the American consul at Buenos Aires for a number of years.

At the age of four years she was doing one-night stands with a repertoire company playing Shakespearean dramas. She played with the Belasco Stock Company in San Francisco at an early age, appearing in child roles, and was starred in "The Prince Chap." Her screen career began at the age of eight years in child parts for Selig. Later she played with Nymph, Vitagraph and Rolin-Pathe.

Made Hit Under DeMille.

Cecil B. DeMille saw her in comedy roles and selected her immediately for leading parts in his special productions. Miss Daniels played the part of a court favorite in his feature "Male and Female," based on Sir James M. Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton," and also had the part of "Vice" in the Paramount production "Everywoman."

She has a featured role in Cecil B. DeMille's picture, "Why Change Your Wife?" which is at present scoring a success throughout the country. Almost simultaneously she is appearing as Wallace Reid's leading woman in "The Dancin' Fool." These two important roles, combined with her other recent work, have served to attract popular attention and approval.

Gr. Buys from First National "Gamest Girl," His Newest Feature

D. W. GRIFFITH has purchased from First National his production of "The Gamest Girl," scheduled to have been the third Griffith-First National release, and formerly called "Black Beach." The price involved is reported to be $400,000.

Under the contract by which Mr. Griffith was to make three productions for First National, "The Gamest Girl," as well as the two preceding pictures, "The Greatest Question" and "The Idol Dancer," were bought from the producer before any of the pictures had been started. Griffith took his players to the Bahama Islands for the filming of the last two stories.

The plot developed with such strength and individuality that it soon became apparent to Mr. Griffith that it was beyond the measure of an average program film—in reality a feature production of large proportions. Several tests were made in public, showing under the title "Black Beach," and these further convinced the producer of the picture's merit.

Williams Commends Enterprise.

When overtures were made to purchase the film First National rejected all offers. Then Mr. Griffith told of his plans to take more scenes and enlarge the film to a super-feature, an elaboration that will require several months.

In accepting, finally, the offer, J. D. Williams, manager of First National, said: "We do this for several reasons: Because you have offered us a fair profit; because 'The Idol Dancer' has been a success and extremely profitable; because we admire your independent stand in the industry and wish to help you in every way we can; because of our personal friendship and our admiration for what you are doing and our interest in having you make this production as perfect as possible, even though we be denied the privilege of releasing it."

New York Showing in September.

According to announcement from the Griffith offices, "The Gamest Girl" will be shown at a New York theatre in September, and will be presented with the usual Griffith care and atmospheric surroundings, with special music and other features. The Griffith production of "Way Down East" also will be presented about the same time, and there is talk of another Griffith repertory season in New York, with surprises in store.

Bert Lytell, June Mathis, Lois Zellner Arrive in New York from California

WITH the arrival of Bert Lytell, star, and June Mathis and Lois Zellner, scenario writers, at Metro's New York studios from Hollywood, the last of the principals in Metro's Western migration of two years ago are back to work at the old stand.

"It's like being home again," June Mathis cried, as she burst into the studios, and the Metro forces, from the doorboy to Maxwell Karger, director general, seemed to think so, too. Everybody dropped work to give the trio a welcome.

Mr. Lytell, who has just completed his work before the camera in "The Price of Redemption," adapted by Miss Mathis from I. A. R. Wylie's novel "The Temple of Dawn," which was done in California under the direction of Dallas M. Fitzgerald, is to take a short rest before going to work on the first of a series of four pictures which will be made at the New York studios. His brother, Wilfred Lytell, who is playing the leading role in Metro's production of Cecil Raleigh's Drury Lane melodrama, "The Marriages of Mayfair," adapted by Julia Burnham, came in from Stamford, Conn., where the company is on location, to meet him.

Miss Mathis got to work an hour after her arrival. Miss Mathis heads the scenario department. She has just completed the scenario of "Hearts Are Trumps," the latest of the Drury Lane melodramas.

Lois Zellner was met at the station by her husband, Arthur.

Mrs. Zellner's last picture was "A Misfit Wife," an adaptation of Julie Herne's drama. Mrs. Zellner expects the first picture she will scenarioize here will be "Polly With a Past," the George Middleton-Guy Bolton drama.

New England Film Men Hold Their Second Annual Gambol

THE Jesters, of Boston, held their second court Friday, May 14. More than six hundred film men, with their families, attended. Big Jeff Whalen, "The Blimp," was master of ceremonies, also "chief justice," with associates Harry Asher, district manager for Famous Players-Lasky of New England; Art Hollah, New England manager for Pathe; Harry Campbell, Fox New England manager; Joe Doyle, manager of Codman Square Theatre, Boston, and C. L. Vanney, of Pathe, to whom all questions were referred and who imposed on members fines for bad behavior, said fines to be collected for the benefit of the Jesters' treasury. Needless to say, very few behaved themselves, in the judgment of the court.

Immediately after the court the gambol started, in which all the prominent talent of the Jesters and professional talent appearing at local theatres participated. Among those who contributed their services were William Courtney and members of the "Listen Lester" company. Following the performance the usual cabaret and banquet was held, until the voice of the milkman brought the festivities to a close and a realization it was payday.

Speeding East on Train, Del Ruth Turns Drawing Rooms Into Emergency Workshop

HAVING just finished the production of what is heralded as being among the greatest spectacle-farces in the history of motion pictures, Hampton Del Ruth, supervisor of all the Fox Sunshine Comedies, reached New York from Los Angeles in time for the Fox convention. The feature was shown to Fox managers and executives on Thursday night at a special performance in the Academy of Music.

Mr. Del Ruth arranged for two drawing rooms on the train, fully equipping them with rewinding and splicing machines to enable him, with his assistants and cutters, to put the finishing touches on the big special so that it could be shown in completed form.

Mr. Del Ruth has been six months in the making of this comedy and seven directors have worked on it under his supervision. The Fox Sunshine Widows, the famous Singer Midgets, with countless trained animals and some twenty comedians, appear in the feature, which has yet to receive a name. A contest was carried on among exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada and a title will be chosen from among those submitted. The Del Ruth production will be released in the early fall as a special attraction and a unique campaign has been arranged to usher it into prominence.

Mr. Del Ruth is making his headquarters at the Hotel Astor and will remain in New York exactly six days, after which he will hurry back to California to get out a number of two-reel comedy subjects, the shipment of which has been deferred until after his return.

Schoenberg Heads Goldwyn's Foreign Publicity Section

IN view of the fact that the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has within the past year out-distanced all previous sales records in its foreign sales department, under Arthur Ziehm, it has been found expedient of late to make additional appropriations for the purpose of maintaining past efficiency in handling the exploitation and publicity matter for its customers throughout the world.

Accordingly, a foreign publicity department has been added. Edgar M. Schoenberg has been appointed manager of the new department.

Miss Curtis incorporated her picture enterprise a year ago, backed by Wall Street men as an experiment, $150,000 being the original capitalization. Charles Alden Seltzer Sees Picturization of His Novel

CHARLES ALDEN SELTZER, author of many western stories which have been used in motion pictures, was a visitor to the Fox studio in New York a few days ago and for the first time saw one of his stories on the screen.

Accompanied by Mrs. Seltzer, he came to New York on a business trip, and having sold several of his most popular stories to Fox Film Corporation, he expressed a desire to see one of them in picturized form. Fortunately a new print of "Forbidden Trails," which was written by Mr. Seltzer under the title of "The Ranchman," was in one of the Fox projection rooms.

After witnessing the picture, in which Buck Jones is starred, Mr. Seltzer asserted that "nothing more could be desired" and that Buck Jones was the character he had in mind when he was writing the story.

CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

JAMES S. McQUADE

Proposed Ordinance Amended by Censorship Body so as to Govern Posters and Banners

A PROPOSAL to make critics as well as censors of the new Chicago Motion Picture Department was made Friday, May 21, at a meeting of the Chicago Censorship Commission by the Rev. W. S. Fleming, but this suggestion met with general disfavor. Mr. Fleming's proposal directly followed a move made by Mrs. Irvin McDowell to the effect that the Motion Picture Department should be empowered to classify each film exhibited in Chicago under the head of geographical, historical, educational, scenic, classical, propagandic or melodramatic. Her motion was carried.

"Why not authorize the department to criticize each picture and stamp it as good, bad, indifferent, etc?" Mr. Fleming asked.

Mrs. Hannah Solomon objected, at once, saying: "It would be a very serious, consequential matter to assume this office of labeling films in this way. That is for the newspapers and not for us to do."

"Our intention is to be of assistance to the exhibitor as well as to be solicitious for the welfare of the public," Chairman Hurley reminded them. "By classifying films as geographical, etc., we can be of real help."

Showmen to Fight Bill.

The especial purpose of this meeting was to discuss Section 4 of the ordinance which Mr. Hurley had drawn up and which pertains to the establishment of the Motion Picture Department referred to above. Mr. Hurley was asked why he fixed the salary of the three members of the new department at $6,000 a year.

"I wanted to make it $10,000 at first," he answered. "But I thought it would stand more of a chance of passing the City Council if it were fixed at a lower figure. All of these members must be highly qualified. They must be capable of commanding the proposed salary. One of them, according to the ordinance, must have had experience as an educator, which would probably mean that he or she had held the position of principal in one of the public schools, a position which brings a salary of $3,500. What does that amount to to-day?"

The Rev. James B. Haslam, who had consulted with some of the Chicago exhibitors about the proposed ordinance, then said: "They are all going to fight this to a finish. Some of them are willing to admit the necessity of a certain degree of censorship, but——"

"I've never found any who would admit that," interrupted Chairman Hurley. "They all pronounce censorship to be un-American."

"Not all of them," the Rev. Mr. Haslam insisted, "I found that a number of them are as much opposed to exhibiting objectionable pictures as we are."

Amend Ordinance to Include Posters.

The question of censoring advertising posters was then taken up. Chairman Hurley expressed some doubt as to the advisability of allowing the department to pass on posters, which are displayed in windows and on buildings, other than the theatre in which the advertised feature is being exhibited.

Here the Rev. Frederick Siedenburg asserted that an objectionable poster is the same, whether it is on a theatre front or somewhere on Lake Shore Drive. It should be prohibited anywhere. His opinion won out. The ordinance now reads so as to govern posters and banners wherever displayed.

Out of the eighteen members comprising the commission, only eight were present at this meeting. It was then adjourned with a motion to appoint a sub-committee of five, to meet Monday, May 24, for the purpose of revising the report which Mr. Hurley had compiled during his twenty months' investigation, and which he intends to have published for nationwide circulation. This report is comprised of sixty-eight pages.

Griffith Would Cull Stars from University of Chicago

FURTHER indication that David Wark Griffith is endeavoring to bring to the screen not only talent and charm but a finer degree of culture and intellectual prestige is the fact that he is now looking to the universities and colleges for young talent. In a recent letter addresses to the Daily Maroon, the official publication of the University of Chicago, which is said to be a copy of a form-letter sent to many colleges throughout the country, he solicits the attention of interested young men students and states his requirements.

Two important excerpts from this Griffith letter are: "As the newest of the great industries in the broad field of art, motion pictures need the most alert and trained and available; for pictures are the greatest power in the world, for entertainment and propaganda.

"To young men, the motion picture industry offers the utmost rewards for their services, but in direct proportion to their services. By what they give they will receive. Many young men, after a few months' training, receive higher salaries than important executives in other business, where training is required."

Applicants are requested to write to J. Lloyd, Griffith studios, Mamaroneck, N. Y., and to enclose photographs.

Business Booming in Iowa; "Pollyanna" Scores Heavily

FRED R. MARTIN, assistant sales manager of United Artists in the Chicago office, returned last week from an extensive trip through Iowa, where he found conditions very good and business better than it has been for years. "Iowa exhibitors are now booking superproductions for longer runs and charging higher admission prices," said Mr. Martin. He found that with the present high standard of productions they have no trouble in getting higher prices.

Quite a number of new theatres are now being built, among them being a large modern house in Waterloo that will seat 1,500 persons. This theatre is being erected by A. J. Diebolt, of Cedar Rapids, in which city he owns the Strand and the Palace, the Strand being one of the finest theatres in the state.

The Garden Theatre in Waterloo, which seats 500 persons and which had the reputation of being a "lemon" until J. L. Adams, of the Adams Theatres Company, of Des Moines, took possession, is now turning patrons away. The house was only recently added to the chain of nineteen theatres operated by the organization mentioned and its success has been remarkable. "This is due," Mr. Martin state, "to the advanced methods of exploitation and presentation employed in the management of all the houses on the Adams circuit."

Mr. Adams booked "Pollyanna" for a solid week at the Garden, notwithstanding its small capacity as compared with several competing houses in Waterloo. He spent $500 in exploitation alone and succeeded in centering general attraction on the theatre and its big attraction. Mr. Adams fixed his top price at 40 cents, with 20 cents for children.

Tom Brown, owner of the Strand, Iowa City, booked "Pollyanna" for five days, the longest run ever given a picture in that beautiful university city. Mr. Brown will charge 15 cents and 35 cents admission. The Strand seats between 600 and 700 persons.

Harper Now Being Rebuilt.

Max Goldberg, owner of the Harper Theatre Building, corner Fifty-third street and Harper avenue, has purchased the adjoining sixty feet north of the Harper Theatre site and plans are already under way for rebuilding and enlarging that house. When completed the Harper will seat 4,000 persons, Mr. Goldberg states.

Jack Gardner to Appear in Twelve Western Pictures

RICHARDS & FLYNN, owners of the First National, have just signed a contract with Jack Gardner to produce twelve five-reel western pictures. These pictures are to be made in Los Angeles, and work will begin some time after August 16, at the termination of Mr. Gardner's present vaudeville contract.

The pictures are to be made from twelve well known western stories. It has not been decided as yet how they will be distributed, whether through a national exchange or by state rights.

N. J. Flynn, of Richards & Flynn, is leaving for California in the near future to arrange for studios and other matters. Mr. Gardner made five five-reel pictures for Essanay about two years ago, which proved very successful.

Mrs. Drew Seized by Appendicitis.

A sudden attack of appendicitis May 13 prevented Mrs. Sidney Drew from completing her series of five Pathe comedies at the Essanay studios here. Mrs. Drew left for New York Friday, May 14, to receive the care of her family physician at her home.

Mrs. Drew's condition is not serious.

Educational's Short Subject Exchanges Will Begin Operating Week of June 20

E. W. HAMMONS, vice-president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation, announces that release through Educational's own exclusive short subject exchanges will start with the week of June 20. By that time it is expected that all of the branch offices will be in new quarters and able to supply exhibitors.

Associated with Educational in these exchanges and participating in the ownership of the individual territorial offices are some of the most important exhibitor interests. Even greater stress is placed by Educational on the fact that since these men, representing leading theatres, will be vitally concerned, the exchanges in which they are interested handle the best product, and also that their association represents a careful study of the product to be offered and the soundness of Educational's plans.

A roster of the interests affiliated with Educational in its various exchanges supplies a list of theatres that is hard to equal. For instance, Robert Leiber, chief owner of the Circle Theatre, is interested in the Indianapolis exchange. In Detroit, J. H. Kunsky, owner of one of the finest theatre systems in the country, is the partner of Educational in the Michigan exchange. Finkelstein & Ruben, who control the theatre situation in the Twin Cities, are concerned in the Minneapolis office.

Pittsburgh's leading theatres are represented by Rowland & Clark. In Chicago, Balaban & Katz, who have in the past few years built probably the finest group of motion picture theatres in the world, are participants in the exchange ownership, and a great share of the releases will be seen in the Riviera, Central Park and their other fine houses. In Des Moines and Omaha, A. H. Blank will be interested. In Louisville, Col. Levy is part owner of the exchange, while in Washington and Philadelphia, Harry O. Schwalbe is devoting a considerable portion of his time toward Educational's short reel system.

On the West Coast Sol Lesser will share the exchange supplying Southern California and Arizona. Mr. Lesser now conducts the Kinema and Los Angeles theatres and will direct the new $3,000,000 theatre to be erected there. In San Francisco, Turner & Dahnken shares in the ownership. The northwest territory will have the participation of Jensen & Von Herberg. As a matter of fact, recital of the names of those having interest in the various exchanges continues to list leading names in each territory.

While all of the signed contracts have not yet reached the New York office, the whole exchange system has been completed. Negotiations are now in progress for Canada, and these will be closed within a short time. In England, Educational is associated owner of Ideal Film Renting Company, Ltd., which has exchanges all through the British Isles, while other companies which Educational dominates assures its distribution through the rest of the world.

Hammons Sails for England in Interest of Educational

E. W. HAMMONS, vice-president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation, sailed on Saturday, May 22, for England, where he will spend a month arranging some plans which promise to accelerate the already rapid growth of the company. Mr. Hammons will confer with officials of the Hudson's Bay Company, which is financially associated with Educational, and inspect the offices of the Ideal Film Renting Company, Ltd., in which Educational is interested.

During the past few weeks Mr. Hammons has closed contracts here for film product that involve a big sum and has completed the exchange system which will distribute these pictures. Plans of the company for the immediate future are said to involve still furthur progress, and these announcements are likely to follow Mr. Hammons' return, early in July.

Since becoming interested in Ideal, Educational has a perfect distribution system in the British Isles. The former company operates twelve fully equipped exchanges in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

The American Society of Cinematographers has entered into a national campaign of education to prove to theatre owners that the name of the cameraman is valuable to the screen.

Philip Rosen, president of the society, is communicating with theatre owners of the country and advancing the argument that the name of the cinematographer on the screen puts him under the obligation to do good work. The American Society of Cinematographers is regarded as one of the most exclusive organizations in the country and is composed of sixty-one ace cameramen who were invited to membership following several pictures of unusual photographic merit. Rosen, who is now a director at Universal, was for many years a cameraman and has been largely responsible for the privilege accorded producers of using the crest of the society upon films photographed by a member.

T. Kimwood Motion Picture Expedition Well Equipped to Bring Back Results

AT the head of one of the most completely equipped photographic exploring parties that has ever taken the field, T. Kimwood Peters left New York early this month and will proceed via the Hawaiian Islands to Japan. It is the purpose of the party, which is known as the Peters' Photographic Expedition, to penetrate every possible locality where few, if any, photographers have ever been before, and to record in motion and still photography every unusual scene and phase of life to be found in these remote spots.

Thus far no complete picturization has been secured in our Pacific Island territory, and beside the scenic beauties that abound there, the intricate conglomeration of life and customs of native, half-breed and Asiatic peoples in Hawaii, wil be completely recorded by this expedition.

Juichi Kanaya, a noted Japanese guide, will direct the explorations of the Peters' Photographic Expedition in the Land of the Rising Sun, and Nipponese officialdom has assured him of the fullest co-operation. Korea and China will also be visited.

The party will go from China to Malaysia and the Phillipines; thence to the dangerous islands of Papua and New Guinea, the Solomons and the New Hebrides. Siam, Java, Sarawak, the Celebes Islands, New Zealand and Australia and India, by way of Burmah, Arabia, Egypt, the Near East and Europe will be covered before the expedition returns to New York, four years hence.

Many new and special devices will be among the equipment, including a camera, self operating and controlled from a distance, thus rendering the photography of dangerous and shy, wild animals easy and safe. A special telephoto apparatus, allowa magnification of as much as 400 times, is a part of the equipment, as well as a gyroscopic hand camera, which obviates the use of a tripod in making motion pictures.

Many side trips will be made by the party, such as that to the famous ruins of Amber. The scenic beauties of Norway will also be photographed. Commercial, industrial, economic and social conditions will be taken into account by the Peters camera.

Pictograph Shows the Flexner Method of Studying Bacteria

THE Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph for release the third week in May contains two unusually interesting subjects. One of these shows the methods used by Dr. Simon Flexner, head of the Rockefeller Institute, in studying disease germs. The treatment given the subject is brief, but elucidative. It shows how the diseased tissue is placed in melted paraffin, which is afterward cooled in ice water. It is then cut in very thin slices and dipped in dye, a process which causes the tissue to be revealed in color against the almost transparent paraffin. In this way the progress of the disease can be followed intelligently. Close-ups of Dr. Flexner and his staff are also shown.

"An Enchanted Garden" is a beautiful setting to a poem, in which the dogwood, the poppy, the hyacinth, narcissus, and other varieties of flowers give active evidences of life. This is tinted, and is a beautiful botanical study, treating the subject in a general rather than an analytical way. In the picture the buds are seen bursting into bloom An Out-of-the-Inkwell cartoon, one of the funniest yet, in which the clown sees a spook and exhibits genuine fear, closes the reel.

Seminole Indians Are Pictured in Ford Educational Weekly

THE conventional idea of Indians in war paint and feathers and wearing brightly-colored blankets is contradicted by pictures of the Seminole Indians given in the Ford Educational Weekly, No. 202, distributed by Goldwyn.

This film shows a civilized tribe of Indians, with the squaws operating hand-power sewing machines and making gowns of modern design. The popular song, "Everybody Works But Father," is well illustrated in the life of this tribe, for it is the squaw who does all the work while the big chief lies around and smokes and eats and never bothers about the problems of earning a livelihood.

At the close of the reel there are some beautiful scenes of the Everglades of Florida, where the camps of the Seminoles are located.

"Musko and Musume of Nippon" Shows Life of Japanese Child

MUSKO AND MUSUME OF NIPPON," the title of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture for May 23, may sound complicated, but it has a very human theme and refers to the boys and girls of Japan. In his latest tour the noted traveler, author and lecturer takes his audience into the every day life of Japanese children. The drills of the boys are featured by a "Field Day," in which they excel at military maneuvres, "goosestep" in approved Prussian stle and bind up supposed wounds in approved Red Cross fashion. Their open air camps are superbly located in the wonder islands of Matoushina, where aenemic and frail boys and girls are put through daily physical exercises on the beach to restore them to full blooded health and strength. Life in these summer camps, Burton Holmes shows, is not only curious and cute, but extremely amusing to American boys and girls, who have different ideas as to what constitutes outdoor sport.

E. Alexander Powell Busy With Camera in Borneo and Far East

A LETTER has just been received from E. Alexander Powell, the famous traveler and war correspondent and the author of a number of important books, who started last January on an extended tour of the Far East to secure pictures for the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph,. Mr. Powell's itinerary calls for visits in India, China, Japan and Borneo.

The traveler's letter is dated March 9, aboard the coast guard cutter, "Negros." For those who use their imaginations and read between the crisp, epigrammatic lines, it conjures up a world of color and romance and danger, all of which Mr. Powell may be expected to bring before the eyes of thousands of motion picture audiences when his film is released.

Goldwyn-Bary to Have Finley Wild Bird and Animal Films

A RECENT visit to New York by William L. Finley, nationally known as a naturalist, has resulted in the Goldwyn-Bray organization acquiring 16,000 feet of Mr. Finley's motion pictures of wild bird and animal life. The pictures represent the work of Mr. Finley and his wife for the past three years. It is their custom to take to the field every summer with a motion picture camera and about 20,000 feet of film negative to photograph wild birds and animals in their native environment. The average result of a summer's work is about 5,000 feet of good film. On their trips, Mr. and Mrs. Finley live in a tent and are accompanied by their two young sons.

The work of Mr. Finley is unique, as few lovers of wild life hunt with the camera. Through his painstaking work, a careful record has been compiled on the motion picture screen of the actual conditions under which wild birds and animals live. The difficulty in obtaining these pictures is due to the fact that the subjects are always shy, not only of man but of the camera. In order to get close enough to the birds and animals to photograph them, Mr. Finley has often had to plant his camera the night before and wait for the birds or animals to come to their feeding or drinking place at daybreak.

This reel shows the boys and girls of Japan in every-day life. Included in the picture are field days and also the camps where the children help to build up their health.

Norma Talmadge Reissue in Demand, Says Brandt

Joe Brandt, director general of National Film Corporation, re-issuing the Norma Talmadge picture, "Captivating Mary Carstairs," states that the re-publication of this production is meeting with favor everywhere. "'Captivating Mary Carstairs' was adapted from the novel of the same name by Henry Sydnor Harrison. The picture has an exceptionally interesting plot. Norma Talmadge as the star is a big box-office money-maker. If the costumes in a re-issue are not out of date (and those in this Talmadge re-issue are modern) then there is no reason why the picture should not prove a big success," says Joe Brandt.

"The people who saw a picture a few years ago are a small fraction of the people who will see the re-issue. The re-issue is new to ninety-nine per cent. of the movie fans. That is why a good re-issue is bound to be successful, and is the reason why 'Captivating Mary Carstairs" is being booked readily."

Tower Feature "A Trip to Mars" Capitalizes Widespread Interest in Neighboring Planet

APROPOS of the present discussion of the possibility of signaling the planet Mars, which is occupying much space in papers and magazines, Tower Film Corporation is releasing an unusually timely production, entitled "A Trip to Mars."

It is announced that this is an intensely human drama and that it was produced under the guidance of a group of prominent scientists. The story deals with a daring group which make the trip in a specially constructed airship and who meet with many thrilling adventures.

There is also a dramatic love story running through the picture, together with many unusual scenes depicting life on Mars. This is a distinct novelty and Tower officials believe it will be a big success for exhibitors and buyers and will provide unique entertainment for picture theatregoers.

As evidence of the widespread interest in this subject Tower points to the speculation caused by the receipt of signals by the Marconi wireless in London, emanating from an unknown source, which some ascribed to Mars, to the fact that a prominent radio engineer believes it would be possible to build a signal station gigantic enough to establish communication, and to the fact that a captain in the army volunteered to be shot to the planet in a huge projectile.

Reelcraft Producing a Series of Two-Reel Boyhood Stories with Matty Roubert as Star

FOR the seventh addition to Reelcraft Pictures Corporation's rapidly growing program of short subjects R. C. Cropper, president of the company, announces a series of two-reelers, with twelve-year-old Matty Roubert in the star role, and states this will be the biggest series of its kind ever attempted in the independent field.

"These will be feature productions in every sense of the word," says Mr. Cropper, "from the preparation of the story right on through cast, production and all, including the advertising accessories. I wish to dispel the idea that these will be 'kid' pictures. The stories will concern adventures of boys and girls—in other words, the days of youth—but they will appeal to audiences of all ages.

In backing up its statement that pictures of this kind have a universal appeal, Reelcraft points to the success of such productions as "Little Women," "Tom Sawyer," "Huckleberry Finn," "Treasure Island" and Booth Tarkington's "Edgar Stories."

Matty Roubert is said to be well fitted for the leading role. He began his picture career at the age of three with Vitagraph in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Later he appeared in twenty single-reel boy pictures for Universal, and has acted boy roles for Edison, Vitagraph, Pathe and Famous Players. He had the principal role in Hobart Henley's "Parentage," and is also featured in the Pathe production "Driftwood," which was written for him by Willard Mack.

William L. Roubert, Matty's father, will direct the series, which will be produced in Fort Lee, N. J. They will be released at the rate of one a month, and Reelcraft announces there will be a complete line of advertising matter, accessories, photos, etc., together with a trade paper advertising campaign on each release, just as is given to longer productions.

The first will be released in the autumn.

Pioneer Announces Four Feature Films for Release During the Summer Months

Pioneer announced that during the summer months there will be no cutting either in its number of releases or in the quality of the productions to be offered to the exhibitor.

June will see Louise Huff in "What Women Want" put out under the Pioneer banner while July, August and September will be the release months of Jose Collins in "Nobody's Child," Grace Davison in the "Hidden Code" and Emily Stevens and Montague Love in the "Place of Honeymoons."

Pioneer believes that it owes a certain duty to the exhibitors to give them as good if not better pictures during the slow months as it does during the winter season.

Among Busy Film Exchangemen

Getting a Line on Manager of Standard Exchange in Detroit

ONE of the rare instances of permanency of connection in the film world is Jesse C. Fishman, Detroit manager for Standard Film Service Company. That's one reason why it is a pleasure to tell about this executive. For, in the cases of most men in the film business, when you start to mention their affiliations one must list at least one different concern per year.

But not with Jesse Fishman. A Toledo boy who was graduated from the University of Michigan in the class of 1912, Fishman joined a book concern in Cleveland as sales manager. While in this business he became acquainted with Harry Charnas, active then in the film world. This acquaintance blossomed into the organization of Standard Film Service Company in 1915, Fishman joining the Charnas organization as manager of the exchange opened in Cleveland.

His ability as an executive speedily made itself manifest and when it was decided to extend the activities of Standard Film to Cincinnati, Fishman went to that city to open Standard's exchange. After a time as manager in Cincinnati, where he put the exchange on a paying basis, the Standard executives decided to invade Michigan and, of course, it was Fishman who was sent to Detroit in the latter part of 1916 to open the exchange over which he has presided since.

Fishman a "Family Man."

That Standard Film judged well is attested by the success of the exchange no less than by the permanence of Fishman's connection—a permanence, by the way, which reflects the whole atmosphere of Standard Film Service Company as compared with the many independent exchanges which have come and gone in the years since Standard first opened its doors.

Fishman's permanence is made the more prominent by another fact in striking contest to the usual film man's situation—Fishman owns a handsome home in Detroit, presided over by the sister of Standard's chief, Mrs. Fishman having been Jean Charnas before she married Mr. Fishman in Findlay, Ohio, in 1917. And—more important than all film—there are two teeth showing between the parted lips of Gertrude Chirley Fishman, born last October.

JEROME SAFRON has been appointed manager of the New York Robertson-Cole exchange, succeeding Felix Goldfarb, who will act as special representative for the New York territory. The announcement is made by A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the distributing corporation.

Mr. Safron comes to New York from the Detroit branch of Robertson-Cole, where he was in full charge for the past five months. The rapid growth of the Detroit exchange proved his worth and when a change was determined upon in the home office territory Mr. Kirkpatrick turned to the man who had already made good.

Mr. Safron assumed his new duties last week. "Jerry," as his host of friends call him, is a New Yorker, and says he is glad to be back at "the old stand." He was transferred from the Philadelphia office to Albany some time ago and was appointed manager. After working wonders at the Albany exchange he was sent to Detroit.

Sidney Lust Is Fire Hero.

Sidney B. Lust, head of Super Films Attractions, Inc., jumped into the hero class last week when he put on a fireman's helmet, grabbed a couple-a-fire extinguishers and put out a perfectly good blaze in the elevator shaft of the Mather (Film) Building.

While dictating letters in his office on the ninth floor of the building he noticed the presence of smoke and found that a janitor who had been cleaning the mechanism of one of the elevators had dropped a bucket of gasoline (31c. a gallon) and it had ignited when it hit a live wire. The blaze was assuming unpleasant proportions when Sid arrived on the job, assisted by brother Ben, and before an alarm of fire was turned in, he whistled "all out."
